CAREFUL production and excellent acting by the young star, Lewis Sargent, of ‘Huckleberry Finn’ fame, and his support, and the introduction of several scenes in which Judge Ben Lindsey appears in person, will secure ‘THE SOUL OF YOUTH’ a welcome.” (From MOVING PICTURE WORLD, August 28th)

LET ME congratulate you on your delightful picture, ‘THE SOUL OF YOUTH,’ which has charmed my audiences at the RIVOLI THEATRE. At the same time it may interest you to know that the box-office receipts have been steadily growing from day to day. Yours very sincerely.

HUGO RIESENFELD.

THIS IS an unusual picture of its type, in that, although pointing a significant moral, sermonizing is entirely eliminated. The feature is replete with clean, sincere sentiment and affords delightful entertainment.” (From EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, August 28th)

THIS IS a photoplay that will travel a mighty distance and leave behind in its trail a story so exquisitely and simply told that it needs must teach a lesson. It is emotionally stirring, intense in the interest, and close and vividly true to life. It is a big picture in every sense.” (From PICTURES PRESS, August 28th)

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Romance of a boarding house girl and a boarding house boy

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 4,900 feet

"39 East" was a tremendously successful play due to its delightful comedy, its genuine humorous characters and the wholesome sentiment with which the lighter elements were mixed. And by the same token "39 East" will be a successful picture—very likely a very big success. Certainly it is by far the most enjoyable picture in which Constance Binney has appeared and it is also one of the best pictures produced by Realart.

Those who had charge of picturizing the play, Kathryn Stuart who wrote the scenario and John Robertson who directed, have preserved the original scheme, episodes and even details that made for the popular success of Rachel Crothers' play. It is to be happily noted that they have not sought to try to improve a work already proven.

Thus due to the intelligence of Miss Stuart and Mr. Robertson one sees the same distinctive comedy bits that made the play sparkle. The twin sisters of the Victorian age with their inevitable duets on the piano, the prim old maid from Boston with her pills and her gossip, the exceedingly authoritative boarding house keeper, the swift-tongued Irishman and all the rest are preserved intact on the celluloid. Their comedy is rich and distinctive. It offsets the romance of the principals delightfully.

This romance between Penelope Penn, the minister's daughter who is forced to join the chorus to make a living and Napoleon Gibs, from the south, both inmates of a New York boarding house, is itself fraught with many episodes of delightful humor such as the dance in Central Park, their initial meeting and the sequence in which Napoleon starts in dancing in the middle of the night to attract the boarders to his room instead of Penelope's.

The plot is exceedingly simple but the byplay and the detail make it ever interesting. It is a pleasure to note, however, that the theatrical manager indicated as the probable villain by incident surrounding his introduction, instead of locking the door and attacking Penelope according to type, proves the ultimate means of the young people's happiness.

Constance Binney is thoroughly at home in the role of Penelope as well she might be, having played it so many times on the stage. Her work is a delight. Reginald Denny reveals some capable acting as Napoleon, registering all his points effectively.

Should Score as Big a Success as the Play

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"39 East" ought to prove a big attraction. It is still a pleasant memory with those who saw it as a stage play and the publicity it received in this form last season is new enough to have served as an advance campaign for the coming of the picture.

In advertising be sure to bring out the fact that Constance Binney is seen in her original role of the stage play. You can also safely say that it is the best picture she has appeared in.

Mention also the name of the author. Her plays are exceedingly popular with the American public at large. It was the out-of-towners that flocked to see the play when it was in New York, for it contained the elements that appeal to folks from all sections.

The title is a good one to use in a teaser campaign while you can create further interest in the showing, providing you are in a city where the streets are numbered east and west, by pledging free admission to all those living at "39 East———." This stunt was successfully worked with the play.

Universal has another very human picture in "Pink Tights." Coming so soon after "In Folly's Trail" it would seem that the company is making a sincere effort to blaze a way for a new type of story in pictures. And the producers deserve all the credit in the world for their effort. It is pictures such as these two that touch the vital spot in the spectator.

Reeves Eason, director, has done uncommonly good work in the production of "Pink Tights." He has surrounded the story with a realistic atmosphere which is striking. He has brought out a rare note of comedy in the actions of his little son, Reeves Eason, Jr., who appears as the child of one of the townsfolk. This Junior is remarkably natural and he accomplishes such typically boyish expressions and tricks that he wins instant favor. Again in the serio-comic play between the circus girl and the minister the director has succeeded in sounding a distinctively human note.

The story concerns the coming to a New England town of one-ring circus of which Mazie, the little girl who ascends in the balloon in pink tights, is the star member. There is a high wind on the day of the ascent and Mazie's parachute lands her on the roof of the house occupied by the Reverend Jonathan Meek. He rescues her and then urges her to stay until dark inasmuch as he is afraid of his reputation if she is seen going from his house.

Meek's flock calls in a body as a surprise that afternoon and the minister trembles at the thought of the girl being discovered there. Eventually she is, but due to her quick wit they are led to believe that Meek was unaware of her presence. But the straight-laced of the town and its gossips are incensed over Mazie and her pink tights and prepare for action against her. This is prevented by a fire in the church. As the building is consumed by the flames it is discovered that a little boy is aloft in the belfry and Mazie rescues him and is seriously hurt herself.

She recovers in the minister's home and wins the hearts of all the townsfolk. And then the circus owner comes back for her and promises her a real home. The minister watches the pair in silence, for Mazie had won his heart.

Gladys Walton is a delight to behold in the principal role. She is pretty and has an exceedingly attractive personality. Jack Perrin is too stilted as the minister.

No Limit to the Appeal of This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Pink Tights" is a picture that deserves the attention of all exhibitors. It has a fine little story, a young star who is certainly a comer, a delightful production, and winds up with a combination physical and heart thrill that puts it over in wonderful style.

No exhibitor will be able to dig up a spectator that won't warm to the actions of the little boy and the very pretty scenes between the minister and the girl from a world entirely foreign to his. The conclusion of the romance also carries a surprise.

In advertising this stress its human quality for this is its strong element. You might also find some way of introducing Glad Walton, a new star, to your pubic. She shows such promise that Universal will certainly continue featuring her. Any novel way of presenting her to your public will help future pictures to come as well as this.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........... 5,349 feet

In the selection of “Honest Hutch,” known in its original form as “Old Hutch Lives Up To It,” the Goldwyn company secured one of the finest stories, in points of originality, unique quality, characterization and wholesome moral effect, that could have been obtained for Will Rogers. The story is by all odds the most interesting in which he has appeared because of these very qualities.

“Honest Hutch” is not as free with respect to comedy as have been previous pictures in which Rogers has appeared. And there are moments here and there in the picture when it appears that matters could have been condensed to a shorter run of footage. Simplicity is another point regarding the story and five reels was just a bit too long for it.

On the other hand the elements referred to above together with the distinctive characterization rendered by the star and the underlying moral of the whole make for a thoroughly enjoyable picture. Rogers' characterization is rich in color, realistic to the extreme and sparkles every now and then with the comedy that is so much a part of the star's personality and so remotely removed from that of any other comedian.

The story relates of the manner in which Hutch, the laziest man in a lazy little southern town, stumbles upon fifty thousand dollars buried by the bank of the river in a strong box. His joy at finding it is short lived inasmuch as he realizes that the moment he flashes such an amount of money all suspicious eyes will be cast in his direction.

Nothing remains, therefore, but for him to go to work and attempt to attach a reputation for wealth and thrift. At the end of a certain period he finds himself successful in his effort. He is a prosperous farmer. He has relieved his wife of her arduous duties over the wash tub previously forced upon her by his idleness. His children are clothed and his oldest daughter is happy in a romance that might have turned out tragically had not Hutch made a man of himself.

And then he goes to dig up the fifty thousand and finds it gone!

Rogers is well supported by Mary Alden as the wife, Priscilla Bonner as his daughter, Tully Marshall as the town skinflint, Nick Coagley as the town banker and three youngsters.

The photography, lightings and locations serve to create a splendid atmosphere for the story.

Will Please; Story Offers Good Advertising Possibilities

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The big following which Will Rogers has acquired due to his recent fine comedies is pretty sure to appreciate the qualities of “Honest Hutch.” Its humor is not as boisterous as it has been in some of his previous comedies but the story interest is so good and the star’s characterization so distinctive that there are very few dull moments in the picture.

You can create an interest in the story by using such catch lines as these: “He was known as the laziest man in town and yet when he found fifty thousand dollars buried in the ground he was forced to go to work.” “He had never earned a penny in his life but when he stumbled on a fortune he was forced to turn to and work.” Lines on this order will arouse the interest owing to their peculiarity.

For the rest play up the star, his past performances and the original title of the present story. Clarence Badger’s name should be used too as he has directed all of the recent Rogers successes.

Filled with those alluring elements of fashionable elegance that make all Louise Glauum productions remarkable in their power of appeal to women. It is even greater in its power and lavishness than the spectacularly successful picture, "Sex." This production has been four months in the making and reports of its immensity have caused hundreds of exhibitors visiting Los Angeles to go out to the studios and watch it in the making. CHARACTER OF STORY .... Heroine learns to reason in terms of love instead of money and clothes

"Clothes" as a play was something of a brilliant affair with much satire and sparkling dialogue. Stripped of these investments it becomes a very simple drama, hardly substantial enough to stand the burden of five reels. It has lost more of it's brilliance too in the inappropriate staging it has received with respect to the society scenes. In the first place the settings aren't realistic—there seems to be a tawdreness about them and a lack of refinement or "class." And the society folk aren't convincing at all, either in manners or attire.

Something seems to be wrong, as well, in either the lighting or the makeup of the players in the closeups. Bad lines are revealed, the light isn't soft. This has been noted in several of this company's pictures recently.

The story takes up the case of Olivia Sherwood who lives for finery alone. Believing her father has left her quite an estate she rolls up all sorts of bills until finally her guardian, West, warns her to stop. The real fact is that Olivia's father didn't leave her any money at all and that West has been supplying her with funds hoping some day to win her for himself.

Olivia realizes she must have a wealthy husband and so makes a strong play for Richard Burbank, a western millionaire, who believes her the personification of all virtue. When he tells her this she has a revulsion of feeling and refuses his proposal of marriage. At a reception, West half intoxicated, insults her by telling her that she has lived on his bounty. He tries to attack her but misses his footing and falls down stairs, killing himself. Later Olivia comes to a real understanding with Richard and there is a happy ending.

The director hasn't worked up to the scene of West's violent death with much skill. The scene is, perhaps, the dramatic highlight of the production and yet it carries small punch. There is no suspense. And the manner in which Olivia and Richard cover up the tragedy for the time being before a house full of people it quite unconvincing.

Olive Tell is very pretty in the long shots in the role of Olivia, although she is not smooth in registering her emotions. Crawford Kent is good as Richard and Cyril Chadwick does well as West. Others are Frank Currier, Zeffie Tillbury, Rae Allen and Mary Beaton.

This Just About Gets by
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Clothes" will just about get by. It isn't a first class production but doubtless it contains a certain amount of "woman appeal" which will carry it. That the production lacks "class" is its main fault. A story of this kind, above all things, requires a distinctive setting and this has not been provided for "Clothes."

If you want to take a chance with this play up the title in a big way with reference to the fact that the picture is an adaptation of the successful play of several years ago by Channing Pollock and Avery Hopwood, and then develop the "clothes" angle in your catch lines and readers, bringing out the fact that the heroine here places the importance of finery above all else.

This is the biggest advertising angle and a very good one. It could be carried further in a lobby display or fashion-shop tie-up.

The star is worthy of good position on the billing inasmuch as she is quite popular on the stage and has also appeared in several recent pictures.

DETAIL ................................. None

CHARACTER OF STORY.......After betraying

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.........4,989 feet

"Guilty of Love" is made up of such old elements and lacks so in story interest and direction that it develops into a very tedious picture. Its one possibly big scene where Thelma forces her betrayer to marry her, is lessened in effect even as are the majority of attempted dramatic moments throughout the picture by a seeming lack of directorial skill. Director Knosel doesn't seem to have done much of anything here except shoot long shots of the Florida landscape in the early reels. Dorothy Dalton's performance suffers from the same lack—direction.

In the beginning the long shots of pretty southern scenes are so frequent that they take on the aspect of a scenic. Almost every bit between the principals is preceded by a glimpse of them half hidden away in a hundred yards of semi-tropical foliage.

The director has planted his relation between hero and heroine by means of the long-suffering fairy tale which heroine tells to two children. There is the fairy prince and the fairy queen and all that. This type of stuff has to be treated with skill to avoid a commonplace atmosphere and it hasn't been so treated here.

Thelma, the heroine, a governess, is betrayed by Norris Townsend, son of her employer. The first suggestion of Norris' villainous act is conveyed in a subtitle in which he answers his father's question as to why Thelma was so anxious to have him return from Europe. Says he: "because—she—she—" and the father understands the entire situation. Thelma then forces Norris to marry her and subsequently leaves him to go west.

Five years later she has become a school teacher.
Her little son is the apple of her eye. Norris searches for and at last finds her and takes her home, where she lives as a stranger. It is only when Norris signifies his unselfishness by suggesting that he go away that Thelma confesses her reawakened love for him.

In the latter part children take the place of the Florida scenery as padding. There are shots of school children and children on a party and various close-ups of them, all of which add to the tedium.

Edward Langford appears opposite the star, while others are Charles Lane, Augusta Anderson, Alice Cooper-Cliffe, Douglas Redmond and some more children.

The Star Has a Following But it Isn't Built on this Type of Picture

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Dorothy Dalton has been absent from the screen for some time, that is her last picture was released some time ago. She has a good following doubtless waiting upon the announcement of her next appearance, and it is too bad this has to be made in a picture so interior as "Guilty of Love." Probably her name and the display of this title will attract good audiences, but certainly the contents of the picture will disappoint.

While the material in this is very old, they had a chance to make it into a worth while picture. The situation referred to in which Thelma forces Norris to marry her is something out of the ordinary and could have been made very forceful if treated in the right way. And the role of Thelma contains the popular elements of appeal.

However, they missed out on most everything here and the exhibitor who cashes in on Miss Dalton's popularity better go slow on booking this despite the fact that it is her first picture in quite a while.
Plain Words

The Attorney-General, the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission are among the important Government agencies that never sleep—they are always on the job.

It is through these agencies of the American Government that free people are permitted and guaranteed to live in a free country, to conduct their business in a free and independent manner, and never to live in fear of tyrannical domination and oppression under the heel of unscrupulous would-be monopolists.

William Fox.

"July 23, 1920.

"National Association of the Motion Picture Industry,

"Attention Chairman of Distributors' Division,

"1520 Broadway, New York City.

"Gentlemen:

"Hereewith I tender the policy of Fox Film Corporation with reference to group booking with all booking agencies in America, as requested in your letter of July 20th.

"Booking agencies formed and operated for the purpose of making group bookings on behalf of exhibitors are bound in a short time to develop into a monopoly of a most destructive character. Exhibitors are invited into the plan on the pretext of lower rentals and of booking protection for their theatres. But that is only the ingenious, sugar-coated, sweet and innocent invitation to join the booking agency at the beginning.

"Facts and conditions of the past prove that very shortly after the exhibitor places himself and his theatre in the hands of a booking agency he loses control of the management of his house, and by cut-throat, black-jack and monopolistic methods the exhibitor very soon is compelled to give up fifty percent or more of his theatre or be driven out of the motion picture exhibition line.

"Exhibitors will remember in 1908 and succeeding years my tremendous effort and the long, up-hill legal battle against the General Film Company and the Motion Picture Patents Company to keep the business open and free to competition.

"The then growing success and popularity of the motion picture was the result of the splendid competitive opportunities afforded to any person or set of persons in the production of pictures that would entertain and educate. In the regular course of events this condition permitted the exhibitor to make a handsome profit and to build up a substantial business. The exhibitor was his own boss.

"Twelve years ago a combination of men attempted to strangle the industry and to create an all-powerful monopoly." Fortunately for the public and the exhibitor, and I feel free to state largely due to my effort, this attempt resulted in disaster. The group of men who by every means endeavored to take possession of the motion picture industry in every branch, were brought before the United States Courts and their monopoly was ordered dissolved and the screen was free again. Then once more the exhibitor became boss of his theatre.

"Today the exhibitor is confronted with a more daring and dastardly attempt to dominate his business. The formation of booking companies to deal with distributors in group bookings spells the stagnation of the industry should it meet with favor by exhibitors. A group of booking offices in the principal sections of America would soon control the motion picture industry in every branch. The exhibitor would be the biggest loser.

"The American public will not support a monopoly in the art of the motion picture. No longer would the exhibitor be the boss of his theatre. The booking agency trust would boss and command the picture theatres after kicking the exhibitors into business oblivion.

"Every branch of the business lends itself to absolute domination if the nation-wide booking agency trust is an established fact. No longer would progress be the guiding star of the industry. In its place would come greed, the tyrannical domination by a small group of men, and the elimination of the exhibitor of today.

"Fox Film Corporation places itself on record as absolutely opposed to group bookings with all booking agencies. It will deal exclusively with the exhibitor direct.

"No person or persons or company is authorized to use the name of Fox Film Corporation or the undersigned in the promotion of booking agency schemes. It was reported from two sections of the United States that booking agency promoters had promised Fox pictures, which is an indication of the misleading, unauthorized and greedy tactics that are being used.

"The Fox Film Corporation and the undersigned stand on record for free and competitive dealing in the motion picture industry. We are opposed to monopoly in any form.

"We hope the above has made our position clear.

"Very truly yours,

"FOX FILM CORPORATION,

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Man who system-

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 6,541 feet

While the character of "The Master Mind" does not appeal from the same angle and hasn't the sympathetic command of Milt Shanks of "The Copperhead" fame, Lionel Barrymore gives his best efforts to the portrayal of Henry Allen who becomes "The Master Mind" of the underworld for the sole purpose of avenging the death of his younger brother. And it is indeed the performance of the star which is the production's main attraction.

Inasmuch as the story has to do with mental science or telepathy, it might have been well to dwell just a little longer on the actuality of this science. There is just on flash of it or rather one short sequence showing "The Master Mind" forcing a secret from the object of his concentration. There is some especially worthy acting in this bit.

The photography is excellent and deserves mention regarding the manoeuvres of puppet characters performing on a chess board before the star. Also the dissolves are well handled. The direction is splendid throughout and the action moves along smoothly and coherently to the end, with a strong climax proving the strength of the text, "Vengeance is Mine, sayeth the Lord. I will repay thee."

Ralph Kellard is the chief factor responsible for the death of Henry Allen's young brother who dies in the electric chair professing an innocence which is never established. Allen vows to avenge the wrong and becomes "The Chair Mind" of the underworld with the one and only desire—to ruin Kellard, now District Attorney and candidate for Governor.

Allen enters Kellard's home and after discovering a secret shrine containing a girl's photograph, Allen goes through a period of concentration or mental telepathy whereby he secures from Kellard, a thousand miles away, the secret of his life—his love for Maggie Flynn who has saved him when he met with an automobile accident and then disappeared out of his life.

The remainder of the picture deals with Allen's systematic plan of revenge. He locates Maggie in prison and by way of interest in her "case" secures her release and sends her abroad. Upon her return she is introduced to her father, mother and brother, all actors in the play to be staged for Kellard's destruction. How Allen arranges the meeting of Maggie under her new name, Lucien Blount and Kellard and the climax where Kellard is given the choice between resigning his candidacy for Governor or having his wife's past made known and how he finally seeks the uselessness of revenge, is grippingly presented.

Just Announce the Title and Star. That Should Be Sufficient
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In the performance of Mr. Barrymore alone you have a good reason for booking "The Master Mind" which, incidentally, is a very fine exploitation title.
The production generally is very worth while and if you cater to an appreciative audience, folks looking for the unusual in pictures, you will please them by showing this production. From a story standpoint play up the mental telepathy angle and the effects of mental science as practiced by "The Master Mind."

You won't need much more than the name of the star to get them in but if you care to use catchlines you might say: "Is there such a thing as mental tele-apathy? See how 'The Master Mind' sought revenge through the medium of mental science. See Lionel Barrymore's latest production."

A tragedy, the force of which results from a very realistic clash of characters, is the basis and practically the whole of "Midchannel," the latest picture to show Clara Kimball Young as star. In fact, its elements are so realistic and generally so capably handled that the scenes showing Zoe Blundell and her husband, Theo, constantly at variance with one another, create an interest sustained through to the story's tragic ending. The suicide of Zoe brings the picture to its rightful close, the point at which the suspense of the play came to a terrific culmination. In the picture, for the sake of the necessary happy ending, Zoe is shown turning the last pages of a book after the suicide scene and determining to act more sympathetically toward her husband than did the Zoe of the story.

It is well she comes to this conclusion. The greatest weakness of "Midchannel" is the manner in which the character of Zoe Blundell is drawn. Both Miss Young and her director, Harry Garson, neglected to endow Zoe with any really sympathetic side. She is constantly flaring up at her husband, losing her temper at every turn. In fact her temper doesn't even permit her to meet him half way. A trace of softer sentiment in Zoe to offset the scenes of hot temper would have resulted in a much more sympathetic character.

The lives of the Blundells are tossing dangerously in the rough waters midchannel in matrimonial affairs when the story opens. Before long they separate. Each then is forced by circumstance to seek solace and gratification with another. A mutual friend endeavors to effect a reconciliation and while Zoe is more or less willing to overlook her husband's period of faithlessness, he is by no means willing to overlook her's and when, hopefully she tells him the truth, he sneers at her and drives her back to this other man. It is then that Zoe, discovering that this man has become engaged to another woman, a young friend of her own, realizes the tragedy of her life and ends it by leaping from a balcony to the street below.

J. Frank Glendon makes a suitable Theo, while others are E. M. Bimbball, Bertram Grassby, Eileen Robinson, Helen Sullivan, Katherine Griffith and Jack Livingston.

Unusual Possibilities in This
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Due to the realistic clash of characters that this picture deals with and also its fundamental plot elements which involve a certain angle of the double standard, once again, it is very probable that it will get over very nicely in the theaters whose rules permit subjects of this nature.

As a box office attraction it contains unusual possibilities. To the star's popularity there is added the name of a noted British playwright and the reputation of a play in which Ethel Barrymore starred some years ago.

The contents of the story offer many opportunities also. Lines shaped around the double standard idea should draw. Try one on the order of these, for instance: "Circumstances had practically forced both husband and wife to violate the marriage vow. Then, in time, she was ready to forgive but he—" or "The tragedy of a woman who applied the standards of men to her own life and expected the forgiveness she was ready to extend."

Charles Ray creates another of his appealing, awkward country boy characters in "A Village Sleuth" and comes through with those little old tricks that have won him his tremendous popularity. On the other hand the story isn't typical of the homely, human interest class that he usually appeared in. Agnes Christine Johnston's story is a broad comedy, sometimes farcical in nature and never reveals the little human touches that made the work of Julien Josephson so distinctive.

However, the story certainly provides entertainment of a sort. It is full of clever little surprises and the star is given such great room for comedy and business play that the whole picture registers in good fashion.

Ray appears as a farmer's boy, William, whose ambition it is to be a detective. He gets a job as hired man in a sanitarium operated by a young doctor who caters to the vanities of the idle rich. The action takes a farcical mystery turn as William, in attempting to invent a case to which to apply his talents of deduction, is amazed and mystified by the peculiar actions of the doctor, a rich matron, one of the patrons and a chorus girl with whom he is in love.

Matters come to a climax when the matron's husband disappears. William gets the idea that the doctor has murdered him so that he can have the wife. He follows the doctor one day when he steals stealthily away from the sanitarium only to find him going to his home to see his secluded family. The chorus girl is accused of whisking the husband away but at the last minute he reappears, having absented himself at the suggestion of the chorus girl to make his wife stop flirting.

This is all there is to the story. It is enriched time and again, however, by the tricks of the star. These are as distinctive as ever and as sure of registering.

In support appear Winifred Westover, Dick Rush, Donald MacDonald, George Hernandez, Betty Schade and Lew Morrison.

Star's Name and Title Big Assets of This
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Because as regards characterization, "A Village Sleuth" presents a typical Charles Ray picture, it is going to appeal strongly to the majority of fans. Doubtless some few will find the absence of the typical Ray story a lack not to be compensated for by the comedy and surprises of the present plot and probably all audiences will sense the fact that a homely human interest story is missing. But the character is so strong and so well built up by Ray that it is bound to appeal and overshadow all else.

The mere announcement of "Charles Ray in "A Village Sleuth," will serve to attract. The title has been well chosen, for it instantly suggests a picture containing all the typical Rayisms. In fact this one line is the biggest asset you have in advertising the picture to your patrons.

Be sure to use Thomas Ince's name also. This is a guarantee of a certain type of Ray picture that has ever been popular. Jerome Storm is again the director of this so mention him too and give Agnes Johnston, the author, a play. She is fast coming into prominence.

With a completely satisfactory Southern atmosphere given to the adaptation of Opie Read’s well known and widely read “The Kentucky Colonel” together with the name of its featured player, Joseph J. Dowling who gained fame for his role of the patriarch in “The Miracle Man,” the production puts forth its biggest appeal. Joseph Dowling in the title role does good work but the character of the Colonel does not demand the sympathy which the author intended.

The director has not gotten off with a coherent start. The characters, and there are quite a few, are introduced one after another with very little to clearly define their connection with the story. The opposite factions and old Southern feud which form the foundation of the action are not clearly enough explained. However, after considerable business that drags the action badly, they work up to a fairly good climax in which the Colonel’s best friend and husband of the only woman he ever loved, accuses him of being the father of his (the friend’s) child.

Of course misunderstanding and vague possibilities form the basis of the complications that cause all the mix-up and near-tragedy at the end. There are one or two bad bits, one especially which is not explained. The heroine, according to her promise, marries the one who returns from the war, thinking the other dead. They are seen “romancing” in a garden when the “dead” soldier returns and from all appearances he has just wandered off the battlefield. There is no explanation as to where he may have been in the meantime.

Elinor Field is the daughter of General and Mrs. Hineman and Colonel Osbury is the disappointed suitor of Mrs. Hineman’s who has remained a bachelor and devoted friend of both the General and his wife. Phillip, the Colonel’s nephew, is in love with Elinor, but she is engaged to Boyd Savely. Elinor learns of Boyd’s affair with an actress and breaks the engagement subsequently promising to marry Phillip. Savely who in reality was after the Hineman money, robs the General’s bank. Among the loot is a letter which he forging is insinuate that the Colonel and not the General is the father of Elinor, whereupon General Hineman interrupts the ceremony.

The General challenges Colonel Osbury to a duel but each refuses to shoot at the other. Later, the actress double crosses Slavey and exposes his part in the mix-up, whereupon everything is peaceful once more. In the cast are Frederick Vroom, Cora Drew, Lloyd In the cast are Frederick Vroom, Cora Drew, Lloyd Bacon, Jill Woodward, Fred Kohler, Gordon Griffiths, Ed Brady.

Author, Title and Featured Player Best Exploitation Angles

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is just an average attraction with nothing particular to boast about in the way of production or direction. You have, however, the name of Joseph Dowling of “Miracle Man” fame and a well known title and author which are your best advertising bets. Play these up to the limit. The last couple of reels are the best, the climax working up to a fair degree of interest. This may compensate for the draggy earlier reels and serve to send them out in a better humor than you may expect.

Use catchlines along the following: “She said goodbye to two soldiers and promised to marry the one who returned. The one she loved best was believed killed. She married the other but see what happened after the marriage. Opie Read’s ‘Kentucky Colonel’ is playing at the_______ theater.”

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,000 feet

"The Husband Hunter" has its moments of good comedy and its moments of very rough comedy that will hardly appeal to a high class audience. The good comedy is probably retained from F. Scott Fitzgerald's original story, "Myra Meets His Family." The rough stuff is the work of the editor and director. The former stands sponsor for a subtlety..."

"Bring me a piece of toast. I'm a poached egg and want to sit down," and a number of others in the same spirit. The director has lost track of good taste in the scene in which he shows the butler inserting his false teeth and the long stretch of the Shimmy as rendered by the star.

Miss Percy appears as Myra, a husband hunting young lady, who caters to the vanities of Kent Whitney, a rich fellow, and wins him. This early part of the picture is, incidentally, its brightest part. Its comedy registers as something approaching high class.

Kent then decides to introduce Myra to his family. Arrived at his home she discovers a bunch of "nuts" introduced to her as father, mother and friends by Kent. Father is an eccentric and does and says the crudest things. Mother is even more of a nut. After they have thoroughly disgusted Myra (and to a certain extent the spectator), Kent tells her that he has Chinese blood in him. The inclination here is to pooh, pooh. Myra then discovers that the whole thing was a trick to test her love and that father and mother and the rest were merely actors.

She then turns about and pilots Kent through a mock marriage, subsequently leaving him in the lurch on the train for Palm Beach. Having thus given tit for tat, Myra makes up with Kent and their "romance" ends happily.

Miss Percy is good to look at and plays with sincerity a part that needed none. Emory Johnson is good as Kent but he ought to watch his lip makeup. Edward McWade as "father" does some good work. Others are Jane Miller, Harry Dunkinson, Evans Kirk and John Stepling.

Not the Type For a Very High Class Theater
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Eileen Percy in
"THE HUSBAND HUNTER"
Fox

Not by any means a picture for high class houses, there may be some audiences who will enjoy "The Husband Hunter." Rough comedy of this type, rather pointless on the whole, has registered before as everyone knows. Its very lowness and foolishness seem to constitute its merits with many audiences.

However, "The Husband Hunter" might have been much better. It seems as if the producers had taken too many liberties with Fitzgerald's story "Myra Meets His Family" on which the present work is based. Fitzgerald certainly has not signed his name to this type of stuff in print recently and in his original work there was probably a vein of satire which is altogether missing here.

His name will attract the magazine reading public but it is this public which will hardly be pleased with the manner in which the work of the author has been treated.

"THE LAW OF THE YUKON"

Director—Realart

Mayflower—Realart

Director: Charles Miller

Author: Based on Robert W. Service’s poem

Scenario: Not credited

Cameras: A. H. Vallet and Al Leach

As a Whole: Extensive cutting shows here; story is jerky and very confusing especially at finish

Story: Aside from some good comedy bits at start small interest is created

Direction: The cutting has made this angle very indefinite; some individual scenes very badly staged

Photography: Good in spots

Lighting: Generally very poor

Camera Work: Fair

Leading Players: Edward Earle as hero is good but work is lost in shuffle; June Elvidge does an unimportant vamp bit; rest unknown

Exteriors: Some good snow stuff but many scenes don’t match

Interiors: Fair

Detail: Poor

Character of Story: Struggle of hero in the Yukon against tremendous odds

Length of Production: About 5,500 feet

“The Law of the Yukon” is a very ragged production. It represents an effort to produce one of these virile stories of the Yukon, on the type of Robert W. Service’s chant on which it is based, but the effort has resulted in failure.

Chief among the picture’s faults is the matter of cutting. It would appear from the scenes in the picture that many thousands of feet were taken and discarded. Perhaps they formed a better continuity of action than is visible in what remains. Certainly in its present state the production offers a small degree of clear continuity.

While this cutting has practically eliminated the possibility of criticizing Charles Miller’s direction as a whole, his work in individual instances is very poor. The safe-opening scene for instance, is palpably “staged.” Many of the dance hall scenes don’t register with the right swing and tempo. And as regards exteriors there are scenes showing good snow stuff but they don’t match up with one another.

As regards lighting, this important end of production, is sadly missing. The interiors, almost without exception, are miserably lighted.

The casting is none too good. Edward Earle, showing signs of a good performance, is well enough as the hero. Joe Smiley doesn’t suggest a sufficiently virile type for the dance hall proprietor. June Elvidge has a bit as a vamp (her end of the story is completely lost in a snow storm), but she dresses the role as if she were going to the Claridge for tea. The best character of the lot is Barney McCool. The actor playing this role is a fine type and has the advantage of several very humorous lines in the early reels of the picture. These are the brightest spots in the whole production but when Barney goes out of the action the picture suffers.

The main plot concerns the efforts of Morgan Kleath to establish a paper in the Yukon. His enemies who are aware of his past “outside” attempt to distort it before Goldie, the girl he loves and finally force him to remain in a cottage all night with Goldie. They then rob Tim Meadows’ safe and throw the blame on Morgan. He maintains silence not wishing to drag Goldie into a scandal but she ultimately confesses and saves him. His “past” is cleared up and there is a happy ending.

Comedy in the Early Reels Only Redeeming Feature

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There were great possibilities in a picture carrying this title and bearing the name of Robert W. Service, possibilities which many exhibitors were no doubt eager to exploit. But the picture never lives up to expectations. The comedy of McCool is good but praise must stop there.

This comedy registered well at the New York where the picture was recently shown. The various titles put into McCool’s mouth went over big. But after he disappeared from the action there was little of interest to engage the attention and the story got so confusing that there were a number who walked out on the show.

Doubtless the name of the picture together with the added attraction of Robert W. Service’s name will draw many but the exhibitor who has the best interests of his house at heart had best wats his step when considering booking this.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 6,500 feet

"From Now On" is an exceedingly entertaining crook melodrama, the credit for which goes to R. A. Walsh. Walsh always has been a director who does distinctive work. He shows here in the handling of the various episodes of "From Now On" that he knows how to inject suspense, thrill, surprise and realism in a picture. Perhaps the element of surprise is the outstanding one in the present work. Whenever a turn in the action warrants it he is there with a surprise.

His scenes and characters show and do the unexpected.

Besides showing his hand as a crafty master of melodrama in "From New On," Walsh again demonstrates that he alone knows how to get the best work from his brother, George Walsh. The star’s performance here is quite the best he has given since the earlier pictures in which he appeared under his brother’s direction.

Frank L. Packard’s story deals with an orphan who has become the beneficiary of a rich man’s will. Untutored and a bit wild he falls in with race track men who proceed to quickly remove his inheritance—a hundred thousand dollars. They promise it back to him but as time goes on he realizes they have no intention of paying. Then he takes matters into his own hands and steals it, later hiding it safely away. He is arrested and sentenced to five years in prison. Released, he is hounded both by detectives and members of the gambler’s gang who realize that he will make for the money as soon as he believes himself unseen. How he tricks them, eventually finds the hundred thousand and then is led to reform and turn it back to the men from whom he stole it are turns in the story shown to the accompaniment of melodramatic action that is always swift and sustaining.

Director Walsh has employed many chases, in which he uses the quick flash, during the course of the picture. Somehow, due to his treatment, they never become tediously repetitious.

The cast in support of the star does very good work and includes among its principals and supernumeraries a selection of excellent types. Those who appear are Regina Quinn, Mario Majeroni, Paul Everton, J. A. Marcus, Tom Walsh, Robert Byrd and Eddie Kelly.

Big Possibilities in This from All Angles
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

All audiences like a good underworld melodrama and "From Now On" is exceptional in this respect. All exhibitors who are free to book where they choose ought to consider it, for besides offering first rate entertainment its box office value is a thing of no mean importance.

Probably the biggest name connected with it is that of Frank L. Packard, author of a score or more of crook stories including the famous "Miracle Man." He is certainly one of the most popular of present day writers and the use of his name should draw good crowds.

Then too the name of the director is not a strange one to picture audiences. R. A. Walsh has established himself through many picture successes, the majority of which have been on the crook melodrama type. Feature him and dwell on the kind of work for which he is famous.

George Walsh has a following and you can create additional interest in his appearance here by stating that he was directed by his brother, the man who knows how to get the most from him.

"Get Out and Get Under"—Pathé

Harold Lloyd's latest two reelers have been conceived about a flivver and a flyball. Great fun is the order of the day, with a great deal of business. The two characters are completely the creations of Hal Roach, Sr., Lloyd, and the results are the most natural and amusing comedy of the lot. The story, as usual, is well thought out, the action is well taken care of by Lloyd, and the comedy as usual is of the order known to put the audience in the splits.

"The Tailor Shop"—Fox

This picture is a real winner, with the characters of Mutt and Jeff being played by the same actors seen in "Mutt and Jeff". It is a most amusing picture, with the boys being just what they are supposed to be. The action is well handled and the comedy is excellent. The only criticism is that the picture is a bit too long.

"Some Champs"—Hall Room Boy Comedies

After a whirlwind start which gives the impression that this is going to be one of the best releases of the series, the offering lapses into an ordinary and the latter portion is distinctly below the standard of what precedes it. Opening is a scene showing Percy and Ferdie overleeping and the dressing bit, speeded up, is unique. Running to their place of business, the boys are trailed by a vast number of dogs. These ultimately follow them into the store where they tend the ribbon counter and completely upset the place. Ejected forcibly, they realize they are probably the best of their kind on the market at the present time. The scenes which change the colored section at the beginning, the peasant girls in their multi-colored costumes and all else combine in making that portion one that will appeal to the peasant. Delightful are the interesting ape for the animal section and the manner in which it registers various expressions is certain to cause approval. The slow motion part shows a contest with foils and at the conclusion there is one of the Hyn Mayer Capitol "Travelauds."

"Cinders"—Universal

One of the average issues of the series in which Ed "Hoot" Gibson stars is appealing for Universal. In "Cinders" which has some meritorious comedy relief, but lacks a really continuous plot. Dorothy Wood, who is seen as the leading lady, does her work well this time, while Jim Corey as the trap-hold-up man, is acceptable. W. C. Tuttle is responsible for the story, one of the principal links of which is an ambiguous telegraph message. The misunderstanding which results, leads hero Hoot to the robbery scene where he performs a hero's duties. It is really the humor which keeps this going and it must be added that the story deviates somewhat from the usual run of short westerns.

"The Moonshiner"—Realcraft

Although the title would tend to indicate that this is a prohibition film, it is an offering that does not depend upon the eighteenth amendment for its humor. There are several clever tricks included in the production which all get over nicely and which add to the entertainment value of the picture. The fire-water has been poured. Some of the material is rather antiquated, but it is exceedingly difficult to find a picture of this variety which does not posses some old stuff. It is one of the better ones of the series.

"Gratitude"—An Americanization Subject—Pathé

In conjunction with the Americanization campaign, Pathé is issuing a reel of the Independence Day celebration as observed in France out of gratitude to the help given to that land by the United States during the war. There is a visible throughout the offering well known figures, General Pershing, Marshal Joffre and ex-president of France Poincarré as well as other notables. Although it was taken during a continual drizzle, the scenes are nevertheless distinct. Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the Americanization Committee is credited with titling it.

"In Wrong Wright"—Universal

The plot followed in this Hoot Gibson western is similar in nature to those employed in several other releases in which he has been seen. For actual quality it does not rank very high, for the two principal happenings in the production are not very probable. It concerns the star and an outlaw who holds up the stage or any other vehicle or person carrying wealth at a certain point. Gibson happens in while Dorothy Wood, who plays an artiste, is painting a scene of a hold-up. When after frightening away the original model, Hoot agrees to pose, a youth with a camera appears and photgraphs the entire event. It is a very well handled picture and has a lot of interest in it.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Two plumbers, stock swindling scheme through their gullibility

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 4,785 feet

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran were not as successful in their choice of a vehicle for their third feature comedy as they were the first and second times. “Once a Plumber,” handicapped by a slow, uninterestingly convivial and exhaustless, even when it reaches its “meat,” shows the originality of a situation or the spontaneity of action and treatment that were ingredients largely responsible for the success of “Everything But the Truth” and “La La Lucille.”

For the most part the comedy is too foolish to take effect. This is caused by the extreme contrast between the parts played by the stars and those interpreted by the other players. Lyons and Moran burlque their roles till they resemble the old fashioned song and dance team of vaudeville fame—Lyons playing straight and “feeding” Moran, the eccentric character. As all the other parts are played in serious vein the contrast works to no good advantage. This is really a fault of direction, the team should have handled the entire work in a spirit of broad comedy.

The pair appears as William and Joseph, small town plumbers, anxious to lift themselves above their mundane environment. Hoban, rich but of doubtful character, overthrows them talking about their untried abilities while repairing a burst pipe in his mansion.
The federal agents are after Hoban for a big stock swindling game that he has engineered. He sees his opportunity and suggests that William and Joseph become officers of the company.

Flattered, the boys sign the papers necessary to condemn themselves in the eyes of the law. Thereupon they enjoy a few brief hours of affluence, only to be rudely interrupted by the Federal officers. But they manage to fasten the guilt on Hoban and his associates after all. Ready to again take up the plumb-ing business, they are set upon by a crowd of villagers, headed by the fathers of their respective sweethearts, and badly beaten up. When they come to in the hospital the girls are there to offer forgiveness.

The comedy of the boys getting into fine clothes and essaying society manners, constitutes the brightest spot in the picture. But here is a noticeable lack of situations in the story and so the comedians are forced to bear more than they can well carry.

Supporting them appear George B. Williams, Sidney Deane, Jeff Osborne, Lillian Hackett, Edna Mae Wilson, Jane Elliott, Ethel Ritchie, Lew Short, Harry Archer and Doc Bytell.

This Will Draw on Account of Its Predecessors But—

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This one may get by in the smaller houses but in the better class theater its lack of proper treatment will be noted as a considerable error. Of course Lyons and Moran can’t come through with a winner every time. No star or director can. Their first two feature comedies were unusually good and they are establishing a good reputation for themselves on the records these previous releases are still creating.

It remains then for you, who have played the other two, to decide whether you want to take a chance on this one, maybe incidentally jeopardizing the reputation of the comedians as well as your own, or not.
People will stand for a weak one now and then even if others of a series have been top-notchers and on this ground you may be able to get by with “Once a Plumber.”

Its comedy, however, is by no means skillful. Those who will perhaps appreciate it do not make up the high class audiences.

First Suit Filed Against the Donovan's Who Sold Powers Film Products Stock in Rochester
(Special to WID'S DAILY)
Rochester, N. Y.—Suit to recover
$453 from Thomas E. and Richard H.
Donovan, brokers who sold stock of Powers Film Products, Inc., to Rochesterians, has been begun by Chris Christafferson, of Rochester, and the case is expected to come to trial at the term of Supreme Court which will open on Sept. 27th.

In his complaint, Christafferson declares that he bought 25 of the company's stock at $17 a share and 15 shares at $20 a share, on which he paid $453. The plaintiff states that he was approached by R. K. Irwin, an agent of the company, and was told that Powers Film Products, Inc., was a great money-maker, that the stock would go to $40 or $50, that the company already had paid a bono hile dividend of 5 per cent, that it would pay another dividend soon, that big business men of the city had subscribed for thousands of dollars' worth of stock and would gladly take the whole issue if given the opportunity, but that the Powers Film Products, Inc., wanted to give the working man a chance to share in the profits, that it was a dangerous competitor of the Eastman Kodak Co., that the weekly output of film at the plant was 2,000,000, that the demand for Powers Film Products, Inc., was increasing, and that the increased business necessitated additional equipment and building expansion.

After Christafferson had held the stock for a short time, the complaint states he found out that the statements made to him about Powers Film Products, Inc., were not true and notified the Donovans that he wished to cancel his subscription. The Donovan's refused to permit him to do this, he says. James L. Brewer of the stockholder's protective committee appears for Christafferson.

Plan Large Studios

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Midway Park, adjoining Culver City on the west, is to be the location of a new $2,000,000 studio plant. In addition to 80 lots purchased in Midway Park, the site includes 27 acres lying to the north.

This purchase was made by the newly organized California Unit Studios, which plans to begin building at once. There will be 10 unit stages, each 170 feet long by 45 feet wide. Each stage will have a two-story building in connection, containing dressing rooms and other offices on both floors.

The land transaction involves a total consideration of $122,000. It was handled through the H. B. Eshelman Co., selling agents for Midway Park.

It is reported that 38 moving picture companies will arrive in Los Angeles from the East during the present month. Among those returning are the D. W. Griffith company.

The organization of the California Unit Studios is headed by H. B. Eshelman as president; George F. Minus, vice president and general manager; G. T. Englund, treasurer, and F. J. Raven, secretary. Ted Bevis is construction manager.

Bartow, Fla.—Basing a circulation stunt upon the universal interest in other people's marriages, the manager of the Orpheum recently sent out a clever bit of exploitation through the mails, in behalf of "Please Get Married."

There were two different letters: one for posting to women, the other for men. The messages relate in a natural, everyday way of the writer's marriage, mentioning that it was brought about by seeing Viola Dana in "Please Get Married," and adding that the picture was still being shown. They were written in longhand and reproduced by mimeograph.

Minnesota Exhibitor Robbed

Waukesha, Minn.—R. C. Wheeler, owner and manager of the Auditorium, was held up recently at the point of two guns and told to dispose of a cash box which contained $164.17. Wheeler decided that discretion was the better part of valor and obeyed the instructions.

Steel Shortage Causes Delay

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Buffalo—The construction of Shea's Hippodrome is likely to be held up for six months, postponing its completion until early in December, 1921, due to the delay in the shipping of steel. Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Criterion and Hippodrome declared that prices of building materials being at their peak, it is likely that the Shea organization will save about $250,000 by the enforced wait.

Winnipeg, Manitoba.—The building of the Paramount has been delayed by the slow delivery of steel.

Reports of theaters being held up on account of delay in the delivery of steel are quite numerous.

Winnipeg the Center

Canadian Producing Units Will Operate With That City as Headquarters—Shipman Interested

Winnipeg—A number of financial men of this city on Saturday night completed the organization of a million-dollar company to produce in the chief centers of Canada the leading Canadian authors' works. Winnipeg will be the headquarters and subsidiary companies will be formed with the aid of local capital in other cities of Canada. Amalgamation has been approved with the Calgary (Alta.) Producers Co. and work will proceed rapidly from now on. Winnipeg Prod. completed last week the making of 'The Foreigner,' under direction of Henry MacRae, and this will be marketed through First National. Ernest Shipman will be heavily interested in the new million-dollar company formed here. The project is producing the works of the writer of Canada in locations where the author set the story.

Foreign Outlook

Far From Satisfactory According to William Blumenthal

William Blumenthal, brother of Ben Blumenthal of Export and Import and who is interested in films abroad, arrived last week and in a few days will proceed to the coast to oversee several productions being made for his organization. Discussing European conditions, Mr. Blumenthal said that they were far from satisfactory, that English exhibitors were booked up excepting for tremendous pictures for over a year ahead and that it would be exceedingly difficult to break in. "Until the exchange situation reaches a basis upon which we can normally do business, it will be very difficult to do very much for America with any foreign market," he said. "In addition to this it should be remembered that there is practically no business to be done with Russia, none at all with Germany and the great bulk of whatever business is done must be transacted with Spain, France and western Europe.

To Lord Beaverbrook—Many Notables of Industry Attended—Interesting Addresses.

One the eve of his departure for England this morning, Lord Beaverbrook was tendered a luncheon yesterday at the Ritz by Adolph Zukor. The luncheon which was attended by many notables of the industry resulted in several interesting expressions being voiced notably that of Lord Beaverbrook, who said that England had never given full credit to the motion picture industry for the part which it had played in the great war.

Lord Beaverbrook was the last speaker. About 40 years of age, and of a somewhat striking personality, he was quite at ease in making his address. In response to Jesse Lasky, who laughingly said that he did not think any of Zukor's pictures had been made in England, Lord Beaverbrook replied: "We are tottering behind you. We are struggling with all our might," he said. "We are a young industry, and we are simply friendly followers." The industry needs encouragement in England according to Beaverbrook, who said that in some places motion (Continued on Page 4)

Dear Mr. Williams:

Our new Rialto Theatre, in Newark, opened this week with Charles Ray in "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway" as the initial attraction. The house, seating two thousand, has been packed to capacity almost constantly, and the audiences have been most enthusiastic in their evidence of approval, both of the theatre and the picture.

With such an attraction as the opener we have set ourselves the task of maintaining a very high standard, but we feel confident that through the use of First National offerings we shall continue to merit the good will and patronage of the discriminating Newark public. Please send us more Ray pictures when you can.

Thank you for your constant interest in our enterprises.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) MAX SPIEGEL

HERE'S AN ODD LAW SUIT

Marcus Loew's magnificent Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, is suing Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of Ohio, to compel that company to deliver First National Film Service. Without discussing the merits of the theatre's claim—isn't it a splendid testimonial to the value of First National Attractions?

pictures were still regarded as "a sort of compromise of a side show of a circus and two headed cow." Regarding the feeling which he said he had heard existed against American films shown by Britains and vica versa, he emphatically declared that there was more marked feeling between the people in Italy than any man he had ever met. He was followed by Gayer G. Dominick of Dominick and Dominick of Wall St., who declared there was enormous interest on the part of the public in the securities of the corporation. "Beaverbrook will be interested," he said, "in the markets which he expects to find." Jesse L. Lasky next called upon, caused quite a laugh when he said that immediate response of London from the coast Sunday, Zukor had informed him that he was going to give him a dinner but not to say anything to Connick of anyone else in the organization because he didn't care to stir up politics "and I," said Lasky, "thought this was very nice. But let us where they have the scared, am not the guest. But I will let you in on something. Zukor wants something from Beaverbrook or Beaverbrook wants something from me and I can tell each one of them that they are up against each other." In the course of his remarks Lasky declared that at a meeting of prominent film folk in London, he had gotten on record as saying that he was champion of the modern story and that he believed the people were more interested in what was happening today than as to what happened yesterday. At that time he said, he received some of the leading questions put to him by Beaverbrook in view of the fact that Italian, French, German and Italian producers were present, but the conclusions he said he was tremendously gratified when Beaverbrook came to him and said "You are right." A warning note to American producers advising them to keep awake every minute. "We have no monopoly," he said. "Canada and our friendly neighbors to the left with us abroad. The Italian producer who told me that the great costume plays and spectacles were not "abroad was correct. They are coming from France, Germany and Italy. America will always lead in stories of business and present day romance."

Time Not Ripe
For Representative Organization in Industry, Says Zukor

"A note being sounded for a united motion picture industry through the medium of one representative organization. Many realizations at this time is so splendid, cannot strike a responsive chord until the various branches of the industry eliminate their internal troubles and get down to business on a real constructive basis."

M. H. Hoffman of Pioneer Film has this to say: "I deplore the inauguration of any move at this time for the purpose of forming a national council of all the branches of the industry, contending that the time is not ripe for such a movement and will not be ripe until petty squabbles have ceased and until the important factors in the producing, distributing and exhibiting fields are convinced that the biggest piece of constructive work is accomplished when the doctrine of all for one and one for all means more than mere words.

"The only way to get one gigantic organization which will function for all interests and which can do more good to the motion picture industry than any man has ever done. He was followed by G. Gayler Dominick of Dominick and Dominick of Wall St., who declared there was enormous interest on the part of the public in the securities of the corporation. "Beaverbrook will be interested," he said, "in the markets which he expects to find."

Jesse L. On Vice-President Returns—Denies Reported Difficulties of Company

Walter Crotch, vice-president of the Continental Film Co., Ltd., of Long Island City, New York, on Sunday, denied that an annual meeting of shareholders and directors was scheduled to take place shortly.

It is stated that the reports alleging difficulties of the company are false and that the company is in good stead.

A special set representing a Scotch castle has been built for "Sentimental Tommy," the project of the town of the studio in "The Copperhead."

After Swanson String

It will not prove surprising if, in a few days, final arrangements are made for the taking over of the Swanson and Nolan theaters in Pueblo and Salt Lake City.

The Swanson and Nolan operate the Grand in Pueblo, Colo., the Majestic in Grand Junction, Colo., and the Rex in Greeley, Colo. The Swanson Theater Circuit operates the Strand, American and Gem in Salt Lake City and the Elk in Rexburg.

Gest Het Up

Over, "Aphrodite" in Films—Has Plans of His Own for Screen Version

Morris Gest, who presented "Aphrodite" at the Century last fall, is at it again, and has reached New York with the story of a film to be made in Canada.

It is not a secret that the rights to "Aphrodite," the book by Pierre Frondaine, are now owned by the Lewis-Rogers group of film producers. These latter rights were later sold to Metro, who plans to use them for Nazimova. Now Gest comes along and states that if Metro, in its screen version uses one scene as put on by him in his stage version, court action will result.

It was admitted at the Gest offices that his "Aphrodite" was based on the dramatization of Pierre Frondaine, which according to Famous Players is now owned by Metro. Gest's intention of bringing the matter to the courts was voiced recently at a luncheon of the Cheese Club.

At the same time, it is understood that Gest has plans of his own for making "Aphrodite" into a picture, on the same scale as the stage play.

Geoffrey Nye Returning

Geoffrey Nye, head of the Famous Players-Lasky division, is returning to England, according to reports from San Francisco.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellows know how you cleaned up.

Personal exploitation of your show of your theater, with fellow bearing the burden, is an every day opportunity. Edward L. Hyman, of the Brooklyn Mark Twain, grabbed the chance recently when he really held a "Booster Rally," conducted by the Brooklyn Central Y. M. C. A.

Hyman sent out his Strand solists and they in a body went the length of the five streets of the district called. Through arrangements with the producers Hyman screened "Married Life" and "The Show Subjects were of Strand-Hyman arrangement.

Portland, Ore.—A clever and dignified street ballyhoo together with an attractive lobby display aided materially in sending "Passer By" over the top at the Peoples Theater. Under the guidance of the theater's exploitation department a typical old fashioned lack was driven about the streets. This was a correct replica of the one shown in the picture. The lack displayed marked attention in the business district of Portland.

Realizing, however, the value of attracting the Lobby boxers, an artistic and yet consistent, lobby display was used. This comprised cut-outs from the posters representing the various interesting characters of the play and placed in a position that would be best to reach the eye of every "Passer By." In this manner the People's theater, by clever advertising and exploitation, drew crowds for the entire run of the picture.

Albany, N. Y.—Printing handbills in foreign languages for a clientele which consists largely of foreigners is a clever scheme successfully employed by H. R. Hellman, manager of the Royal.

Road Shows for "Harem Master"
The Armenia Film Co., offices at 364 W. 23rd St., has a six reel rapid "The Harem Master," which was produced in New York. The picture will be read road with a special alaguie of Turkish dancing girls. H. L. Ansley and N. C. Travis are handling the picture which will later be state righted.

James Wilkinson, who came East in July to supervise the cutting of the Kosimisk serial "The Hope Diamond Mystery," has completed his work.

Captain Robert S. Domann, formerly with Universal, is shooting pictures for the Red Cross, in Bulgaria, Algeria and Scandinavia.

Bacheller Story for Dial Film
Los Angeles—Dial Film, releasing through Hodkinson has purchased Irving Bacheller's "The Light in the Clearing.'

Hodkinson by a recent deal controls film rights to all of Bacheller's works.

Washington—Exhibitors and operators have reached a satisfactory agreement in regard to the wage demand made by the operators last week.

A compromise was made whereby operators in the smaller picture houses are to receive a 25% increase and those in the larger theaters an advance of 33 1/3% over the present scale.

The former operators are now paid an average of $25 a week and the latter $45. The operators of the smaller houses asked for an increase to $35 and the others requested $70 a week.

Publicity King

Some of His Methods given Much Space by Newspaper Publication

At the time that Harry Reichenbach was “putting over” some of the stunts which attracted to him unusual attention, there was one occurrence which did not generally think much of the picture world, but that was a lengthy interview which ed Reichenbach and methods in the Editor and Publisher, a trade publication exclusive to distributors, owners, advertising agents and others interested in that industry.

The interview was captioned “Natural law against new fakes needed to protect public—so-called publicity men laugh at vigilance of editors effective New York State bureau tells about his methods.”

The editor’s note immediately preceding the article was particularly interesting, reading as follows: “The use of printing this article, the editorial of which was obtained by or Publisher’s representative, with considerable difficulty, is simply to open the eyes of the trade. It is our regret that there are so few news stories that are as well written as this one.

Correspondence

Passes Between Frank Rembusch and Sydney S. Cohen

Some exceedingly heated correspondence is passing these days between Frank Rembusch of Indiana and Sydney S. Cohen of the M. P. T. O. of America.

The letter sent by Rembusch and signed by typewriter and not otherwise, reached Cohen on Tuesday. It started off by informing Cohen that he took quite a chance in planning to attend the Indiana State Exhibitors Convention and recalls to Cohen the action of the Cleveland Convention when the Credentials Committee refused to allow Charlie Olsen a seat because he was a member of Associated Exhibitors. As a result of this action Rembusch says that Cohen would not fit into the Indiana convention and suggests “so please remain away.”

There are a number of paragraphs in the communication which Mr. Cohen declares are malicious, untrue and libelous and he has written to Rembusch to ascertain whether or not the letter did come from him inasmuch as it is signed on the typewriter.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send your ideas. Let the other boy know how you cleaned up.

Lake City—A clever window tie-up with Spaulding's store an effective street race stunt were essayed by R. F. Allison, Denver station representative for Gold and the manager of Loew's Ca-pito over "Going Some." The window display contained a cut figure of Cullen Landis as the allegorical Speed of the picture, ready to start on a race, to-gether with sticks of the production large card reading, "You will ONG SOME when you pur- chase Spaulding Bros' Athletic wear." Allison also staged a 100 dash on the main thoroughfare of the city with prizes given to winners. They carried a banner over running suits reading, "Going Some." This event was staged on successive days. First prize was to the runner who won two out of the three.

Hokkaido, Mo.—When the county was in progress, Manager E. E. Pearson of the Kozy found that dance figures had dwindled. He put up with an aviator flying over the fair grounds, numerous heralds heralding the production which happened "Down on the Farm," the Mack picture. Some of these were for admission to the house and entertainment created ultimately had a satisfactory effect upon the page.

Louis—Something novel in the lines of an opening campaign was the Delmonte opera tion about the city, and competing for it. In addition, with the open of "Hombrosques," at the house Hurst and the Mayor appear person. Column after column publicity was the result.

City, Iowa—A $150 slogan in conjunction with "Suds," Larry Pickford, who was away at the Royal, Crystal Washing- and the Tribune, Edi boxes on the front page and stories distributed through the in different issues, made the and run of that film at the a decided success.

Levey Subpoenaded

The Committee Calls Him to Testify on Political Character of "Uncle Sam"

Harry Levey who produced "Uncle of Freedom Ridge," based on a story by Margaret Prescott Mon-roe that has been the cause of spread political discussion, has been subpoenaed and was sent for to appear before the Federal Committee on Privileges and Elections, investigating campaign ex- penses.

His Special to Washington reached Mr. Levey's office on Wednesday, while he was away. He left yesterday to say that his picture had not been used for campaign propaganda.

Levey states that the picture was financed by Bernard Barnaby, who is prominently identified with the Democratic party and that the Barnaby Film was made as an ordinary proposition. The deals with the League of Nat-urals with particular emphasis for the Democratic group on the other hand.

A special showing of the film was arranged before President Wilson in the White House at Washington last no special shows are sched-

ded for the picture on Sunday evening at the Selwyn and the Colan and Loew's theaters.

Swanson Deal Still Pending

Marcus Loew offices stated yesterday that there was nothing to this time regarding the takeover of the Swanson and Nolan ers in Pueblo, Colo., and Salt City by the Loew Enterprises. The same day a denial was that Loew would erect a large-er on what is called the Oentral, an theater at 65th St. and ern Blvd. The Oentral is op-

n to the Cecil Spooner theater and a way from the Southern Blvd., owned by Loew. His reported ing on the Oentral has been the ef-ct of considerable discussion in the city for some time past.

Moss' Coliseum Opens

Christie Warns

Against Reissues of Its Product—Says It Owns All Negatives

(Advt. to WID's DAILY)

Los Angeles—Officials of Christie Film Co. have issued a warning to the trade, as a result of an item published in WID'S DAILY Sept. 16.

Christie states that no person or corporation has the right to reissue any of its Comedies whatsoever except the Christie Co., which owns every negative of all Christie com- edies produced.

"The Christie Co." says a company statement, "gives warning that it will prosecute any individual or company offering Christie comedies for reissu- en or illegally making use of their name."

The article referred to by Christie stated that the Film Publishers Corp. Charles Simone, general manager, had released a set of 16 Christie comedies featuring Betty Comson and Billie Rhodes.

Sullivan's Plans

C. Gardner Sullivan, the scenario writer, returns today on the S. S. Finland, after a tour of Europe during which he gathered material for new stories as well as restig.

In New York Sullivan is expected to close the details of his contract with Messmore Kendall, calling for four completed pictures a year for three years. Following Sullivan will go to Los Angeles to complete the delivery of scripts called for on his last contract with Thomas H. Ince.

The Sullivan-Kendall contract goes into operation the first of the new year.

An important announcement regarding policy and plans of the Sulli-van-Kendall contract will probably be made shortly.

42 Theaters Banned

Film men were interested in a statement published in a cable from London that the London (Eng.) County Council had refused permission to erect 42 picture theaters in the British metropolis.

The same council recently held up the opening of the London studio of Famous Players until certain stringent regulations had been met.
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellows know how you cleaned up.

"Oh, look! What is that?"

This and similar exclamations were heard during the premiere screening of the four-lynn picture "The Bellman" in New Jefferson. It was a truth that caused the entire theater audience to sit up and take note, as the film was made slightly darker than the other part of the entertainment, which included a dilapidated old belfry,
and hanging therein an old battered bell.
The sound of the bell set off an impression of age and mystery.

After being displayed first at the 5th Ave. Theater, the exhibition was moved to Keith's and it at-ttracted attention in both places.

The manager of the 5th Ave., F.
Schaefer, arranged the exhibition into his house.

Famous Players has made arrangements whereby 100,000 copies of Claude Ferere's "The Right to Love" will be placed on the market temporarily with the general release of the George Fitzmaurice production. Undoubtedly this feature of the exhibition campaign for this feature will have a direct bearing upon the box office receipts.

Omaha, Neb.—Annette Keller-man's personal appearance at the divas fest held at the Rialto in conjunction with the showing of "What Women Love" served to put that offering on the market, there. The "personal appearance" stunt almost always gets over, for fans everywhere are curious to see the stars off the screen.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Some picture men think that exploitation can be systematized, but T. H. Schrader of the Columbia does not agree.
Recently, a publisher proposed that he write a book called "Motion Picture Exploitation Systematized." Instead of grabbing up the offer, Schrader adhered to his principles, declaring obstinately that there was no such thing as an exploitation routine that could be followed safely at all times.

Jefferson City, Mo.—What is probable one of the most unique tricks for attracting notice has been successfully used by the management of the Jefferson. Officially, the population of this city is about 15,000, but as a rule there are about 30,000 people here on a given day. As these traveling crowd and a car-advertising system is used to put up to public the fine names of productions planned for that reception, the car company started planning a city road, a contract was drawn up, whereby the Jefferson secured the use of front fenders for advertising purposes. The fender space may be used in more than one way, for when Down on the Farm" was played, the cars were decorated with elaborate drawings and trimmed with straw.
Meanwhile, the newspaper campaign at the drive by, and the house garnered the shekels. In all probability similar arrangements can be affected elsewhere. Certainly, the scheme devised at Jefferson will be a success if it can be successfully negotiated.

Omaha—Free lunch is seldom used in conjunction with a screen performance, but when Will Rogers in "The Strange Boarder" was presented at the Moon, a "lunch luncheonette," where patrons could drink some coffee and munch a few cookies of charge, attraction considerable notice.
The Table Supply Co., a grocery company, was permitted by Manager Ballantine to operate a demonstration. The booth had the same success.
As a result, both the store and the grocery concern profited, for the public which accrued from the stunt was large and attendance figures showed a decided jump.

Atlanta, Ga.—The fact that a dog, which looked just like Teddy, the car-ny's plastic dog, could be had in exploting that production here. The E. and H. Film Dist. Co., handling the offering in the south, planned the campaign which consisted of planting a story in each of the dailies to the effect that a new species, had been discovered.
The yarn was to be that following the death of his wife, William Barry had taught the animal to care for his child. Barry when interviewed de-cidered that he got the suggestion from "Up in Mary's Attic" and the film received the publicity.

Hamilton, O.—When the Palace raised its admission rate, instead of waiving it until the intended spectator bought the box office ticket, had him or her with the new rate, mangaging director Fred S. Meyer started a full page newspaper advertising campaign. The result was that instead of the number of patrons being smaller when the new rates came into vogue, the audiences were larger.

Philad. Exchanges Reorganize Philadelphia, Pa.—Bob Lynch was elected president, George Demb vice-president and Ben Amsterdam cler and secretary; Frederick Cogning of the M. P. Manager's Association, successor to the M. P. group of the Chamber of Commerce.

All in Honor of Cox Los Angeles—Governor Cox and the newspapers in his party were visitors in the Hollywood colony on Tuesday as the guests of Associated Press National.

All First National stars and directors now engaged in picture making on the Pacific Coast were present at a studio reception.
The film folks made a picture with Cox in the leading role, to be shown in theaters throughout the country.

SPANISH LOVE

“Held Audience Breathless.”—Eve. Sun

Author’s Union

In a special article appearing in the New York Times of Sunday, Sept. 19, copyrighted by the New York Times, Helen Bullit Lowry writes in part as follows:

“Supposing that the Authors’ League, with its 1,500 members, should become a part of the A. F. of L., what would be the reactions on the part of the labor supply who are split by its political affiliation and with its heart-throb stuff? Would this be as epochal a move as if the police of the shell. This in effect is how the Equity has put it up to the Authors’ League. And then: Three years ago the dramatic authors were only a hobby of playwriting. But today, taken on you would have hurt you little. Now every writer is a potential dramatic author. He comes forward as soon as he sees the first scenario rights to his story or his novel.”

“Four years ago the Authors’ League debated the question of joining the A. F. of L., in the open forum of its bulletin. The proposition was tabled. If it had come to a vote — so far our nearest straining of the members — the league would have split, so violent had the controversy become. For four years the matter has smoldered, but well guaranteed transparent breeze that might start up the old flame that reporters who have strolled casually into the office on other business have been cautioned on the side. And, by the way, don’t mention anything about the A. F. of L. We don’t want a hornets’ nest about our ears.”

“It might have smoldered for four years more had not this quasi-invitation been issued in bomb form at the last Authors’ League luncheon. The bomb-thrower was John Emerson, President of the Authors’ Equity, the speaker of the day.”

“His bomb had a long fuse, for he started in talking about how energetically the author complains when his brain child appears on the screen without father’s eyes or father’s entity. For father’s eyes are the stations or father’s manners anywhere.”

“That,” said the speaker of the day, is because you sell your brain child as soon as he is born — sell him outright and gone, and then do not look upon his face again until he is a grown man. And, even if you tried to direct his education, you couldn’t because the director of the picture wouldn’t let you. So there you are.”

Sewart Pictures

Dover, Del.—$2,500,000 corporation, “Sewart Pictures” has been formed here. Incorporators are S. L. Mackey, C. O. Cohee and C. B. Outten all of Wilmington.

Vidor’s Staff

Hollywood—With work started on Ralph Romans’ novel, “The Sky Pilot,” King Vidor Prod. announce the following new staff appointments: Assistant Producer Manager: A. L. Thompson; for the past 18 months studio manager, American Film Co., Santa Barbara—previously with William A. H. Anderson; Assistant Director: Frank E. Hughes.

The staff is headed by C. S. Vidor, as general studio manager and includes: C. B. Kendall, technical director; Ira H. Morgan, chief cameraman; William Smith, chief cutter; Carol Owen, film editor; Walter M. Caldicott, electrical superintendent; and Frank Darrow, publicity director.

Scenario for “The Sky Pilot” was written by J. W. Darrow, who will work with Mr. Vidor throughout the picture.

“The solution of this tragedy, as of all other motion-picture complications which beset the new-made playwright, is to join the American Federation of Labor—thus the bomb was exploded.”

Now the Actors’ Equity has been granted what is called “temporary jurisdiction.” over the dramatic authors. That is, until the authors join with organized labor in mass, dramatic authors may join the Actors’ Equity, which automatically makes them members of the Federation of Labor. Mr. Emerson, the director of the Equity who explained this point went on to say that jurisdiction from Mr. Gompers was necessary, or else the Equity would have to do things like carpenters joining your union. Among the Authors’ League members who have already become members are John Price, W. Darrow, W. Johnson, H. Roderick, M. Roper, W. Cooper, M. Hay and B. Veil.”

“We’ll give you people a little time, but you’ll have to decide to join the A. F. of L, is the attitude of the Equity.”

“After that we’ll make a campaign for membership rights in your organization.”

Don’t Fear England

Is Eve Unsell’s Advice, Regarding

Production of Pictures

Eve Unsell, who left this country

15 months ago, to organize the scenario department of Famous Players-British Producers, Ltd., in England has returned here with noting angles on English production.

“The Britisher’s chances in the world film game depend upon the amount of money he spends on his future productions. If the day arrives when pictures take six months’ in the making, then England can hope to compete with America. But When pictures are turned out in eight weeks, he has no hope at all.

“The climate is naturally against him. It is a difficulty that he cannot overcome. If pictures take months to make, he can wait for the sunshine which comes none too often.

To offset this, however, he has the advantage of the continent where he can cure a variety of fine exteriors such as cannot be compared with California scenery.

“That country need have no fear for its supremacy in film producing, so far as England is concerned. The technique of the Britisher is rather crude, but he has advanced in the past year due to European competition.”

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

San Francisco—Sig Schlager is now pausing for breath after a whirlwind exploitation campaign here on behalf of Louise Glau in the harvest, finding the latter has paid San Francisco a visit.

J. Parker Reid, Jr., heard from W. A. Crank, the A. P. Manager, from W. O. Edmunds, the Hodkinson exchange chief that two of his productions were to play almost simultaneously. Result: a tie-up of the Tivoli, the Strand and the Frolic as well as a Louise Glau in full-on conjunction with a Read Daily News scenario contest.

Twenty-six columns of newspaper space resulted from Louise Glau in the metropolis.

Washington, D. C.—When Tom Moore announced his plan for his opening attractions of the new season at his Washington houses, he used a three-quarter page ad, getting the jump on his competitors meaningly. It is judicious when launching any sort of an advertising campaign to beat your neighbor to it, the result obtained being more satisfactory when you are the first one.

Omaha, Neb.—Advertising of the judicious and well-written variety made quite an impression on the local fans when “Parlor, Bedroom and Bath” was presented at the Sun and Mose. The following ad was especially successful in attracting attention: “Pardon us if you were among the thousands unable to gain admission to the Sun yesterday to see ‘Parlor, Bedroom and Bath.’” We made every effort to accomodate the thousands, but the crowds were so great that it proved an impossible task. There were days left in which to see the picture. A word to the wise—one early.” Another ad which was used later read: “The zippiest comedy ever conceived. A little ‘frisky’ but not indecent. Made Broadway laugh until the aspas

REMARKABLE FILM

“The Lionel Barrymore stars in a remarkable film. For those who like character acting with an unusual theme to keep them guessing, Whitman Bennett’s production of ‘The Master Mind’ offers full value for the price of admission. It is interesting.”—New York Tribune.

GOOD ENTERTAINMENT

“The Lionel Barrymore’s ‘The Master Mind’ proves a good entertainment. Mr. Barrymore brings a fine intelligence to an intricate star role and carries the weight of three-fourths of the picture upon his shoulders. ‘The Master Mind’ demands serious consideration.”—New York American.

FULL OF SUSPENSE

“The film proves to be a very interesting and suspenseful version of Daniel G. Carter’s play. Something new in photo-plays and the piece does succeed in arousing curiosity as to what will happen next. The principal role is realized by Lionel Barrymore, who plays quite in the spirit of the piece.”—New York Morning Telegraph.

reinvest and to continue to reinvest some of the profits that were made. He said that his factors who took his profits out was never going to get anywhere and that not until he had enough invested to worry him was his business really going to count.

"One never need to worry about showing the good pictures a number of times in the same house," said Mr. Barbian. "For instance, I showed "Tess of the Storm Country" 15 different times at prices ranging from 15c, 20c and 25c, and I made money every time. I am always looking for long run material. Every exhibitor should be doing the same thing.

Barbian said that he believed that the real answer to a successful show was an open, free market in which he could buy and sell. He said that he was not seriously disturbed by what was called the menace of the producer-distributor becoming an exhibitor. If he had control of all his houses, he felt that he could safeguard his control in his own community, according to Mr. Barbian, it made very little difference who was his competitor.

He declared that an exhibitor should reach out for an entire state, use every effort to secure additional patronage. He said that exhibitors owed a responsibility to the other pictures and should be told of how they had secured the cooperation of other exhibitors in Akron to do a number of worthwhile stunts, among them being a plan whereby they combined to hire a newspaper man who sent the right kind of material to the Akron newspapers to publish regarding the pictures.

"I believe," he said, "that Akron is the only city whereby newspaper advertising space is sold in bulk to the exhibitors. That is evidently the key to and the neighborhood house man to advertise at the same rate as the larger house. It encourages advertising and it is beneficial to every one.

He declared that an exhibitor should reduce his business to a proposition where by comparison he knew just what he was doing day after day. He declared that he spent 10% of his gross income on advertising.

Barbian was brought to New York because of the showing he has made by Col. "Manne" Mande, and after Barbian completed his address, J. D. Williams of First National said that Barbian's record was one of the greatest things that he had ever heard of in pictures. He incidentally said that in his time as an exhibitor he never had a distributor in the house that he had not received any salary.

Capt. F. F. Stoll, president of the U. S. Photoplay Corp., is at the Hotel Astor but efforts to reach him for a statement yesterday failed.

The Skywayman

A drama of life and thrills above the clouds.

Story by JULES G. FURTHMAN
Directed by JAMES P. HOGAN

Seemingly impossible feats performed in a story that keeps you continually on the tiptoe of anticipation.

On to a fast moving train and off again from an aeroplane.
Crook Melodrama with Faith Theme as Under Tone

There is Robert Martin, the leader of the group, once a minister, and now known over the country side for his preachings at fairs and carnivals. But his sermons are merely cloaks for the actions of his adherents who rob and swindle under his protection.

The reason for Martin's deserting his church was his wife, who years ago eloped with another man. Martin has taken this as a token of the injustice of God. His prayers before the carnival throngs are plain hypocrisy. Alone he curses his Maker.

It must be said that Martin's subsequent reformation is not quite convincing. Comparison with "The Miracle Man" must enter again. Then there was the astounding cure of the cripple lad to work the change in the crooks. Here Martin is stricken blind in a thunder storm. His daughter is overcome with smoke from a fire and he prays sincerely and hopefully for his recovery. It is granted and Martin regains faith.

And so his little group of adherents reform. Mary, the girl who takes delight in doing wrong and who might be taken to be the mistress of Gregory Martin's chief lieutenant, quits her evil ways and marries Pritchard, a rich youth. But this isn't exactly reform. It seems more of an easy way out. When Gregory returns after a stay in jail Pritchard permits him to go to Mary's room in an attempt to win her back. And his faith in the girl is rewarded when Gregory comes downstairs alone.

So even Gregory reforms and with his change comes the change in Bert, the comedy crook and previously the toughest "egg" of the lot. Martin's daughter also finds true happiness and love while Martin himself regains his sight (through what means is not at all clear) and is reunited with the wife who deserted him.

William T. Tooker puts a deal of strength in the role of Martin. Ruth Dwyer is very appealing in the role of Mary. Walter Miller is good as Gregory while Norma Shearer, Eugene Borden, Jack Crosby and Matthew Betz handle important roles well. Others are Robert Kenyon, Jack O'Brien and Downing Clarke.

Will Be Compared to "The Miracle Man"—Musical Program Important

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Despite the fact that Cabanne has not been clear in some details of "The Stealers" and that the reformation of various of the crooks in the story is not always done with conviction, this should entertain and hold most audiences. It is something of a question, however, how the picture will go with those who have seen "The Miracle Man."

Given a careful presentation with a strong musical accompaniment, many of its weak points will escape detection. The way the orchestral accompaniment swept the audience at the picture's private showing was quite noticeable. Exhibitors who book it had best pay detailed attention to this part of the presentation. Probably the score, arranged by James Bradford, will be procurable at Robertson-Cole exchanges.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... A mother's overwhelming love for her children

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 6,800 feet

"Over the Hill to the Poor-House" is a beautiful picture of many sobs and heart racking moments. In picturizing the touching story of a mother's love for her children from a brace of Will Carleton's famous old poems, Director Harry Millarde has created scene after scene which wrench tears from the eyes no matter what the cynicism or hardness of their owners. There are times when one might say that he lays the "sob stuff" on a bit too thickly. Having produced a tear he is never content—he must secure a bucket full. But after all this is merely another way of accentuating the beautiful theme of the story and such a theme can stand accentuating.

For there is much more than just the sentimental sob story of a mother, deserted by her children and wending her way to the poor-house, in this picture. It holds a mindful mirror up to thoughtless youth and middle age in its tortuous irascibility toward the old age that has long born with it without complaint. And in the sympathetic, calm and resigned mother as characterized by Mary Carr, it reflects that always understanding, forgiving spirit of maternalism.

The story holds and demands a certain reverence throughout its entire length. Its early scenes are fraught with comedy showing the children in their school days. The comedy is always delightfully human. Then comes a skip in years with all the children married but one, John, and he in prison, suffering in silence for a crime committed by his father, now deceased. And, quite true to life, all the sons and daughters find mother something of a burden in their households. She realizes with a pang that she is not wanted. Her eldest son has proven a hypocrite, retaining the money that John, now free, has sent him for their mother on the one hand and practically driving her to the poor-house on the other. But with John's return and his reunion with his mother there comes the penitent awakening in all the rest.

Mary Carr's performance is delicate and full of appeal as the mother. John Walker, an actor who has previously been seen merely in bits, plays her faithful son and his many scenes with her are beautiful. Walker seems little short of inspired. William Welch is the father and his performance too, is real. Moll Tearle is convincingly true to life as the hypocritical son while John Dwyer, Wallace Ray, Phyllis Diller, Louella Carr, Vivienne Osborne, Dorothy Allen and Edna Murphy all do fine work. The children in their early days are played in rare spirit by a fine selection of kids including three of the Carr children.

Everyone is going to enjoy this picture except the snobs and you don't have to bother about them. Rest assured that the great rank and file of people in America are going to come and see this and cry over it and enjoy themselves while so doing. There was a girl in the Astor theater who kept right on crying through the intermission of the picture and when asked by her companion why, she smiled back and said she couldn't help it. And that's the way it will get them all, smiling at each other through tears.

Any exhibitor who caters to the public at large should book this and give it a big play. He will not only benefit his own box office by so doing but, if he chooses, can congratulate himself that he is doing his audiences a lot of good. And there isn't anything much more desirable than that combination.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Father saves son from clutches of siren
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 6,800 feet

“A Light Woman” is a mildly interesting production and it might have been an unusually interesting one. With an idea derived from a Robert Browning poem, the authors have evolved a plot based on the eternal triangle. Though this simmers down to the situation in which the father saves his son from a siren by stepping in as his rival for the woman’s hand, it possesses much distinctive characterization and is so handled throughout that it takes on a refreshing aspect.

But the director of “A Light Woman” has all but spoiled the story by his treatment. The tempo of the action is terribly slow. When the characters walk they resemble nothing so much as the Pathe slow motion studios. Naturally this retards the interest to a great extent. Considerable unnecessary footage is also used in the detailed flash backs employed when one character is telling another a story. Once such a flash back is inserted almost immediately after the original scene has been shown.

The director has also used too much film in smaller details. For instance, a letter reads, “—may I see you at eight-thi. y?” then a title comes, “The appointed hour,” and then a clock is shown with its hands at half-past eight. With such obviously superfluous scenes eliminated “A Light Woman” would be much better.

Where the story takes on a refreshing aspect is in the scenes between the father and the siren after the former has convinced his son that the woman is actuated solely by mercenary motives. There is some bright play between the two and then comes a slight suggestion of tragedy when the woman, left alone, discovers that the boy’s father has captured her heart.

The siren goes out of the story there but her plight is appealing and made forceful by the fine performance of Claire Du Brey.

In the end the son discovers that his father was just playing a trick on him but agrees to see the matter in the right light and returns to his fiancée, begging forgiveness.

Miss Du Brey’s performance is outstanding as the siren. Hal Cooley is convincingly sophomoric as the boy and Charles Clary does a fine piece of work as the father. Helen Jerome Eddy is the boy’s fiancée and is just a bit too goody goody, to be altogether real.

Cutting Will Help This to Get Over Despite Irreparable Faults

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Despite the very slow tempo of this and the fact that much unnecessary action is included in the footage, the “different” character of the story is bound to show through and attract attention. It is not too late to eliminate those entirely superfluous flash backs. And perhaps the action might register as more interesting if the film were run through the machine at a speed slightly above average.

In your advertising feature the fact that it is based on a poem by Robert Browning. In good neighborhoods this announcement will certainly serve to attract patronage.

You haven’t got any big players to promote. Helen Jerome Eddy is the best known of the lot but her part isn’t as important as several others. But mention of Browning and catchlines having reference to the peculiar eternal triangle plot presented will serve to draw the patronage.
With every American newspaper filled with political news, every exhibitor playing this lively melodramatic comedy can positively assure himself of big business and that "satisfied feeling" in all of his patrons who have seen "Homespun Folks."

"You'll laugh a lot, cry a bit and come out saying 'some picture'" is what the newspaper critics of the big cities are saying about it.

This is why 2,000 of the nation's best theatres are playing it. One hundred prints means all of the 2,000 can play it before Election Day—and some more.

Playing the Capitol Theatre, New York, week of October 3rd.

CHARACTER OF STORY .... Girl forges references to secure a job as social secretary and falls in love with her employer

There's something lacking in this latest Constance Talmadge picture and it won't take many guesses before you know what it is. "Good References" is a typical Talmadge comedy with the star displaying her usual attractive personality most of the time. But there are moments when both her vivacity and the comedy business fall down and run along for a while in a sort of a daze until it comes to and they decide to settle down to a little more comedy.

Still in all, one of the biggest appeals in the previous pictures is missing in "Good References." Where are the Emerson-Loos titles? They certainly would have helped to maintain a better sustained interest than has been secured.

The quality of production is up to standard and the supporting cast is a good one especially Ned Sparks whose comedy business is good—what little there is of it. Vincent Coleman satisfies as the hero, but doesn't do anything to distinguish himself until the end when he gets over some good fight stuff. One shot taken in Grand Central Station is very indistinct.

Mary Wayne (Constance Talmadge) looks for a position in vain because she has no references to offer. Nell Norcross is more successful and secures an appointment as social secretary. But Nell is in ill health and when she is forced to give up the idea of taking the position she urges Mary to impersonate her. Mary presents herself as Nell Norcross to Miss Caroline Marshall, who is trying to regain her social position by introducing her nephew to society much against his wishes.

Mary is accepted and one of her first duties is to get her employer out of jail when he is held as one of the spectators at an illegitimate prize fight. Later the nephew (Vincent Coleman) invites his prize-fighter friend to a reception at his aunt's home. This results so disastrously that the aunt decides to take the nephew, his secretary and a college chum who is posing as a theological student, on a cruise.

The nephew is falling in love with his secretary and when the college friend goes off swimming with her, he sails off without them, leaving them to get home the best way they can. They borrow clothes and when they reach home a private session fight is in progress. Constance gives up her impersonation and goes back to her boarding house but is soon followed by Coleman any they finish with the clutch.

Announce the Star But Don’t Promise Anything from a Story Standpoint

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The star's name and reputation together with some good comedy bits which you can promise them will in all probability satisfy admirers of Miss Talmadge. "Good References" does not maintain the same comedy value and interest that was contained in several previous pictures of the star and the Anita Loos-John Emerson titles which have been a part of former productions will certainly be missed.

You can tell them that this time the star is looking for a job but doesn't do any vamping to get it even if she does fall in love with her employer at the close. For catchlines try: "She could not secure a position because she had no previous experience. See how she secured 'Good References' and became a social secretary." Or just announce the star's name and the title of the picture if you think that sufficient to get them in.

CHARACTER OF STORY ....... Tramp sacrifices

LENGTH OF PRODUCTIN .......... 4,700 feet

Something certainly went wrong in the production of "Sundown Slim." A more indeterminable picture has seldom been seen. Those concerned in its production were successful neither in planting characters nor situations clearly. There is no direct or definite premise established. As a consequence all the action that follows the bewildering introductory scenes is badly muddled.

These faults extend even to the characterization rendered by Harry Carey, which possibly might have been a very human thing. Carey is introduced as a tramp poet of sorts. He puts a lot of little eccentric-ies into his scenes that are quite humorous for a while. But when suddenly out of a clear sky, he becomes owner of some sort of a ranch the tramp's jig is up even as is the story's. Where, how and why he got the ranch is never explained.

This much is gleaned from the picture: that the story concerns some sort of a feud between a cattle rancher and a sheep rancher, that Carey in his character of Sundown Slim enters the action in time to get captured in the midst of the conflicting forces. It is indicated by a pair of alleged love scenes that Slim is in love with the daughter of the sheep rancher but eventually backs down in favor of his "pal." Slim's relations with his pal form nothing more than a big interrogation point.

The melodramatic side of the action isn't even as clear as the slightly touched upon romantic side. The various shooting scenes don't excite because the spectator is usually in the dark as to what they are about.
There is a gleam of a thrill in the scene where Slim, after condemning himself as a coward, finally pulls the trigger of the gun that results in the death of a villain. And this scene seems to give the key to the meat of the story that they missed. If Carey had characterized Slim as a coward, ultimately rising to a big situation, he would have created a good bit of interest.

In support of the star appears a large cast that does generally fair work, although the players might have been much better had the production conditions been of merit. The cast includes Otto Meyers, Edward Jones, Morris Foster, Ted Brooke, Charles Le Moyne, Frances Conrad, Duke Lee, Joseph Harris, Genevieve Blinn and Edward Price.

Not Much Chance for This Even with the Star's Name

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The special exploitation that this picture has been receiving at the hands of the distributor would naturally lend one to suppose that it was an unusual picture for Harry Carey. Such is exactly the case but it is unusual in the opposite direction than that indicated by the exploitation. Carey has had some very good westerns in his time and he occupies a good position in the ranks of the actors who appear in this type of picture, but certainly "Sundown Slim" falls far short of touching anything he has done heretofore.

Even his particular admirers will be puzzled at the maze of action herein presented. There is hardly a definite point made throughout the five reels of the picture. But Carey's characterization is not sufficiently outstanding for the production to get by.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Mystery of apartment house in which whisperings, muffled cries and shuffling feet are heard, is solved by hero

Length of Production ...... About 5,800 feet

Despite the fact that the foundation upon which all mystery element is based is a trifle weak "The House of Whispers" turns out to be a first rate mystery drama with the suspense well maintained and the interested kept increasing until the end. The director has managed to keep all possible clues to the cause of the whisperers and shuffling feet until close to the end thereby adding to the suspense. This works out very well if you don't get tired waiting.

The climax is reached very satisfactorily and there is some very good acting by practically the entire cast in this sequence and the solving of the mystery is reasonable enough to get over without complaint. There is nothing especially unusual introduced in the way of mystery, the customary secret stairways and secret panels, disappearing jewels, etc., all playing their respective parts in the necessary fashion.

J. Warren Kerrigan as the hero and one to clear up the difficulty does good work and the rest of the cast is quite adequate. The elimination of some short shots that aren't necessary might help to make it less jerky in some places where the scene shifts frequently and rapidly.

Spaulling Nelson (Kerrigan) goes to live in the apartment of his uncle and aunt who decide to go away and leave their nephew to find the cause of the hushed voices and shuffling feet which has been annoying them for some time and for which they can find no solution. Nelson becomes acquainted with Barbara Bradford (Fritzi Brunette), who lives with her mother and sister in an adjoining apartment.

It is quite evident that Barbara fears something which may happen to prevent her sister's marriage, the something being the fact that the sister had been married before and among the voices she heard she recognizes that of her supposedly dead husband Roldo, who soon threatens to expose the marriage if she does not give him money. Henry Kent, owner of the apartment had the building constructed with secret stairways which allowed access to the apartments of his rich tenants thereby enabling him to rob them.

Roldo is an accomplice of Kent, also the telephone girl who incidentally was married to Roldo before he married Barbara's sister... Roldo kills an actress tenant and Nelson is accused of the crime. He escapes from the police and with Barbara discovers the sliding panel in his apartment leading to the secret passage way. This leads him to Kent's apartment where he overhears a conversation which discloses the source of the whisperers and other mysterious noises. Kent and his assistants are caught, the sister free to marry and of course to complete the affair Nelson and Barbara marry.

Star's Admirers and Lovers of Mystery Stories will Like It

While this isn't unusual nor big in any sense of the word, it does maintain a well sustained mystery element with the interest held well to the end so if your folks like this sort of story they will like "The House of Whispers." The title indicates the nature of the production and you might work up some clever exploitation stunts with the whisper idea in mind if you go in for this sort of thing.

If the star has a following in your theater play his name up in big letters saying that in "The House of Whispers" he solves the mystery of hushed voices, muffled footsteps, etc. The story is different from anything the star has had of late. Use the lines: "Do you live in an apartment house? Listen for the whisperers and the footsteps on the stairs. See 'The House of Whispers' and you'll know why."

CHARACTER OF STORY .......... Pretends to trace the life of “Babe” Ruth and doesn’t trace much of anything

“Headin’ Home,” starring “Babe” Ruth of home run fame, is a very poorly made picture. It is not the baseball player’s fault, to be sure. Good pictures have been made with stars borrowed from other professions. But Ruth didn’t get anything approaching skilled treatment. All he does in “Headin’ Home” is walk around. In fact he walks more often in this picture than he does to first base.

The story contains just one good situation but that is so clouded over with bad handling that its merit never shows. This situation is the one where Ruth, the boob of his home town and a bum ball player, is loaned to an opposing baseball nine to fill a vacancy (this vacancy very strangely occurring in the outfield after the pitcher has become drunk). In the ninth inning he crashes out a homer and so defeats his home town team.

After this Ruth is run out of town and through some miraculous stroke joins the Yankees. Just how a rube ball player who had never done anything except knock a homer in the ninth inning of a tank town game every broke through into fast company by merely going to the city, is never explained.

There are lots of troubles in the writing, directing, photography and production of “Headin’ Home.” The story is never clear, the directing ridiculously bad at times and the photography worse. But the picture’s biggest fault is that “Babe” Ruth and the character he plays here are all mixed up. There is no illusion surrounding him. Matters are made infinitely worse by the story being presented as the words of one baseball fan to another. It is supposed to be the story of Ruth’s life. And as anyone at all interested in Ruth will know, it isn’t the story of his life, it will not convince. In fact the only emotion that “Headin’ Home” produces is confusion. Another deterring factor of the picture lies in the subtitles written by “Bugs” Bear. They are not funny and completely destroy any little appeal that might have rested in the stellar character.

Ruth Taylor, Billy Sheer and James A. Marcus are the most prominent of the supporting cast.

question “Bear.

Much to Consider Besides the Question “Will Ruth Draw?”

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Of course no one expected “Headin’ Home” to be a work of art. It was made merely to cash in on some of the wonderful popularity that is “Babe” Ruth’s on the baseball diamond. But the least that was expected was a fairly well made picture. There can be no excuses offered for the miserably worked out story and the generally inferior production despite the fact that the producers had to wait on Ruth’s time while making this.

It’s a question whether Ruth’s name will attract real crowds to a picture house or not. Picture fans have been duped so often by pictures containing celebrities from other fields that they are pretty wary these days. However, even if his name did draw the crowds, packing your house to the doors, you who have the real interests of your theaters at heart would merely be doing the old trick of cutting off your noses to spite your faces. For unless the grade of intelligence of your audience is very low it will be heartily disgusted by “Headin’ Home.”

All of which leads to a very sad conclusion. An opportunity to make a picture “of the moment” has been bungled, muffed, just as a ball player misses an opportunity and makes an error. “Headin’ Home” is not another homer for Ruth. It is one of his few errors.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Hero sinks to low level after he has taken blame for murder—re-generated and reunited with wife through trick

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 6,700 feet

"The Price of Redemption," an adaptation of I. A. R. Wylie’s novel, "The Temple of Dawn" is very lurid and very varied melodrama, having its start in India, its middle in England and its later part again in India. There is so much action in it that those concerned in its production didn’t succeed in keeping the interest continually sustained throughout. A little too much had to be crammed into its footage. Moreover, many of its episodes and individual scenes are overdone. For instance the scenes of the star under the influence of drugs and liquor. Bert Lytell is at his best and strongest when in moods approaching repose. He is able to convey much with slight effort. But he has been permitted to literally act all over the place in these scenes. They are spoiled by too much acting.

The story tells of Leigh Dering who becomes a hero in England after he has performed an act of valor on an Indian battle field. He marries Jean, an English girl, but they drift apart and the fact that he is living on her father's money gradually appals Leigh. He returns home one night intending to give his father-in-law a piece of his mind to find him murdered, a girl he betrayed in the room and confessing to the crime. Desiring that his wife be permitted to preserve her high opinion of her father, Leigh shoulders the blame and departs. He sees that he is reported dead in a train wreck. Later back in India he is shown a slave of drugs and drink.

The plot then becomes very complicated, too complicated to outline in anything approaching detail. A Rajah, half-crazed because the villain, Willoughby, who has married Jean, has caused the death of his sister plots an elaborate revenge, much of which is altogether unnecessary. He might have gone about it in direct way. He enlists the aid of Leigh in his scheme and by making him work causes his regeneration. At the climax when the Rajah plans to blow up the British stronghold Leigh tackles him and saves the day. The Rajah’s revenge is partially fulfilled when he has the satisfaction of killing Willoughby. Thus the road is open for Leigh to go back to his wife.

The supporting cast does good work on the whole and includes Seena Owen, Cleo Madison, Landers Stevens, Edward Cecil, Arthur Morrison, Wilbur Highy, Rose Marie de Courvelle and Micky Moore.

A Typical Melodrama of "The Old School"

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Price of Redemption" is a melodrama of "the old school." Five or six years ago it would have attracted more or less favorable attention, for it is well fitted to answer the cry of the old exhibitor for action, and then some.

In these days of highly polished melodrama and more skilled production "The Price of Redemption" must needs suffer in comparison. It is lurid in the extreme and there has been no effort to smooth off its rough edges. The continuity writer also attempted to retain too much action.

As an attraction for the one day house this will pass muster, but audiences who know the best in pictures will hardly be convinced or satisfied by it.

In addition to the star there is a good supporting cast to feature containing two quite well known leading women while the author’s work is very well known.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Attempts of descendant of Napoleon to restore monarchy in France

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 6,500 feet

Allan Dwan, for his third Mayflower release, which incidentally is his first for First National, has produced a picture that will appeal to all sorts of houses, particularly to high class audiences who appreciate sympathetic and dignified handling of an interesting theme.

Harold Mac Grath's story, while it may be somewhat far-fetched—and a good many of the best sellers these days deal with more or less impossible situations—certainly has a wealth of excellent screen material in it which Dwan has picturized to advantage. The character of the story which opens in France, switches to America and then to Corsica, is the sort of thing that Dwan seems to handle to the best advantage. For that reason there are found in the picture a number of realistic sets. They do not, however, compare with those in "The Luck of the Irish" simply because the story doesn't call for it.

The story deals with the desire of Karl Breitman, a descendant of Napoleon, the Great, through a morganatic marriage, to restore the monarchy in France. Breitman is apparently sane except on his dream of conquest. He makes love to Hilda Gobert, played by Rosemary Theby, in order to secure a map of treasure, hidden by Napoléonic sympathizers in 1815, which she has. The map leads him to America and later to Corsica as the secretary to Admiral Killigrew who occupies the house in which the map was hidden.

In Corsica, Breitman locates the treasure and buries it in the sea, thinking to return for it. Thomas Jefferson in the role of a French secret service man tells Breitman that the members of the Dynastic Party who financed his American trip are not faithful. Breitman comes upon a wild orgy and challenges the leader to a duel. The next morning at dawn he is fatally wounded and is taken to a little Corsican village where he dies, the secret of the treasure going with him.

Henry Walthall as Breitman gives a superb performance which certainly is among the best things he has done. The moments where the madman's frenzy seems to light up his entire being and where he unconsciously slips into the famous Napoleonic pose are excellent. Rosemary Theby deserves special mention for her work. The remainder of the cast including Ann Forrest, Philo Mc Collough, Norman Kerry and Thomas Jefferson is satisfactory.

A particularly effective touch comes at the close when Breitman dies and a shadow falls over the death bed while through the window can be seen Kerry and Miss Forrest walking hand in hand in the sunlight.

High Class Audiences Especially Will Like This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

One of your best advertising angles for this is the fact that Dwan has made "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Luck of the Irish." Your audience should know his name and what it stands for in production values by this time.

The title "A Splendid Hazard" lends itself particularly to exploitation. An effective teaser campaign can be easily built around the title. Then the romantic angle of the story should appeal to a large percentage of your audience. It might be a good idea to say that the story is one by Harold Mac Grath for his works are in the "best seller" class and are rather widely distributed. The fact that the story has an unusual ending can also be used to advantage.

William S. Hart again forsakes his chaps and sombrero in "The Cradle of Courage," donning in their stead the trappings of a San Francisco policeman. The change in surroundings has also provided the star with the opportunity to render a characterization of unusual strength but regrettably the story is weak in general material while a brace of important situations fall short of ringing true.

Hart appears as "Square" Kelly, formerly the chief worker in a gang of San Francisco crooks. His first appearance comes when he steps off a transport, home again after seeing several months service in France. He plans to go back with the gang but naturally there comes to him a revulsion of feeling when he considers the ideals he has just been fighting for in contrast to the destructive work of his old pals.

When Tierney, boss of the gang, casts a slur on the army, the breaking point comes and after a terrific fight with him (splendidly staged), he accepts the offer of his buddy's father, a police lieutenant, to join the force. The scene in which Kelly tells his mother of his decision falls considerably short of ringing true. It is altogether inconceivable that a mother should kick up such a rumpus about her son going straight.

After Kelly gets set on the force the supposition is that the real meat of the story is to come. But the climax sequence is introduced rather hastily and without the proper building up. Kelly's brother is killed by a member of the gang and the blame is fastened on the reformed ganster. He casts his uniform aside and searches out Tierney, the guilty man. There is a quick play of guns and Tierney falls dead while Kelly is seriously wounded. The last scene shows him recuperating attended by his penitent mother and sweetheart.

Director Hillyer has played around entirely too much with the scenes of disembarkation at the start. And he also uses up too much footage showing Kelly and the gansters together before finally introducing the break between them.

William S. Hart in
"THE CRADLE OF COURAGE"
Paramount

William S. Hart's rather long absence from the screen coupled with the popularity that is still his, will doubtless result in an unusual turn out for "The Cradle of Courage." Besides the manner in which you can advertise this will attract more than the ordinary attention. The advertising cuts supplied and much of the paper show the star in a policeman's uniform. Certainly this unusual sight will whet the public's appetite.

And while "The Cradle of Courage" isn't the best thing Hart has done by any means, even containing faults that you'd hardly expect in a picture from his studio, it must be confessed that his characterization provides a real interest throughout, despite the lacks in the story. A little judicious cutting particularly at the start and in some of the sequences in which the star appears alone would help matters considerably.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 4,900 feet

"Sunset Sprague," with the virile Buck Jones in the title part, is an old-fashioned action melodrama of the west with its edges smoothed down to the realistic point by a very satisfactory production. There have been far better western stories than that contained in "Sunset Sprague." It involves nothing more than the elemental chase of the heroine by the villain and his ultimate defeat administered by the hands of the hero.
Its situations are all developed about this very simple plot. But the action is swift and sure, there is a supply of physical thrills and the backgrounds are unusual.

The star appears as a western rover who makes the acquaintance of Barnes, an old man traveling across the desert to meet and protect his orphaned niece, Rose. Rose is beset by a group of villagers, headed by dennison, who are bent on securing the mine discovered on her property by her late father, the whereabouts of which she is ignorant.

The story resolves itself into Sprague's battles with dennison and the "Crow," his chief henchman, while the romantic element between Sprague and Rose is also touched upon. Eventually Dennison is killed by a girl he had betrayed. The "Crow," mortally wounded in a gun fight with Sprague, confesses that Dennison killed Rose's father. This frees Rose's half-brother, who had been an unwilling tool of the villains, from suspicion.

There is a good sequence taken in a rocky section of the country showing Sprague and the "Crow" at battle. Here Jones gets an opportunity to do some fancy stunts with the rope. At one moment he is seen dangling from the end of the rope head downward and shooting at his adversary at the same time.
This episode produces a good thrill. And for that matter it is to be noted that the handling of each separate sequence throughout the picture is especially good from the standpoint of thrill and suspense.

The star has an attractive hero role and he handles it to the best of his capabilities. His vigorous personality is again an outstanding feature of his appearance. Patsey De Forest is Rose and handles her end of the action very well. Henry J. Herbert is a good villain, while Edwin B. Tilton, Gloria Payton, Noble Johnson and Jack Rollens give very satisfactory performances.

Very Satisfactory Production That Should Go Big in Some Houses

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

As a western melodrama "Sunset Sprague" can be ranked among the good ones. Before audiences who most desire this type of entertainment it will get over very well indeed, for it has all the elements of popular appeal. It has fist fighting and gun play galore and all of it is done to very good advantage.

In advertising this the fact that it is a western is immediately indicated by the title and the name of the star. All you need to do therefore is to paint the story and production as attractively as possible. As regards story, feature the melodramatic action with its fights and numerous physical thrills. And when Buck Jones' names is coupled with such a line of talk those who know the star realize that you are talking straight from the shoulder.

Those of you who have been running the Buck Jones pictures are particularly fortunate in getting another good one at this stage of the game. Jones seems to be rising in popularity with certain audiences, and if he keeps up with such generally meritorious productions he'll eventually land high.

Some Short Reels

"Doing Time"—Pathé

In the different comedies in which he has been the occupant of the stellar role, Snub Pollard has played different characters, and the idea of varying his end of it has been followed out again in this single reel. This time, the greater part of the footage seems to have been patched together. All three, as well as the other girls, is expected to have their moment in the sun. The conclusion of the story concerns his falling out with his bride-to-be, and the story concerns his falling out with his bride-to-be as a result of a little girl being placed upon his doorstep. Gribbon's adoption of the waif and a subsequent telephone conversation with the girl gives her the impression that the child is an offspring of his. Of course, a quarrel follows, with another lass, Helen Darling finally becoming his spouse. There is some naive shimmery in the scene showing the reception given Gribbon by a group of club-mates and due to the rather sparse attire worn by one of them some censors may eliminate a few bits of footage. Such a procedure will lessen the effectiveness of the picture.

"A Painter's Paradise"—Prizma.

Undoubtedly, many of the scenes included in this Prizma reel will prove pleasing to the eye. There is, however, the same fault apparent in many of the other Prizma productions visible in this, namely the fact that much of the material does not look natural and that the lighting is not sufficiently strong. It was photographed in Brittany and scenes at a little fishing village comprise the entire offering. As far as the composition and atmosphere are concerned, the reel is more than satisfactory but the lighting in places is weak, the fault being especially noticeable when the French painter's visage is shown. Terry Ramsaye is credited with writing the titles.

"Blame the Stark"—Christie.

What forms the basic theme of this Christie offering, is an idea that has been employed before in comedies on more than one occasion, but they have dressed it up and inserted a few incidents possessing the needed punch with the result that this is acceptable entertainment. Harry Gribbon is featured and the story concerns his falling out with his bride-to-be as a result of a little child being placed upon his doorstep. Gribbon's adoption of the waif and a subsequent telephone conversation with the girl gives her the impression that the child is an offspring of his. Of course, a quarrel follows, with another lass, Helen Darling finally becoming his spouse. There is some naive shimmery in the scene showing the reception given Gribbon by a group of club-mates and due to the rather sparse attire worn by one of them some censors may eliminate a few bits of footage. Such a procedure will lessen the effectiveness of the picture.

"Edgar Camps Out"—Goldwyn.

The latest of the Booth Tarkington "Edgar" series has several unusually good features, enough to get it over with almost any audience. Those who have seen the previous releases of the series and are generally familiar with the works of the author, however, will find that beneath the covering of humorous incident, there are some very obvious faults. To begin with, there is no really continuous theme—the different situations are not linked together in convincing fashion and the scene of the children's freak show is not a new idea. Although the latter portion provokes mirth because of the clever staging and direction, it is an essentially old scheme. Johnny Jones, Buddy Messinger and Lucille Ricken again occupy the principal roles in the two reelers and as usual, their work is up to the mark, the girl's performance being especially worthy of note. All three lads playing the Bates Boys, work so as to cause the tent scene early in the production to stand out distinctly.

Incidently, this is by far the best feature of the comedy, which thereafter falls below the standard set in the early section.

"Between Friends"—Ford Goldwyn.

El Paso, thriving town of the southwest, furnished the material for this Vord travel reel, which has been titled in good business-like fashion and while not the type of entertainment that can be depended upon to hold the attention of the spectator at all times, is an acceptable reel of its type. The photography is quite up to the desired standard and the scenes comprising the footage are fairly interesting.

One of the most beautiful sunset scenes shown in films coming at the close of this Prizma reel makes up largely for the general lack of effectiveness of what precedes it. Audiences as a rule are impressed mostly by the concluding features of a production and the exquisite coloring and scheme of the finale bit will undoubtedly enable this to hold its own. It is interesting to note that the "fringe" was visible in the early Prizma pictures and is no longer apparent.

"Uncle Tom's Caboose"—Universal.

Again, they have utilized the burlesque on the performance of a traveling theatrical troupe as a source of laughter, the well-known "Uncle Tom's Cabin" being the subject from which the laughs are gleaned. There are some laughs scattered throughout the picture and fortunately, the best part of it all is sprung at the finish, where several of the characters, chased by the rural minions of the law, use as a means of hiding, the scheme of standing before a billboard advertising their drama and assuming the positions of the characters thereon depicted. They have handled that part of it in splendid style, and while much of the rest of it is below the standard, the finish is sure to prove a hit.

"Loose Lions"—Universal.

Universal has an acceptable two reeler in this offering, which as the title indicates, consists largely of footage in which lions are seen roaming about. As usual in these productions, some colored gentlemen appear and their work helps this along considerably. The scheme of burlesquing the work at a picture studio, that is, taking the spectator behind the scenes is also a point in favor of the picture which has enough laughs to hold up throughout. There is some pie-tossing included, and that portion of it is not essential, but generally, this will do.

"Nonsense"—Mermaid—Educational.

One of the best laughs that Broadway has seen is "Nonsense." It is full of a lot of tricks, some old but most of them new and all of them mirth provoking to the extreme. The crowd at the Strand seemed to enjoy it very much and it gave the Talmadge feature a good run to divide the honors. It is almost a pity that the producer did not work this into greater length and have used it as a feature.

Unlike most comedies it has an actual continuity and has some semblance of sincerity. The antics of the barnyard fowl and the alliance between the dashing goose and Mrs. Hen make a lot of laughter and there are a number of other really enjoyable stunts, details of which you need not know but book it.
There's a big part of the thirty million people who have read the "Torchy" stories in your neighborhood.

They've chuckled over the exploits of this auburn-topped youngster. They want to see what he looks like on your screen.

His exploitation value is a hundred per cent. You are welcoming a friend to thousands of your patrons when you take Torchy in.

Your book store will be mighty glad to cooperate with you in advertising the pictures. Just tell the owner that you are going to show one of these comedies each month. He'll make money out of it—and you will.

Quick action—a grip at the heart and always a roar of laughter just at the right time.

You don't laugh at Torchy—you laugh WITH him.

He's got his introduction made for you—he'll make himself welcome and there'll be lot of people that he will bring back with him to your theatres when you show the second one.

The first was just "Torchy." Then "Torchy Comes Through" and "Torchy in High." You'll get them all.
Short Reels

"Paul's Peril"—Keefe—Lifegraph

"Paul's Peril" is a two reel satirical number poking a lot of fun at the "new" woman. For purposes of comedy all the women in the cast are in the positions usually occupied by men and vice versa. Paul, the son of the house, who stays at home and has conferences with the ouija board is hired to a "wee-gee" den by the villainous "Dutchess." A broad comedy treatment of the conventional situation between the heroine and villain follows, Paul ultimately being rescued from calamity by his wife and mother-in-law.

This picture was recently given a tryout at a New York theater and got a better break than the average two reeler as regards laughs. The acting is free from offense, while the reversed situations are amplified in a comedy sense by some well written subtitles, novel and rather humorous. A cast including Parks Jones, Eugenie Gilbert, Clare Morris and William Dills appears. The girls are unusually attractive. "Paul's Peril" is one of six two reeler being marketed by William E. Keefe for the American Lifegraph Co. Keefe conceived the idea and supervised production.

"Kids Is Kids"—Paramount—De Haven

This appears to be one of the best comedies in which the De Haven team has appeared. This time they are seen as a young married couple who volunteer to take charge of several orphans after the asylum has burned down. Of course they find their hands full with their troublesome charges and the comedy results from the various antics of the kids. One of the best is introduced in the person of Cicero, a curly haired fellow, left with the married couple for the evening. The orphans proceed to shave off his golden tresses and when the mother returns she lets her rage fall on the helpless husband and wife. This stunt and others such as the over-flowing bath tub, the ice cream scene and the business with the piano all get over very nicely. The picture is well directed by Charles Parret, who has succeeded in introducing the spirit of the picture to the kids just as well as if they were grownups.

"Clever Cubs"—Hall Room Boys Photoplays

Girls in very light costumes occupy a large part of the footage of this two reeler, in which the Hall Room Boys become society reporters and cover an assignment consisting of securing the photograph of a prominent lumber king's daughter. Donning wigs and other appropriate attire, they get into the midst of a nature dancing class and obtain the required picture or rather what they think is the desired shot, only to have it eventually turns out to be one of the servant girl. Of course, this information is secured only after the minions of the wealthy lumber man, a group of powerful huskies, wreck the newspaper office. A great deal of it is highly humorous, some more is rather risque with one bit likely to be eliminated by some censor boards and most of it very nicely photographed. As a whole, a commendable production.

"Wooly Bits and Monkey Hits"—Chester-Educational

Undoubtedly, this is one of the most interesting travel pictures seen in a long while. Peru is the scene of it, and the material is of such a nature and so varied as to maintain interest from beginning to end. As a rule, offerings of this character of educational value but not essentially interesting. This, however, lacks the dull atmosphere frequently found in them. At the start, some llamas are seen, after which the process of sheep shearing as practiced upon the scene of action, is taken up. Later, there are some shots of women working on the wool, and then the ancient architecture, Indian and Spanish. Incidentally, strange Indian types are frequently visible, the scene changes continually and the matters taken up differ. Katherine Hilliker's titling is up to the mark.

"Chase Me"—Fox Sunshine

This is one of the good Sunshines. In its featured chase it contains enough that is new and enough that is old and funny to provoke a lot of laughter. The husband pursues the lover and the lover turns around and pursues the husband. The chase leads them along the avenues and on the beaches. There is a funny bit when the lover flirts with the wife from the street car, while she is passing in the window driven by her husband. And the chase from the roof of the bus over to the street car roof is funny. The beach stuff also registers well. Introduced in the middle of the chase is some laughable police station action showing two of the characters floating around in the air after taking injections of "near beer." This is perhaps the first time that slow motion action has been used in a comedy. Its possibilities along this line are great.

The cast includes Glenn Cavendar, Dave Morris, Ed Kennedy and Olive Dale. Roy Del Ruth directed. He seems bound to show closeups of girls' legs. He might realize that a pretty leg is just as noticeable in a semi-long shot as it is in a close-up. Bringing it into a closeup paves the way for attacks because of alleged vulgarity.

"The Brave Toreador"—Fox

Mutt and Jeff enter the bull-ring in this number. By mistake Mutt is forced to fight a raging bull. He is thrown over the fence landing at Jeff's feet. Jeff is peeved because he hasn't seen the fight and so Mutt throws him back. The comedy highlights of the reel come when little Jeff proceeds to maltreat the bull into a state of docility. All in all a very good number.

Dorothy Gish, wonderfully funny business, some well conceived comedy sequences and subtitles that are humorous gems in themselves prove the determining factors in "Little Miss Rebellion." Because of this trio of elements the picture registers as a splendid little comedy.

The story itself is no more than a satisfactory vehicle. The few times that author and director have attempted to get serious with it, it slips and skids all over the place. Happily, however, the star is pretty nearly always on the scene and once or twice steps into melodramatic situations that might have been ridiculous, thus saving the day for the picture.

Miss Gish appears as the Grand Duchess in a mythical European kingdom. She gets in some fine comedy at the start when she is seen presiding over a meeting of her advisors and registering boredom throughout the session. Another sequence showing her with the court jester, a gentleman in a cutaway coat who reads her jokes from a paper, is also big in a comedy sense.

Romance comes into the life of the little duchess when she meets Dick Ellis, an American doughboy. Her introduction to the games of baseball, craps and the pastime of chewing gum are sequences of a really hilarious nature. Miss Gish's peculiarly distinctive facial expressions and her incidental business are rich.

After Dick has departed for America the old "Bolshevik" get busy and uprise, the revolution having been planned in the palace cellar. The duchess escapes to the U. S. A., in company with a faithful old servant.

The villainous revolutionists pursue with the ultimate aim of killing the duchess after they have secured the valuable crown jewels. Suffice it to say that they almost attain their foul purposes. But Dick is handy at the critical moment and, with the assistance of the duchess herself, puts the villainous ones to route.

Miss Gish is well supported by a cast headed by Ralph Graves and including George Seigman as the chief villain, Riley Hatch as the faithful servant and Marie Burke as a lady-in-waiting.

Dorothy Gish in "LITTLE MISS REBELLION"
Paramount

Regarding "Little Miss Rebellion" there is little to advise the exhibitor. If her previous comedies have gone over well then certainly you can be sure of this one. The star's eccentric play and her bits of clowning and unusual hokum make this a thoroughly enjoyable comedy from first to last. The laughs come thick and fast and they are all a bit out of the ordinary.

In exploiting this handle it as a comedy and don't let a serious line enter your advertising copy. Shape your advertising arguments about the various comedy sequences of the picture including the initiation of the duchess into the mysteries of gum chewing and the games of baseball and craps. Advertising hints of this nature will indicate to those who know the star's work, the unusual character of her latest picture.

All Other Methods to Put Over Booking Company in Northwest

Seattle—In an effort to put over its Northwest Exhibitors’ Circuit, it is stated that the firm has hired two of the well-known booking men to carry out its plans and to get the companies to work together to prevent any doing of the booking combined. With the larger companies a waiting attitude is being taken and plans are being made to undermine the exchange men with their companies.

Goldwyn is said to be the only company that has made any deal with the circuit. All other concerns important are said to be standing out. Metro has totally told the circuit managers where to get off, said that Wright offered the Metro bookings up to $200,000, and said he would book bookings of $100,000 and said the deal was not accepted. At Metro is standing pat. Famous, United Artists, Asso. Producers are standing pat. Vitagraph is not so certain. Selznick is standing tight and refusing to deal with the circuit.

It is said along film row that a few weeks ago some of the circuit booking independently, this will end in smashing the circuit, as the old Clemmer circuit is broken.

The men here say the Lesser-Gore booking deal, just started in Los Angeles, is also liable to cause a number of trouble.

Stoll Files Counter-Suits

Attorneys F. F. Stoll of the U. S. Pho- tograph, who is being sued by Harry Rae Webster and Richard C. Producers until the latter’s charges that he had been forced to make the agreements. Stoll said Webster had been paid until the time he was discharged and that Webster had been paid $50 of the $500 he was paid in addition to his salary, and that the suit was brought for $300 against Webster and for $500 against Travers, Stoll said.

Word has been received from London that the coterie of famous British authors Lasky signed while on the other side has actually started to turn over to the British producing unit’s production department original screen stories.

Henry Arthur Jones’ first contribution is “James, the Fogeys,” which Hugh Ford will direct. Edward Knoblock has written a story he calls “Appearances,” which Donald Crisp found waiting for him when he arrived in London. This will be Crisp’s first English production.

Mae Murray to Star

Sir James Barrie has two of his plays in production, both of them in this country. One is "What Every Woman Knows," which William DeMille is making, and the other "Sentimental Tommy," which John Robertson is making.

Henry Arthur Jones has written an original play called "The Lifted Veil" which Charles MacAfee will make following "The Kentuckians."

Sir Gilbert Parker is in this country. His "Translation of a Savage" has been produced by George Melford and will be released as "Behold My Wife." Some of the other British authors will come to this country later and go to the Lasky studios.

Lasky plans to have 10 directors continuously at work at the Long Island studios, 12 in Hollywood, two in London and one in India. The latter director will be named shortly.

At the Lasky studio it is planned to have a second director always working out the details of a star's new picture while the latter is actually at work on the previous vehicle. This means a star will have alternating directors. Thus Roscoe Arbuckle is working with Joseph Henaberry and James Cruze is preparing for Arbuckle's next production.

Tom Meighan's new picture in the East will be "The Quarry" by John A. Morsoco. George Melford will next make "You Can't Fool Your Wife," by Hector Turnbull.

Frank Urson, until now Cecil DeMille's assistant, has been made director. His first picture will be "An Assisted Frankensteiner," with Wallace Reid.

Dorothy Dalton has temporarily abandoned screen work to appear again in "Aphrodite." When she resumes work her first picture will be "The Teaser," her first western subject in some time.

Oppenheim Signed
Jesse L. Oppenheim's production announcement mentions the name of E. Phillips Oppenheim as doing an original story for Famous Players. It was learned on Saturday that Oppenheim will write a series of originals for the screen and will actually go into the London studio to supervise production of his material.

Goldwyn some time ago announced that it had secured Oppenheim's works. It was impossible to learn Saturday whether the latter company had secured the author's published works or future writings as well.

Mae Murray, according to an announcement made some months ago, was to star in pictures for Invincible Photoplays, Inc., a company formed especially to handle her pictures.

This was at the time her original contract with Famous Players had expired.

No one at Invincible could be reached on Saturday to ascertain how the new contract affected that company's plans.

Horsley Says He Owns Comedy Rights—Talks of Contract with Al Christie

It is claimed by David Horsley at the series of 17 Christie Comedies are being offered to state directors by arrangement with the Film Publishers Corp. Charles Simon, general manager, are owned him. Horsley denies that Christie owns the negatives of every comedy that company has made, as stated a special wire to WID'S DAILY and published ten days ago.

Christie on May 15, 1916, to make a series of comedies and that although the contract was to run until Dec. 31, 1918, 56 comedies had been completed. Christie and Horsley severed connection and that in this way he (Horsley) secured the rights to the pictures.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Fall River, Mass.—A lot of people here are taking part in the Rialto campaign advertised "The Law of the Yukon" by Charles Miller—Mayflower release.

Mayflower sent from New York, Al Sollier and Jack Pfluger of the exploitation department, printed a series of stunts designed to introduce the picture.

"A sour dough stunt" was arranged in which all those Fall River men who took part in the Alaskan gold rush in 1898, were invited to the theater, by invitation to see the picture. A good deal of the Alaskan gold rush was decorated to resemble an Alaskan mining hut and in the center of the lobby was placed a large sign board and a table to stake their claims. This, in turn was surrounded by money bags to complete the scene.

On Monday of the week, the street is quite the city edition of the Globe. Herald and News was purchased and rushed to a printer who ran on the front page in large red type. "The Law of the Yukon" a picture at the Rialto theater. These were then distributed to the newspapers who distributed them all over the city. A number of automobiles were secured and covered with signs which read—"More excitement than the Ponzi gold rush. See The Law of the Yukon." These were paraded around the city.

A rube character was secured to parade as a Yukon miner with a pick, shovel, money bags, etc. This stunt attracted a good deal of attention from the passers-by. To round out the campaign a number of cards were hung in store windows and attached to the doors of many private homes in various sections of the city.

The Herald which partook in Mayflower’s National Sales Girl Beauty Contest in Fall River did a fine view of the picture as written by the girl who won the contest in Fall River.

Along the roads leading into town, a number of large placards were posted in the words—"Stop—the law in large type. The rest of the reading made a good deal of advertising, under a Yukon demands your presence at the Rialto theater." In this way motorists were attracted to the picture and the theater at which it was playing.

Jackson, Mich.—Honest advertising should be the rule for all exchanges. A good example of steady patronage is the opinion of Tony Zoolers, proprietor of the Broadway. Fans, according to him, know that every production is not up to a 100 per cent. standard and are willing to pay for 85 and 90 per cent. films. They do not want to be misled about them. Zoolers received his experience running a house for Kentucky mountaineers who treasure their shekels and if in their opinion, they are cheated do not hesitate about expressing their disapproval. Criticism of various means of exploitation reaches there has helped Zoolers materially.

Ames, la.—The Princess theater, one of H. Blanks' houses put on a special campaign to make "Let’s Be Fashionable" with 25 living models showing the latest in styles.

This was introduced to the Ames theater going public by a double page spread in the Times which announced the fashion show and also carried a series of ads announcing merchants whose goods were to be shown at the theater.

Albany, N. Y.—Word of mouth advertising, according to manager Fred Roberts of the harness, the letter secured by giving invitation matines for members of organizations or good school classes. The performances are given where according to experience, attendance is expected to be very light, so that little expense to the house is incurred. Mondays and Tuesdays are usually the days on which these invitation matines are held. Young folks, Roberts says, are the most enthusiastic boosters of pictures and getting them to see a production will result in their telling other about it.

St. Paul, Minn.—At the opening of the Capitol, an artistic program was issued to spectators, the natural result being a very favorable one. It was about 8 by 3 inches in size, whith a maroon stock cover, embossed in heavy gold letters, with gold-colored spines, on the front and back. On the front cover, the following reading was given, "Capitol Theatre, the Perfect Playhouse." Being done in hand-lettered script. Gold letters and maroon were used very effectively in the decorative figures, against the background of maroon. A dozen pages of heavy, dull-colored paper made up the body. Sepia half-tone cuts appeared on the first five pages, the program on the two in the center, and cut and copy describing the architecture, price, etc., appeared on the last five. Special cuts of Local News, Charles Ray and other First National Stars were included, the booklet registering in fine style.

Offering Acts to Picture Houses

Arthur Klein, with offices in the Strand Theater Bldg., has formed the Manhattan Booking Exchange which plans to supply picture theaters with singers, musical acts and musical attractions.

Klein in an advertising announcement says this of his plan:

"The cost of service will be fixed; it will be no more or less for one thea- ter than another. This exchange is absolutely independent of any film-interest domination; it is financially re- sponsible, and the bookings will be arranged and supervised by as well known bookers as are there in the business and theatrical trade.

"The service will be upon the split or full week basis, that is, a change of artists twice each week or weekly. Bookings will be varied; for example, the first half, a male quartette, last half, a 'single'; first half, a female trio, last half, a small 'jazz' band; first half, a man-and-woman piano singing act, last half, a concert tenor and so on.

"Only one theater will be booked in each city; it must be a reliable and responsible theater, the service is not an experiment, but a proven success in every theater which has tried it out. It is no longer sufficient to give your audiences a program of pictures alone. It must be broken—its mon- ony interrupted—it is to achieve a maximum of entertainment.

"Branch offices will be opened in principal cities, as occasion warrants, to guard against disappointments; all bookings will be made in New York City, the talent that has 'made good' here, and is known to be of excellent entertaining value."

Jack Eaton of Town & Country Films, Inc., has concluded distribution contracts for distribution through independent exchanges with W. E. Here's a Drama That Has a Real Box Office Value

That's What the Experts Say of Lionel Barrymore's "The Master Mind" —Whitman Bennett’s Personally Super- vised Production of Daniel G. Carter's Stage

Play—Directed by Kenneth Webb

BIG BOX OFFICE VALUE

"The Master Mind" registers as a feature with plenty of 'punch,' suspense and unusual situations. It is ably presented, cleverly acted, the photography an artistic delight, and exhibitors should find it a drawing card for real value. Mr. Barrymore's performance is brilliant, convincing and adds fresh lustre to his screen laurels. Unbroken continuity and quick action add to the feature's high-grade quality. The name of Lionel Barrymore is a big box-office attraction and you should make the most of this opportunity.—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

POPULARITY ASSURED

"Lionel Barrymore's reputation as master of stage and screen skill assures the popularity of this, his latest play, from the wide following of his excellence of character interpretation pleases."—Exhibitor's Herald.

A BIG PRODUCTION

"The star's splendid acting and generally fine production makes it big, Lionel Barrymore gives his best efforts to the portrayal. In the performance of Mr. Barrymore alone you have a good reason for booking 'The Master Mind,' Grippingly presented."—Wid's.

A FASCINATING STUDY

"Truly dramatic material, developed along lines that hold close attention. The dark mood is finely preserved in settings, action and character, a work showing a very high quality of skill in construction, direction and general supervision. All these chiefly serve, how- ever, to enhance the assertive power of Lionel Barrymore's delineation of a master mind. The dominant value is that of Lionel Barrymore and his acting. Second is the very intelli- gent treatment and supervision, including the selection of a fine cast. Third is the play itself, the sum total causing the production to rank high as an entertainment."—Moving Picture World.

ACTING IS COMPPELLING

"Lionel Barrymore as an actor in the silent drama is a figure to reckon with. In 'The Master Mind' his work is smooth, sure and compelling. The story holds your interest."—Chicago Daily Tribune.

SUPERB ACTING

"Lionel Barrymore's genius is so dominant that at the end of the film you can think only as he thinks. A complete artist, this star. He gives you a square, thrilling look at his greatness. It is superb acting. There is nothing in town to be seen, if he isn't to be seen,"—Chicago Herald and Examiner.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Charlotte, N.C.—A capacity house for the showing of the first episode of "Furate Gold," a Pathe serial, was the return of the players, the Projectionist of the Piedmont on an exploitation stunt" he put on at small expense.

The move was a novel application of the always-effective "lost key" idea.

Lee displayed a gold chest in the lobby of the Piedmont. The chest was locked and he had seven keys fitted. These keys and 50 others were tagged with the name of the theater and the information that the finder might obtain a prize if he could open the gold chest in the lobby.

The keys were "lost" in various parts of the town. The prizes won by the finder of the keys were complimentary passes to the Piedmont for two weeks.

The expense connected with the stunt was very small. The cost of the keys was $3.00 and Lee's printing bill, for the tags he attached to the keys, was $1.25.

Lafayette, Ind.—Every exhibitor appreciates the value of a mailing list and the chances are that most of them have realized, on the other hand, the advantage of a judicious utilization of his exploitation and promotion campaigns for the Marshall Neilan production "Don't Ever Marry," and the plan is one which can easily be put into operation by any other exhibitor who has a list of subscribers.

Johnson sent out small, neatly printed cards announcing the booking of that feature. On a dotted line below the announcement was the phrase "Don't Ever Marry," followed by a blank. The recipient of the card was asked to fill in the blank with enough words to round out the sentence. It was requested that these cards be mailed or brought to the box office and that the answers would be utilized for flashback on the screen. Those who wrote the answers which the audience most pleased were promised prizes and as soon as he had enough of them, Johnson incorporated his screen showing of them in his newspaper advertising. A long line waited patiently to get in to see the film on the opening day of its engagement and the word-of-mouth advertising which it received resulted in its playing to continually splendid business. Some of the prize-winning answers were "because if trouble comes, it will come singly, because women voting for death to be voting, because while a man may have a strong will, a woman has a stronger one, etc.

Callaway, Neb.—In the small town of Callaway, Bill Haycock, manager of the Star, put on an effective exploitation campaign with "When Peacan Went Dry." The town of Callaway boasts a population of 765 inhabitants.

With a cow and horse hitched to a prairie schooner, the sides of which carried the name of the picture, Haycock drove all over town advertising the show. Seated beside him were his wife and young son, and trailing behind the prairie schooner was a hog on a leash.

The prairie schooner, Haycock used a stovepipe to convey to the inhabitants that that particular schooner was a reminder of the good old days that were but are no more. To enhance the idea, he displayed a jug of moonshine.

Louisville, Ky.—Everyone takes interest in a lively scrap, and being cognizant of this fact, Joe Goldberg of the Strand and Mary Anderson put one over on the local homemakers. Business being taken a slight slump, he told both residents to managers to put their goods and keep the houses in tip-top condition. Regular advertising space was discarded and extra space for both theaters was taken. The exploitation was of a competitive nature, giving everyone the impression that something was wrong and the management of the houses and the homes of everyone a general concern. Of course, it was not a new stunt, but judicious handling of an old one. Joe Goldberg staged a little solitary battle and both houses began to pack them in.

Diaz Callahan New Fox Manager
Diaz Callahan has been appointed manager of the Fox exchange at Dallas.

In the Courts

Papers filed in the Supreme Court show that Col. W. N. B. Gates, manager of the film studio at shalones Margidian, a Turkish- Armenian girl refugee in a picture. "Turkish Atrocities," of First National Exhibitors' which released the film, is controlling their star.

Mrs. Eleanor Brown Gates, W. 45th St., who got the tract for the girl and was at her guardian in the Supreme Court, told the Surrogate that in her accounts he appreciates the refugee was incorrigible cause of frequent breaches of agreement to appear before the at the exhibition of the film that National paid her $6,000 more was due her to prevent breaking the contract. Gates says she had to travel the girl constantly and submit to indignities because of the contract, and her misguided efforts bring discredit upon her entire position.

Mrs. Brown says that one of the pictures which were given her, she bought three more and $5,000 additional for cheap goods, if not for a person in her position.

The Leaxo Producing Co. has been sued in the Supreme Court by the Triangle Films Corp. for the cause of the suit is not stated.

Leon D. Netter has filed an action in the Supreme Court in a suit of William G. Smith, his partner, and S. Lesser, in the piece of Pictures of Cleveland, have been made a party to it also. Netter alleges that under the agreement by the parties for the purchase of the rights of the films of Wnee by the Censors of Ohio before the contract was required to make the amount of $2,000, and the film in question was approved or even viewed by the censors.

For the feature picture, "Madame X", Manager Rothfiled has this week presented a very appropriate program. This combines the most popular music from "The Tru" and "Miserere," and is interpreted by the orchestra and soloists, Edmond Fillion, the violinist, and James Frazz, the pianist. The figure, placed in a window box on the stage, resembling that used in the picture. To one side of her is the judge's chair, while above hangs the picture of justice. She removes her parts of the opera without changing her position, while the male voices, with Sadler, Fraser leading, come off on the stage. The whole thing is very effectively done and catches the interest of the audience to the end.

The program opens with selections from "Tattered" as the overture. The news pictures follow and then comes a short dance number, "Dance Exquis." This is followed by a "Trick" picture and "Mambo." The "Ting Show," goes very well at the end of the program.

views and concerns and Associated First National Pictures, and its franchise plan in particular.

I am a franchise holder and member of Associated First National. I am more than twenty-one years old. I am responsible to one man but myself, and my friends and associates for the manner in which I spend or invest any money I make from the theaters, and I do not and cannot sit quietly back and permit Sydney Cohen, Mr. Lynch, Mr. Hubbel of the Associated First National, or in any other way influence through an organization of which I am now and price as one of its many hundreds of exhibitors members.

If there is anything wrong with Associated First National Pictures; if there is anything unfair in our franchise plan and its management, I am not trying to induce every exhibitor to join me in the conspiracy with any other exhibitor in any manner. This right is open to any exhibitor, as far as I am concerned. If any exhibitor is interested in joining any other in this conspiracy, or in any other endeavor to harm the business of the motion picture industry, I dislike, and dislike strongly, if they have been made after the express statements of the exhibitor to me. It is the right of the exhibitor to have any other as far as it has been wrong, and fairly, in any instance, and when such unfairness can be shown.

When should the representatives of any other group of exhibitors be in a position to organize unless in the activities of the great co- or individually? I think that you and any other group of exhibitors, either companies or leagues, and all such efforts have been persistently loug by interested individuals. I do not think that plant from me will by any means stop these attacks. It would be a good idea for any exhibitors who have the intelligence to comprehend these attacks, and any other exhibitors who have taken this thing and in the trade papers read editorial material that would have the effect of greater efficiency in the operation of their business instead of broadcasting individual opinions on a subject as that one person or a group of people can have publicity and success in their efforts to be blacklisted or acquire other issues of genuine importance.

"Don't you put my name on the list of exhibitors who want trade journals for the benefits to be had in knowing the other fellows are making money out of their theaters and not at any personal public" being organs for a few disregarded individuals with axes to grind.

That's What the New York Mail Says of This Popular Comedienne, Presented by Joseph M. Schenck in the Story by E. J. Rath

MOST ENJOYABLE GIVEN

"'Good References' gives Constance Talmadge a thoroughly sympathetic role, and is the most enjoyable performance the little comedienne has ever given. Miss Talmadge has never looked prettier or acted with more zest. Here's the peak of high-class comedy." —New York Evening Mail.

MOST TALENTED STAR

"Further proof that Constance Talmadge is one of the most talented screen stars in motion pictures is furnished in 'Good References.'" —New York Morning Telegraph.

KEEPS 'EM ALL LAUGHING

"There was so much comedy in 'Good References' at the Strand that the large auditorium re-echoed with the cheerful sound of spontaneous gaiety. Constance Talmadge possesses a naive manner which is capable of acting prettily as much comedy as a young woman ever be expected to supply." —The Sun and New York Herald.

NO ONE LIKE HER

"Constance Talmadge is as ingratiating as ever. She is a young woman who has a charm all her own. And she need never fear her laurels. There is no one on the screen like her in the least, even her youthful loveliness is quite unlike the youthful loveliness of all other aspirants." —New York Tribune.

ASTOUNDING ADVENTURES

EFFECTIVELY JAZZED

"'Good References' at the Strand is a fun maker." —New York Evening Telegram.

ACTION IS SWIFT

"Action is swift and reveals good work." —New York Even Post.

Rebusch Hit

By M. P. T. O. Committee at Convention—Fails to Reply to Attack on Floor

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Indianapolis—Details of the meeting of Indiana exhibitors here on Monday and Tuesday are fully right. As a result of the meeting Frank J. Rebusch, long prominent in the state organization, seems to be buried. The state organization fails to show him in any position, and that all he was openly attacked on the floor of the convention and failed to respond to the attack.

The attack was in the form of a letter sent special delivery by a Mr. of Indiana who might attend the convention. This letter was read on the floor and Rebusch, who was present, made no reply to it. The letter was signed by E. T. Pate, of Texas, W. D. Burford of Illinois, both present, and four others. Sidney S. Cohen did not sign it. It was issued, said, as a result of the attack made by Rebusch in a letter addressed to Cohen which appeared in several trade papers. Efforts made to verify that Rebusch issued the letter failing, the M. P. T. O. committee forwarded their letter, which read:

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

J. Charles Davis, exploitation man for Federated has conceived a unique little gambit for the benefit of Bessie Love’s productions. It measures four and a half by three inches, has a neat blue lined border and consists of four leaves. On each of the first three pages is a heart with a question mark toward the center, with the words on these pages being respectively, “I’m in Love,” “You’re in Love” and “They’re in Love.” Opposite the latter, is in inscription “With Bessie Love.” On the other side of this leaf, is a heart with Bessie Love’s features staring the reader in the eye and then two pages in which Federated announces its next Love picture and the fact that four specials with her are forthcoming.

Charlotte, N. C.—Claude Lee of the Piedmont decorated his ten foot lobby to look like a jungle when he presented “The Lost City.” Making unusual good use of the small space, he attracted much attention toward the production. A good lobby display is always certain to appeal to the imagination of the fans and even small space may be utilized for the purpose.

Detroit—a striking example of modern exploitation methods of this was shown recently when C. E. Waughop, manager of the Scenic played “Her Elephant Man.” Waughop, who believes in getting in back of a picture with all his strength, engaged the local band. He placed the musicians on an automobile, decorated with banners announcing the production. The truck moved about the town slowly, followed by a dozen men muleing up as clowns who performed actions during the parade. These in turn were followed by several attractive girls in ballet costumes, riding ragback.

Chicago—H. W. Weiss of the Superior Screen Service, Inc., has been put on the Advisory Board of National Exchanges, Inc.

In the Courts

Edward Cooper Taylor has sued the Democracy Photoplay Co. in the Supreme Court for $4,200 alleged to be due. He says he was engaged by L. F. Lybarger to cut and eliminate five reels of the film “Democracy” at $100 a reel and was then engaged for four weeks at $1,000 a week in editing and reconstructing the reduced footage of the film. He says only $300 has been paid.

The Albert Capellani Prod. has been sued in the Supreme Court by the U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. for $1,065 alleged to be due on a policy of liability insurance.

In the suit of Kin Hubbard against Universal the defendant has filed an answer in the Supreme Court, stating that he agreed to submit “Abe Martin” paragraphs which would be acceptable to the defendant and that after several had been submitted the defendant refused to take any more because they were not acceptable.

The Weissland Amusement Corp. and others have been sued in the Supreme Court by Edmund W. Baisley for $1,195 on notes.

TWENTY REASONS WHY BETTY COMPSON IS A STAR

No. 3
WID'S DAILY—
(Its review of "The Miracle Man")
"The work of BETTY COMPSON will be a REVELATION TO ALL FILM FOLK."

FIRST RELEASE "PRISONERS OF LOVE"

To Be Formed by Marion Fairfax and Marshall Neilan—New Producing Unit
(By wire to WID’S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Marshall Neilan and Marion Fairfax have entered a working arrangement whereby a new producing organization to be known as the Marion Fairfax Prod. will be formed. The new company will make pictures either from original stories by Miss Fairfax or from stories that have appeared in nationally circulated magazines.

Neilan has placed Miss Fairfax under a long term contract, under the terms of which the latter will prepare the scenarios for the next four pictures Neilan will make for First National release. The new company will begin operations after those four scripts have been completed.

“Fatty” Boosts “Buster” Keaton

“Fatty” Arbuckle is sending out 25,000 letters with which a photograph of “Buster” Keaton is enclosed in the letter. Sets N. Y. Strand Crowds Roaring With Laughter

Constance Talmadge Praised by Critics for Peppy Work in “Good References”

PLAYS TO BIG CROWDS.

“There is plenty of lively comedy in this latest Constance Talmadge vehicle. It makes a favorable appeal and affords pleasing entertainment. Constance Talmadge injects an amazing amount of 'pep' into her impersonation and again proves her right to rank as one of the screen's most versatile comedienne. Tell your patrons that this picture played to a record-breaking week at The Strand, New York, where it received high praise from press and public.”—The Exhibitor’s Trade Review.

LAUGHTER IN ABUNDANCE.

A UNIQUE FIGURE.

“Good References’ is a breezy little comedy and Constance Talmadge a vivacious star. In the realms of motion picture stars, Miss Talmadge stands alone. She is a unique little figure and there is no one who approaches her in the particular branch of comedy in which she excels.”—New York Morning Telegraph.

STAR IS ATTRACTION.

“Good References’ is a typical Constance Talmadge comedy with the star displaying her usual attractive personality. The quality of production is up to standard and the supporting cast is a good one.”—Wid's.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 6,475 feet

"Madame X," the famous old play and mother of the myriad court room dramas of stage and screen, has been given a very fine production by the Goldwyn company under Frank Lloyd's direction. Chief interest naturally centers on the familiar scene in the French court, where the young lawyer pleads in eloquent defense of his client, unknown to him his mother, while his father sits by realizing that each word is an indictment against his own character. And this tremendously powerful sequence has been handled with rare skill by Director Lloyd. It is a scene in a thousand, one so calculated that the spectator is completely caught in its intense emotional pitch and swept to an equally high emotional response.

Much of course depended on the playing of this sequence. Beyond a doubt Pauline Frederick's work as the mother is triumphant. Her restrained emotionality is one of the big factors in determining the value of the scene. Casson Ferguson also does splendidly as the son.

The reunion scene following immediately afterwards is another one keyed to a high emotional pitch. The young man has learned from the lips of his repentant father that his client, whom he so successfully defended, is none other than his mother. He approaches her side to comfort her and gradually permits her to know that he is aware of the secret she thought was hers alone. It is a very beautifully done scene and one which takes effect on the spectator in no uncertain manner. The strength and purpose of the original play is retained when the acquitted woman, known to the court as merely Madame X, breathes her last after taking a swallow of poison.

The beginning of the picture is of small interest compared to the big scenes at the end. Its construction is rather obvious and the mood of the story is somewhat hasty—all preparatory to the climaxes which are to follow. But the more or less uninteresting character of these scenes showing the misunderstanding and separation of husband and wife and the boy grown to manhood, is quite cleverly relieved by some very good comedy interposed by Lionel Belmore and Willard Louis in the roles of the professional blackmailers.

William Courtleigh's performance as the husband is effective, chiefly in the big scenes. Others who appear are Maud Louis, Hardee Kirkland, Albert Roscoe, Cornean Kirkham, Sidney Ainsworth, Cesare Gravina and Maud George.

Should Draw Big—Will Surely Entertain

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There isn't a doubt about the entertaining power of "Madame X." It contains scenes, the power of which has never been duplicated on the stage or screen, and these have been handled in a most skillful way by those concerned in the picturization of the play.

The drawing power of the picture might also seem as big as its entertaining power. For besides the name of Pauline Frederick, you have the title of a play with years of publicity and advertising behind it. The combination ought to draw very big crowds.

In advertising it bring out the fact that the strength of the court room scene has never before been equalled. You might mention, if you wish, that many other pictures have been copied after it in respect to this scene. And a really dramatic advertisement can be built up if you care to relate the situation and relationship of the three characters in this court room scene.

Character of Story ...... Trapper and his

Length of Production ...... 5,200 feet

It’s the treatment and generally intelligent air of “getting it over” that makes “Nomads of the North” the attraction that it is. It’s truly an audience picture, for it holds the attention all the way through and at the end leaves you thoroughly satisfied and thrilled by its gripping climax presented by a spectacular forest fire which is so vividly real that it’s hard to believe it’s on the screen and not an actual existence.

There’s a shade of disappointment at the opening.
You expect to see an old time story told in the old time way. But it soon develops into an interesting bit of entertainment with a new twist here and a clever touch there, all helping to arouse the spectator to a pitch of excitement which is produced by the climax.

One of the best things in the picture is the antics of a cub and a funny little dog. These two little animals seem to have the effect of linking the characters of the story into a closer sympathy in the mind of the audience. Detail throughout is carefully observed even in the matter of showing the animals grown up.
They are identical in appearance with the animals used in the earlier sequence.

But the picture’s feature is by all means the forest fire. And this is worth seeing in itself. The huge trees are seen falling in the flames and in one bit particularly a tree, which doesn’t seem to be more than a few yards away from the camera, is suddenly enveloped in flames which die away, leaving the charred wood. The cast is a fine one and it may be said that Betty Blythe does some of the best work of her career toward the close of the picture, while Lon Chaney and Lewis S. Stone do very well.

Nanette and her father have lived on the charity of Duncan McDougall and when “Buck” McDougall, his son, is refused by Nanette, he hires Marat to tell her that her sweetheart Raoul, has died in the North.
Nanette and Buck are about to be married when Raoul returns. Later during a fight with Buck and Marat, Raoul kills the latter and escapes with Nanette, now his wife.

They live happily until discovered by Buck who puts Corporal O’Connor of the Mounted Police and former suitor of Nanette, on the trail of the fugitive.
O’Connor is about to carry out the law when a forest fire threatens to destroy them. During the fight for life Raoul saves O’Connor’s life and when the fire is over the officer of the law agrees to swear that he saw Raoul perish in the fire where in reality Buck has met his death. Nanette, her husband and baby return to their mountain home.

Plenty to Talk About in This and Should have Extended Run

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

“Nomads of the North” is by all means an audience picture, one that should be good for an extended run because it’s one of those pictures that reap the benefit of word-of-mouth advertising. And those who see it will surely talk about it and want their friends to see it. They’ll rave about the little cub and dog especially in the moments where they are shown alone at their tricks and where they fall out of the canoe and are washed down stream, leashed to each other.

Tell them it’s another of James Oliver Curwood’s stories of the North. Mention the name of Lewis Stone, who will be remembered for his splendid dual role in “The River’s End” and give Betty Blythe a share of prominence as well as Lon Chaney, who does good work and recall his performance in “The Miracle Man.” Promise them a thrill in the fire sequence.
You can stand back of all you say along these lines.

FOREWORD

Through all generations, from time lost in the dim, dark ages of the past, one great and wonderful virtue has stood forth triumphantly above the myriad of those things which have brought us joy upon this earth—and where that virtue is not found, 'tis like unto the light hidden in darkness of night, unhappiness broods over all and with its mournful mantle brings existence to naught—and when the virtue is betrayed the dregs of life are drawn in bitter cups leaving us forsaken and forlorn, and happiness is but a memory—faint indistinct, and then forever gone.

Powerful, yet frail in human hands and hearts, is that virtue—FAITH—Faith in love, in life, in death, Faith in human kind, Faith in God.

On such a theme is this story built—humbly striving to picture Faith in mankind lost, Faith betrayed and then regained, using simple characters from life's melting-pot and following them through days of darkest sin until the mighty virtue grips them fast.

Weaving the play from his own powerful theme, which was years in the moulding, Mr. William Christy Cabanne is responsible for this human document, and to him is due all credit it shall deserve.

SUPPORT ...... Very fine with a number of com-

EXTERIORS ..................... Very good INTERIORS ....................... Satisfactory
DETAIL ...... Great when it comes to the comedy bits
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Crooks reform under refining influence of small town folk
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,961 feet

The splendid comedy detail introduced in the opening reels of "The Jailbird" serves to give it a fine start on the road to success. The scenes showing Douglas MacLean, as Clancy, sweeping up the floor of the warden’s office in the prison strike many comedy lights, due the careful treatment accorded them and the fine business of MacLean. The manner in which he breaks jail, by mingling with visitors, is another sequence that is big in a comedy sense.

But the laughs come thicker and faster when Clancy and his pal, Burns, land in a middle western town whither they have taken themselves to look into Clancy’s inheritance. Here there are a number of comedy “hick” types introduced that render MacLean fine assistance. They show them following Clancy and Burns all over Main Street and the comedy seems to grow better with each flash of this “parade.”

This fine comedy keeps up until Clancy and Burns decide to operate the town paper and go straight. But at this point the comedy is shunted to one side to give the plot the right of way and, regrettably, the plot isn’t any where near as interesting as the comedy business. A resentment stirs in the town against Clancy’s efforts to brighten it up and so the two crooks decide to work the oil swindle game.

Through a lot of business that isn’t as funny as it might be, they succeed in winning the confidence, and the money, of the rubes and are about to beat it with the proceeds of their scheme, despite the fact that each has fallen in love, when the fake oil well becomes a gusher in reality. Clancy takes this as a sign that they are being protected by an unseen hand. His reform is then complete and he leaves the girl of his heart to serve out his sentence. He gets back in the pen the same way he got out, by mingling with visitors, and so the picture ends with another fine laugh.

Doris May’s role as the small town girl isn’t very big but she handles it satisfactorily. Lew Morrison is very good as Burns, while William Courtright, Wilbur Higby, Otto Hoffman, Monty Collins and Bert
Woodruff are all splendid in the rube comedy parts.

You Can Promise Them Much with This and It Will Back You Up

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

All the pictures in which Douglas MacLean and Doris May have appeared have possessed distinctive comedy merit and these two co-stars are firmly established. Thus the mere display of their names will serve to draw the crowds. They will come expecting another comedy of the same distinctive character as the others and they won’t be disappointed by any means for “The Jailbird” has laughs a plenty and they are all something a bit out of the ordinary.

The picture is weak in its middle part, but for all that the beginning is so fine and the ending so good that the more or less dry action in the center is easily forgotten. Considering this you can go the limit on “The Jailbird,” promising your audiences another fine comedy of the same type as former MacLean-May pictures.

"Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge" is a generally worthy production having as its ultimate objective, not plain entertainment, but a plea that the various political parties of the nation get together to bring about a lasting peace, to be maintained by a League of Nations.

The point is made that the war was fought for nothing, that American boys have died in vain because a partisan congress failed to arrive at the same conclusions regarding the proper method of preserving peace. Naturally, this isn't drama but obvious propaganda. There are many in the country who think the League of Nations just as bad as Margaret Prescott Montague, the author thinks it Utopian.

The message of "Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge" is delivered in a drama, at times allegorical in conception, that is often potently moving. The sequence which precedes the scene wherein Uncle Sam learns of his son's death is handled with powerfully sustained effect. It provides an emotional thrill that will bring tears to the eyes.

Uncle Sam is a simple mountaineer of the south. After his son has made the sacrifice he becomes imbued with the spirit of his country. In the uniform of Uncle Sam, the symbol of the United States, he becomes at once representative of his country and the simplicity of his own self.

Then there comes the armistice and general rejoicing in which Uncle Sam gladly takes part but in the following months his spirit gradually sinks as the "quibble" in Washington grows. Eventually, when he learns of the League's defeat by the Senate, he takes his own life. A pretty bit of fiction is then introduced suggesting that the people at large are mourning the death of Uncle Sam. And in 1935, you are given to understand that the League of Nations is in full swing.

None of the popular elements of the war drama have been omitted from the story. There is a prominent romance between Uncle Sam's son and his adopted daughter. There is the slacker villain and a quiet hero who must remain at home despite his desire to go, and there is some comedy (at times very much overdone) in which a half wit is the principal figure. This character is also brought into the allegory at the end—perhaps representative of the Senate.

William D. Corbett's characterization of Uncle Sam is generally pleasing and Paul Kelly does nice work as his son. George MacQuarrie as the stay-at-home hero is good and Helen Flint as the girl, displays flashes of fine work. Eugene Keith appears as the half wit, while others are Leslie Hunt, Sheridan Tansey, Jack Newton, and Nicholas Burnham.

The Wilson-Democrats Will Doubtless Lend a Helping Hand
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you want to set the purely entertaining picture aside for a few days and substitute in its stead one that combines drama and propaganda, you should succeed with this—if you are a sincere Wilsonite. Considering the co-operation that it received from such national figures as William G. McAdoo, Oscar Straus and George Creel, at its premier New York showing, you will have little trouble in inducing local members of the Democratic party to give you their assistance in putting the picture over.

With this political backing you will be able to get more than the usual amount of publicity in the Democratic papers. Playing the picture as straight entertainment will hardly do, inasmuch as it makes a big point of the League, while both author and producer confess that the production was motivated by a desire to bring the necessity of such a society of nations home to the public.

September 20, 1920

Stanley Company of America,
Palace Theatre Building,

Gentlemen:

THIS company has been given to understand that by reason of the policy adopted by you, you have refused to enter into negotiations for any contracts for film service for the season 1920-1921 in the Pennsylvania territory, consisting of the State of Pennsylvania and adjoining states, except with such companies controlled, owned, booked or managed by you.

In recent years investigation reveals that you have gradually built up an organization of film distribution which consists of a combination of distributing and booking companies which are either owned, controlled or managed by your company or in conjunction with certain film producing and rental companies with whom you have made booking and releasing combinations and also by means of exacting a booking fee from theatres for all film service furnished to such theatres regardless of whether or not you were instrumental in furnishing the service, and your operations have been carried on with the idea of dominating the distribution and booking of motion pictures in the Pennsylvania territory so as to practically boycott the product of any other distributor or booker except those in your organization or combination. We now discover that up to the present you have used the product of this company so long as you deemed it advisable to help build up your monopolistic organization, and now that you feel that it has served its purpose you are prepared to discard it and to refuse to deal further with us or to distribute or exhibit our pictures in that territory, and to exert unlawful influence to exclude our product from that territory.

It has never been the policy or the desire of this company to assist in the formation of monopolies; on the contrary, our policy has always been a free field for all, free and open competition, and unrestricted trading. That is the only policy that can make for a healthy up-building of this industry and the freedom of the exhibitor to book, exhibit and present to audiences the best product in the market regardless by whom produced, exploited, distributed or booked. Under your policy the exhibitors in the Pennsylvania territory are practically compelled to limit themselves to the exhibition of only such product as you agree to give them and are intimidated into subjecting themselves to your arbitrary conduct by fear of being boycotted and driven out of business. In other words, it is the choice of either taking such films as you will book them, or being deprived of any booking whatever.

The statement has been made by your representatives to our representatives that you will be unable to deal with us because you have so much material on hand that you will not be prepared to make any arrangements for films until after January, 1921. It is clear to us that this statement is not made in good faith, but is merely a subterfuge that is being used by you for the purpose of keeping our product out of that territory. There are certain outstanding open contracts between our company and yours for a number of engagements for pictures to be played. These contracts will be fully performed by us; we will, however, not consent to further any monopoly controlled or projected by you, or anybody else.

We wish to make our position quite clear. Inasmuch as you refuse to deal with this company, we intend to enter the market in the Pennsylvania territory and will deal with every exhibitor in that territory directly, in a fair, open, honest manner, and to compete fairly with the product which you or anybody else intends to release in management of his house, and by cut-throat, blackjack and monopolistic methods the exhibitor very soon is compelled to give up fifty per cent or more of his theatre or be driven out of the motion picture exhibition line.

"Exhibitors will remember in 1908 and succeeding years my tremendous effort and the long, up-hill battle against the General Film Company and the Motion Picture Patents Company to keep the business open and free to competition."

"The then growing success and popularity of the motion picture was the result of the splendid competitive opportunities afforded to any person or set of persons in the production of pictures that would entertain and educate. In the regular course of events this condition permitted the exhibitor to make a handsome profit and to build up a substantial business. The exhibitor was his own boss."

"Twelve years ago a combination of men attempted to strangle the industry and to create an all-powerful monopoly. Fortunately for the public and the exhibitor, and I feel free to state largely due to my effort, this attempt resulted in disaster. The group of men who by every means endeavored to take possession of the motion..."

that territory, and we shall expect you to respect our rights to deal in this manner and to refrain from in any manner influencing any exhibitors in that territory not to deal with us, either directly or indirectly, and we shall likewise respect your legal rights and your right to free, honest, open competition.

In this connection we wish to give you warning that if you indulge in tactics of notifying, directly or indirectly, any theatres or places of amusement owned, operated, conducted or booked by you, or in which you may in any manner be interested, that they are not to have any business relations with us, or if, by any conduct on your part directly or indirectly, you cause a boycott of our product in that territory by refusing to serve exhibitors with the films you control or release or are interested in if such exhibitors deal with the product of this company, or if you directly or indirectly cause any owners of theatres or exhibitors not controlled by you to refuse to deal with this company and refuse to use our film service through fear of refusal on your part to furnish them with films which you control or book, or if you exact or attempt to exact a booking fee from any exhibitors for film service which we supply directly to exhibitors without the aid of your association or combination, or if you in any other manner restrain lawful trade and competition in the exploitation, distribution and exhibition of motion picture film, we shall most assuredly avail ourselves of every legal right and every legal remedy at our disposal to maintain a free and open market and free, healthy, open competition.

Very truly yours,

WITH REFERENCE TO BOOKING AGENTS

picture industry in every branch were brought before the United States Courts and their monopoly was ordered dissolved, and the screen was free again. Then once more the exhibitor became boss of his theatre.

"Today the exhibitor is confronted with a more daring and dastardly attempt to dominate his business. The formation of booking companies to deal with distributors in group bookings spells the stagnation of the industry should it meet with favor by exhibitors. A group of booking offices in the principal sections of America would soon control the motion picture industry in every branch. The exhibitor would be the biggest loser.

"The American public will not support a monopoly in the art of the motion picture. No longer would the exhibitor be the boss of his theatre. The booking agency trust would boss and command the picture theatres after kicking the exhibitors into business oblivion.

"Every branch of the business lends itself to absolute domination if the nation-wide booking agency trust is an established fact. No longer would progress be the guiding star of the industry. In its place would come greed, the tyrannical domination by a small group of men, and the elimination of the exhibitor of today.

"Fox Film Corporation places itself on record as absolutely opposed to group bookings with all booking agencies. It will deal exclusively with the exhibitor direct.

"No person or persons or company is authorized to use the name of Fox Film Corporation or the undersigned in the promotion of booking agency schemes. It was reported from two sections of the United States that booking agency promoters had promised Fox pictures, which is an indication of the misleading, unauthorized and greedy tactics that are being used.

"The Fox Film Corporation and the undersigned stand on record for free and competitive dealing in the motion picture industry. We are opposed to monopoly in any form.

"We hope the above has made our position clear.

"Very truly yours,

"FOX FILM CORPORATION

CHARACTER OF STORY ............................................. Melodrama concerning northern and southern characters during Civil War days

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ................................. 5,526 feet

"Held by the Enemy" is a stirring old Civil War melodrama of many climaxes and thrilling moments. The action is extremely complicated due to the large number of characters and the fact that the picture is really divided into sections, each having its individual climax. This form of construction is a bit old style. Plays and pictures written in the present day usually build steadily to the one grand climax, developing perhaps, several lesser thrills as the action proceeds. At the time that "Held by the Enemy" was produced as a play, it was customary to have four acts and each one of these wound up with a thrill and all were about equal in power. If the producers had seen fit to simplify the play in some respects, to impart to it a better balance, the action would have been more sustained and less choppy.

The action centers about the home of Captain Gordon Hayne of the Confederate army. His wife, Rachel, has received the report of his death. As her love for him was never dominant she mourns him only as a soldier lost to the southern cause. Rachel meets Colonel Charles Prescott of the Union army, an old admirer, when the northern forces take the town. She signifies her love for him but the night he is coming to propose, Hayne reappears.

Hayne is captured and in the court martial, presided over by Surgeon Fielding, another admirer of Rachel's, he is sentenced to be shot as a spy but not until Fielding has reflected discredit on the honesty of Prescott by revealing the fact that he is in love with Hayne's wife.

The course of battle then upsets this situation and when next Hayne is introduced, he appears as a prisoner in a hospital presided over by Fielding. He has a severe wound in his neck. Rachel and Hayne's mother report the death of Hayne and receive a permit from the commanding officer to carry his body home. As the stretcher is borne through the hospital, Fielding demands the formality of an examination of the body. There is an exceedingly intense scene, during which Fielding again endeavors to reflect discredit on Prescott's character, implying that he is in a plot to smuggle Hayne out of the hospital alive. The commanding officer finally uncovers Hayne. And he is, in reality, dead, having torn the bandage from his throat, thus sacrificing himself that Rachel might be happy with Prescott.

Jack Holt as Prescott, Agnes Ayres as Rachel, Lewis Stone as Hayne and Wanda Hawley and Walter Hiers in comedy parts, all do fine work. Others are Josephine Crowell, Lillian Leighton, Robert Cain, Robert Brewer and Clarence Geldart.

Many Box Office Angles to This

Civil War pictures may be a bit passe in the mind of the public, but once they are brought in to see "Held by the Enemy" its pretty sure of providing them with a heaping portion of entertainment... Despite the choppiness of the action the thrills are all definite and are handled very skilfully. And there is some fine comedy between Walter Hiers and Wanda Hawley to balance the action.

"Held by the Enemy" is also a good card at the gate. The name of the play, its author and the fact that he wrote the successful "Secret Service" will all help to bring in the crowds. Again you have a fine cast to advertise here. Not only the featured players but the majority of the others in the cast are well known. A list of them makes an imposing array that will certainly attract the attention.
The story of a mighty love that grew out of hatred; the story of a powerful man who won a woman's heart after he had defeated her in a battle for a Continent.

Very Familiar Story Handled Poorly in All Departments

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Concerns the Wall Street upstart and his snobbish wife, who later grows to love him
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 4,690 feet

"The Marriage Pit" presents the very old story of the financial upstart who marries a girl of social rank.
She refuses to have anything to do with him for a time, believing his money bought her from her bankrupt father, but at the end she sees the bigness of him and confesses her love for him.

Such a story is one of the old favorites but conventionality of this type can often be made a virtue by careful treatment of the plot and skilful production.
"The Marriage Pit" has received neither of these first aids. In fact the development of the story and the quality of the direction fail even to approach the average mark. There is no sustained interest, no steady building to climaxes, hardly a single scene is handled with regard to its dramatic possibilities.

Nor does "The Marriage Pit" possess the redeeming feature of a valuable production. The interiors are often just corners of settings and fail to create any sort of a realistic background. The supporting cast, too, is inefficient. The "society" folk, the blue bloods, have very crude manners while on the other hand the hero, supposedly a social upstart, appears very polished. As a result of all these mistakes little of the picture is convincing or entertaining.

Frank Mayo stands way above the rest of the picture. His performance is finished, the work of a capable actor. He appears as Strong, a young man who has made a sensational success in Wall Street. There are several scenes showing Strong supposedly bucking the market, but how he does it is never made clear.

Eventually he marries Elinor, daughter of an old Knickerbocker family, who treats him shamefuly believing him not her equal. This doesn’t register at all for the above mentioned reason that there is nothing about Elinor to indicate superiority and nothing about Strong to signify crudity.

After this the action switches into the old situation of the husband striving to win his wife. Her attentions favor the weakling villain, introduced as another social lion, who never for a moment creates such an impression. In the end through some minor turn in the action Elinor discovers the real man in Strong and casts the villain out. A climax should come here but "The Marriage Pit" just drifts on to a commonplace ending, rising to no heights.

The cast includes, Lilian Tucker, Ray Ripley, Frederick Vroom, Hal Wilson, Dagmar Godowsky, Belle Stoddard Johnson, Boyd Irwin, Robert Dunbar, Judson Vernon and Will Herford.

Frank Mayo is Only Attraction You Have to Offer Here

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Marriage Pit" is so weak in all departments that it is exceedingly unlikely that it will get over very well in any class of picture house. Even the smaller theaters and those catering to audiences of inferior intelligence are able to procure productions generally better made than this. You may find some crowds that will sit through it quietly and not register any great kicks but the chances of getting by with it are few.

Frank Mayo’s name constitutes probably the only box office attraction of the picture. Mayo doubtless has a following and deservedly so, for his work always shows to good advantage and continues to do so even in this picture. However, he certainly deserves better opportunities and higher class surroundings that those offered him in "The Marriage Pit." Those attracted by his name will hardly be satisfied with the picture served out to them here.
HALF A CHANCE

For a week nothing of moment interrupted the even tenor of his existence; he led the life of a savage and found it to his liking, pounced upon turtles and cooked them, kept his fire going because he had but few matches. Lying before the blaze at night, near a little spring, he told himself that this was better than being behind prison bars; true, he lacked company, he had known worse solitude — the "solid lain on the hard stones; only he could reach — the unknown in a fleeting —
A man's man and yet a woman's man! He could, and did, fight like a whirlwind; strong, masterful, and unafraid. Yet there was in him gentleness, honor and modesty, and his chivalry was no less than his strength in winning woman's love.

By shipwreck he found himself; and on a desert isle developed the half a chance and made it whole. He learned to conquer himself, and thus to conquer his surroundings, his future and the Woman.

Here is a great picture, for both men and women. It is turbulent with struggle, passions, love, hate and revenge. It has in it the salty tang of the wide spaces of the sea; man both elemental and refined; the play of wits in the court room, and the play of emotions in the parlor.

It is a great picture.

Both, he would fall back upon, among the flowers. But the profligate indulgence began to have a marked effect on store; bottle after bottle was tossed or empty shells flung aside to the daisies. Length the day came when only two bottles

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,137 feet

"The Wonderful Chance" appears to be by all odds the best starring picture that Eugene O'Brien has had.
Many elements enter into its success, the most prominent of which are the story and the skilful direction.
The story is a crook melodrama showing the star in a dual role. It has been developed with such surety and effectiveness that the usual loopholes of the dual role plot are hardly to be noticed.

Archainbaud's direction has not only emphasized the high lights of the plot to a fine degree but has also been responsible, in a great sense, for the fine appearance made by the star. O'Brien needs careful handli-ing, particularly as to camera angles. In his dual role here he shows to very fine advantage.

O'Brien appears as "Swagger" Barlow, erstwhile safe-cracker desirous of going straight. He turns a final trick to help a pal who lies dangerously wounded and then determines to leave his old life. Walking the streets he realizes that he is being followed by Haggerty, a detective and his old enemy. Believing that Haggerty must have the goods on him, Barlow ducks into a hotel and is instantly mistaken for Lord Birmingham. He accepts the mistake, believing it is only for the moment, and takes refuge in the rooms set aside for Birmingham.

In the meantime Birmingham has been abducted by crooks, the leader of who plans to impersonate him himself. Barlow, realizing that the mistake has afforded him a wonderful chance to leave his past behind him, attends the functions arranged for Birmingham and on one particular occasion falls in love with Peggy Winton. But he sees that the deception can not go on for ever and soon after he goes to where Birmingham is held captive and changes places with him.

Matters are brought to a climax, touched lightly with good comedy, when the leader of the crooks drags Barlow to the Winton home, believing him the real Birmingham, and desiring to show up the man he believes is Barlow. Barlow makes a clean confession and is forgiven. Peggy sends him away to make good in reality.

The double exposure stuff in which Barlow unites Birmingham and walks across the whole scene back of him is great—nothing like it seen before.

Martha Mansfield makes an appealing Peggy, while others who appear are Tom Blake, Rudolph De Valentino, Joe Flannigan and Warren Cook.

An Honest-to-Goodness "Audience" Picture

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Wonderful Chance" is an excellent picture from the audience point of view. Its romantic, adventurous character, its well developed story with its series of punches, certainly stamp it as the best production in which O'Brien has appeared since becoming a star.

O'Brien has been hurt considerably by poor pictures but if you find his name still a drawing card you can certainly go the limit here. Play him up big, get them in and they'll surely like it.

If, on the other hand, you don't care to concentrate so much on the star dwell on the fact that H. H. Van Loan is the author of the picture. His name, by this time, ought to be worth quite a bit at the box office.

You have another pretty good name from the box office point of view in Martha Mansfield. She has done several pictures and is a well known beauty.
Star's Performance and Personality Makes Up for Familiar Story Material

Viola Dana in "BLACKMAIL" Screen Classics—Metro

DIRECTOR .................. Dallas M. Fitzgerald
AUTHOR .................. Lucia Chamberlain
SCENARIO BY .............. A. S. LeVino
CAMERAMAN ................ John Arnold
AS A WHOLE .............. Not at all original, but offers satisfactory entertainment of its kind

STORY .................. Adapted from Saturday Evening Post story; slow at first but improves as it progresses

DIRECTION ................ Generally good PHOTOGRAPHY .............. Night stuff poor LIGHTINGS .................. All right CAMERA WORK .............. Adequate

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......................... 5,710 feet

The pretty blackmailer who falls in love with the object of her proposed “fleecing” and fails to go through with her plan and then is worried by the villain, her accomplice, whom she deserts, is not at all new to picture audiences. The same theme has been used several times. But despite its story, “Blackmail” doesn’t turn out to be as uninteresting as at first you may expect. The performance of the star and her usual delightful personality manage to get it over in pretty fair shape.

The continuity isn’t always what it might be or perhaps the cutter is to blame, for there are one or two gaps that, while they don’t disconcert to any great extent, cause a break for the time being. However, there isn’t anything very difficult to follow in “Blackmail,” so probably this will make little difference. The direction generally is pretty good although the attempts as comedy aren’t as funny as the titles try to make them.

Flossie Golden’s (Viola Dana) father, a professional crook, is shot by a “copper” and dies after warning his daughter never to let the cops get her and to always judge snid gentleman by his feet and not his face, whereupon, Flossie carries out the warning by looking first at the feet of each person she meets. She has also been requested to stick to Larry, her father’s partner.

The first object of this partnership is a young “rich and foolish” who completely loses his head for the pretty Flossie but his rich aunt fears for his safety, so the susceptible James is sent West, while Richard Harding, the aunt’s lawyer, attends to the rest. He informs Flossie, through Larry, that James will marry her whereupon, Flossie’s vision of a Rolls Royce fades into a flivver, and they give up all hope for success on that job.

But Harding is suspicious. Flossie plans to “get” Harding and through his influence secures the position as companion to Jimmie’s aunt. Harding becomes very attentive and Flossie really “falls” for him and they are happily married until Larry appears on the scene and tries to collect from Flossie for his silence relative to her past life. But Harding knows all about his little wife whom he forges while Larry is escorted away by a “copper.”

There are some spots where the photography is very poor, especially the night stuff which is badly blurred and there are one or two sets that are not effectively lighted. Wyndham Standing as Harding, does well but is not suited to such a light role. Others are Alfred Allen, Edward Cecil, Florence Turner, Jack Roi, Lydia Knott and Fred Kelsey.

Will Probably Satisfy. Star’s Name Your Best Bet

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The Box Office value of “Blackmail” is entirely dependent upon the star. If she has a large following in your house then you will just have to announce her name. And if she hasn’t been seen enough to be popular you had best confine your promise to her work and pleasing personality to get this by.

There isn’t anything new or original about the story for you to talk about. The title is attractive and could be used effectively with various exploitation stunts or teaser lines run in your local newspaper. You can tell them that the picture is adapted from the story by Lucia Chamberlain and that it ran in the Saturday Evening Post. For catchlines say: “‘Blackmail’ was her object but she gave it up to fall in love with one of her victims. See Viola Dana’s latest production at the theater.”
The Man Who Makes His Pictures LIVE!

What Irvin V. Willat has achieved in "Down Home" is not only a triumph for himself but it marks the dawn of a new era in motion picture making as well. No massive production this, depending upon elaborate sets and the employing of hundreds of "extras" to "get over". Just a simple, sweet story, transformed by the genius of one man into a picture that will twine itself about the heart and live forever enshrined in the memory of everyone.

"Behind The Door", — "Below The Surface", — both were the work of Mr. Willat’s brain, and you, Mr. Exhibitor, and the world at large sealed them with the seal of your approval, for they were truly great. They were real,—they were vital,—they were human.

And here, in "Down Home", you have a picture possessed of these qualities—plus! They may make bigger pictures than "Down Home", — they can’t make better ones.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ............................. About 5,700 feet

Very expert handling of the story material here has resulted in a picture with a great big appeal to the big majority of audiences. Inasmuch as Director Charles Gilbyn always seems to come through with a picture replete with fine production values, the credit for this may well be his. He shows his knowledge of "what is wanted" right at the start when he introduces Pearl White frolicking alone in the snow. By these scenes he plants the high-spirited character of the heroine, the "Cub," and gets several laughs besides.

Throughout the story his fine handling of rather familiar sequences is obvious. The conventionality of the plot is forgotten and its elements are juggled so that the utmost in melodramatic suspense is the result. Even the scene in which Colonel Summers is fatally wounded by crooked gamblers is treated in a highly sustained fashion. Gilbyn has built it up splendidly.

The romance is between the "Cub" and David, the murdered man's son. The "Cub's" father, the "Tiger," is the man guilty of committing the crime together with Bill Slark, who desires to marry her. While they are in hiding after Summer's death, David meets and falls in love with the "Cub." But when the "Tiger" returns he forces her to marry Bill, threatening, if she refuses, to cast her invalid mother out into the snows.

The ceremony is consummated and then there is a long sequence between the "Cub" and Bill. She is afraid of him, he madly desirous of her. The suspense is certainly held up to a high pitch during this sequence but the scenes are a bit too long. Such a delicate situation might well be confined to less space. David comes to the rescue in time and while he engages Bill in a fight, the wife whom he has deserted, fires the shot that kills him. It is discovered that the "Tiger" is not really the "Cub's" father at the same time he is arrested for the murder of Summers.

The picture is benefited immensely by some fine snow scenes. The subtitles are particularly well worded, always seeming to sense the response the action will create in an audience and reflecting it.

Pearl White does some very effective work as the "Cub" while her support is unusual. Thomas Carri gan is successful as the hero. Frank Evans as the "Tiger" and J. Thornton Baston as Bill Slark are very real villains while John Davidson, John Woodford, Ruby Hoffman and Albert Tavernier are all very good in supporting roles.

Should Go Over in a Very Big Way

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you haven't yet taken the opportunity to reintroduce Pearl White to your audiences after her long absence since her last appearance in a serial, by all means take it now with "Tiger's Cub." It is a far better picture than "The White Moll," and is the sort of picture that her admirers of the past will certainly enjoy.

Miss White doesn't do any stunts stuff here, but she is always active in the story and comes through with some very effective work. But the story itself provides the suspense and the thrill. From the point of view of production value it is, in fact, one of the best pictures of its kind.

Besides playing up the star, dwell on the fine work of the supporting cast and the fact that the story takes place in Alaska. If you cater to audiences upon personalities of the business by sure to mention Charles Gilbyn. His work of the past has been meritorious and "Tiger's Cub" certainly will add to his reputation.

"MOTHER—I'VE COME HOME!"

Instinctively, you know the story—and you know, as a showman, that never before have your patrons been so eager for a real home-and-mother play—for a story that would touch every heart—for a cast that could play such a story to perfection—for a production that would satisfy in every last faithful detail.

It was MOTHER LOVE which made "The Heart of Humanity" the one great outstanding triumph of its year—Mother Love and the acting of DOROTHY PHILLIPS and MARGARET MANN—and it is Mother Love AND THESE SAME TWO SPLENDID PLAYERS which make "ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN" the biggest heart-picture of the hour today.

From small-town to big city goes the action of "ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN"—from the shabby little parlor of a village black-smith to the mighty stage of the Metropolitan and back again. And when you have come back—back home with Aurora Meridith, the gorgeous songbird whose voice will never charm the world again—you will have run the gamut of human ambitions and passions in an unequalled drama of Mother Love, whose appeal for you personally, no less than for your patrons, will live forever.

But these few minor attempts to inject something “different” into an ancient story about an innocent girl in wicked old New York fail. The story itself possesses small interest because of inferior direction and a number of actors who are not efficient. The plot, moreover, is developed through the illegitimate means of chopping an important sequence off in its middle and leaving the last part as the final explanation of the heroine. Inasmuch as she then explains she wasn’t ruined after all by the old roue the effect is rather aggravating. She scared the audience and her brother for nothing. Her brother should have spanked her. The audience will doubtless feel like spanking the author.

After the brother discovers that the possibility is his sister has been betrayed by Lord, a man who gives wild parties, he kidnaps Lord’s daughter with intent to betray also. When it comes to a show-down, though, he can’t do it. The girl’s weakling fiancé enters, raps him on the head and departs with the girl. She, however, must go back to him and offer assistance. Then the sister, guided by her fiancé appears and says that Lord only scared her into flight. She believed he had fallen and killed himself in his pursuit of her. Lord reforms, the innocent and her fiancé are happy while the brother mates off with Lord’s daughter.

The cast isn’t exceptional. Corliss Giles as the brother is satisfactory and Henry Sedley is good as Lord. Diana Allen doesn’t put any expression into her work as the innocent. Gilbert Rooney as her fiancé is quite poor. Gladys Coburn, Harold Forshay and Gaspard Hicks are in support.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"VOICES"
Victor Kremer Prod.—State Rights
Sensationalism and freak advertising possibilities are elements that must be considered in a state rights picture. "Voices" isn’t a very big title for a picture and considering the contents of the story, a more sensational one could have been selected, suggesting the innocent girl’s experience in New York.
Perhaps "Voices" was fastened on to create possibilities to cash in on the prevailing discussions regarding spiritualism and all that. But such advertising would be largely misleading. It isn't treated in any serious or skilful way, this question of voices from another world.
From the entertainment standpoint "Voices" is very poor. In neither story nor direction is there any real skill displayed. It has a few scenes of revelry but they are not startlingly pretentious. The poor direction of some scenes may cause laughter.

After an absence of quite some time when she appeared in “The Heart of Humanity” which was such a splendid success, Dorothy Phillips returns to the screen in a story different from anything she has done in some time. “Once to Every Woman” is a story of plain folks with big ambitions for their oldest and talented daughter, who sings in the village choir. From an atmosphere of rural home life, where peace and calm prevail, director Holubar builds his story to a spectacular and really gripping climax which is bound to get over in a big way, inasmuch as he works up to it in a logical and thoroughly smooth manner.

Announce the Star’s Return and Tell Them They’ll Like It

Folks will surely remember the star’s work in “The Heart of Humanity” in which case they will certainly want to see her latest production, especially in view of the fact that she has been absent from the screen in the meantime. Also mention Mr. Holubar’s name, for he is well known for his previous work. Promise them a story with plenty of heart appeal and play up the mother love angle, for it plays a big part in the story of “Once to Every Woman.”

There is one possible objection to the ending. The opera singer loses her voice and then her admirers, so she returns to her home where she is welcomed and she realizes that a home and the love of her people is worth more than fame. That seems to be a fitting conclusion but they add a touch of pathos by having the heroine suffer the death of her mother and through some miracle her voice is restored. This is all right but not apparently necessary to prove the moral intended, and merely seems to drag things a bit after what seemed to be the ending.

Miss Phillips appears to splendid advantage in the role of the young girl. Rudolph Valentino does some very good work as does the entire cast. The photography is very fine and there are some very artistic effects. The climax which is staged supposedly on the stage of the Metropolitan is lavish, depicting an Oriental operatic setting.

A wealthy New York woman becomes interested in the talented Aurora Meredith (Miss Phillips), soloist of the village choir, and sends her abroad to study. At the end of the third year, her benefactress dies and Aurora is forced to accept the aid of Jullan- tino, an Italian admirer, or go back to her home in America. Later when Aurora has become famous Jullantino proposes marriage but is refused.

To escape the Italian, the singer comes to America, and is given the stellar role in a new opera. On the night of the opening the persistent admirer makes his appearance and begs Aurora to marry him and is again repulsed. He occupies a box at the opening performance and at the climax of the opera shoots at the singer, then kills himself. As a result of the wound Aurora loses her voice and one by one, her friends desert her.

As a last resort she returns to her home where she is welcomed by her family and her childhood sweetheart played effectively by Robert Anderson.

Talk about the variety of scene, from the small modest New England home to the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House and the life of an opera singer. Stills showing the opera staged especially for the production, should attract. Catchlines relative to the title should be effective. You might say: “What is it that is ‘Once to Every Woman’? Dorothy Phillips will tell you in her latest production.”

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 5,800 feet

"The Guest of Hercules" by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, the story upon which "Passion's Playground" is based, is written around one trick situation. There are two women bearing the same name. One has a cloudy past and when she is accused of it before her husband she switches the blame over to the other, the heroine.

In the writing of a story around this situation it is probable that the Williamsons enjoyed themselves very much. And doubtless their facile and popular magazine style of writing made the original story very good reading. However, the plot was plainly manufactured. That much is obvious from the film. Deprived of words the palpably mechanical character of the plot shows at all times. The Williamsons might have dismissed various twists and turns of the plot lightly or gotten over them convincingly by the power of their style, but bared on the films it doesn't move smoothly.

The story concerns Mary Grant, a convent girl, who leaves to see the world and whose first stop is Monte Carlo. This is the playground of passion referred to.
The subtitles are very much inclined to pound this passion business until it becomes tiresome.

Mary meets Prince Vanno, who falls in love with her. They have some misunderstanding resulting from the fact that the prince mistakes Mary's character, but this is ultimately smoothed over. The prince's brother has married the other Mary Grant from the convent and a distant cousin of his who desired to marry him herself digs up this Mary's past. When she confronts her with it, Mary, the heroine, is her guest and the guilty woman passes the blame off on her. Heroine Mary then flees to a village where she is eventually rescued from crooks by the prince, who has learned that his sister-in-law's words of accusation were false.

The production, with its distinctly foreign atmosphere and various good performances on the part of those in the cast, fail to cover up the mechanical character of the plot or smooth it out.

Katherine MacDonald is beautiful to behold as the heroine and plays with good effect at all times. Norman Kerry is the prince, while Nell Craig is the other Mary and Rudolph de Valentina, her husband. Edwin Stevens and Virginia Ainsworth, besides appearing as the crooks, have some good comedy scenes. Others are Alice Wilson, Howard Gaye, Fanny Ferrari, Sylvia Jocelyn and Walt Whitman.

Should Draw Big—Will Give Just Average Satisfaction

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The audience in the theater where this was reviewed, a typical picture audience in many senses, seemed to take great interest in the start of "Pass-ion's Playground," but after its first two reels had passed it didn't seem to pay a great lot of attention
This was chiefly for the reason that most of the people knew what was coming. After the planting of the two names, the fact that one of the girls had a past, and their relationship, there was little to do but sit back and wait until the weaker one accused the other.

The picture is not wholly disappointing. The audience mentioned didn't seem altogether displeased. It liked some of it. All of which brings it down to a case of an average picture. The name of the star and the title will certainly draw—and may draw unusually well. And the picture itself will be averagely received.
He's the biggest star in motion picture comedies today.

"Pirate Gold"—Pathé

Instead of having episode eight of this serial wind up with the hero in a predicament in which he is confronted with disaster, they have the villain plunge a dagger into his heart and the finish sees the leading woman leaning over him. Of course, every fan will know that some method of bringing him back to life will be developed, but it nevertheless makes them want to see just how it can be done. Action is plentiful in the production, which retains its light character at all times.

George B. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot team well together and the cafe near the docks makes a good locale for this section of the story.

"The Dragon's Net"—Universal

Episode 9 of this serial, "Trailed to Peking," has the same fault that was visible in the earlier episodes, namely, the indistinctness of the entire affair, due either to poor photography or bad lighting facilities. Almost all of the exteriors are too dark and the characters or edifices are difficult to see in more than one scene. Universal must be given credit for attempting something out of the ordinary in drawn-out dramas, for this is in the nature of a serial. The Oriental atmosphere maintained will help, but there will, in all likelihood, be complaints about the technical end of it.

"The Flaming Disc"—Universal

Chinese dens appeal to the fancies of serial patrons and seldom is an episode production seen without some scenes taken in one of these places replete with trap-doors, instruments of torture, mysterious devices and hidden chambers. Whoever conceived the scheme of the sixth section of this, however, has outdone most of the other authors of such stories, having thought up a new device, whereby intruders are catapulted into a stream where a hungry alligator completes the destruction for the villainous gent. Elmo Lincoln, starred in it, plays a dual role, but in the sixth as in the fifth there are practically no double exposures, most of it being straight stuff. Ending the fifth portion, the lion scene is quite original. As for the alligator stuff, some of that is rather gruesome. It furnishes plenty of thrills, however, and that is what they want.

"Marimba Land"—Prizma

Prizma's cameraman has visited Guatemala for this subject which is one of the better recent releases of this organization. The languid, rural atmosphere of the land, coupled with some picturesque scenes and interesting information about the customs of the people all combine in making this a satisfactory offering of its type. These productions are favorably regarded by most audiences, colored pictures being quite popular at the present time. The tints are in some places dull, but the general effect will probably be favorable.

"City Life in Summer"—Hy Mayer—Capitol Travelaugh

For another of his Travelaugh which will be released by Pathé and appended to one of the "Reviews" issued by that organization, Hy Mayer has chosen common city summer scenes. While not the best of the series, the offering possesses the same sort of humor that was evident in the others, and is quite acceptable. City audiences will probably appreciate it more than others, for the material included is of the sort that will register most effectively with people who are familiar with city life. The scheme of speeding up the portion showing the going on of the excursion steamer, while not new, is one of the biggest laughs in the reel which has as its predominating feature, novelty.

"A Blue Ribbon Mutt"—Universal

Chase material novel in character is not frequently seen in recent days, but "Peking," this Universal two reeler has a wealth of footage of that type. Brownie, the human hound, is prominent in the piece which is replete with gags that are certain to amuse. A blase group in a projection room showed its approval of this novelty and when such a crowd laughs at a comedy, a theater audience is sure to follow the example. When the principal comedian assumes the position of one who has hung himself, and suddenly removes the rope stepping forth, one good bit is offered. The spectacle of the copper, official of the dog show and fleeing intruder running in and out among a set of pipes of large proportions, the sudden manner in which they appear and disappear as well as several other scenes all get over in fine shape. This is one of the best issues of the series and will prove a valuable addition to a program which needs some slapstick comedy to liven it up.

"The Scarecrow"—Buster Keaton Comedy—Metro

There's not an awful lot to it, but "The Scarecrow" measures up to the standard of short reel subjects. The first reel is by far the better portion inasmuch as it gets done in the new bit hit in the comedy line on the screen, although it has been done in vaudeville to a lesser degree inasmuch as the opportunities afforded in pictures are greater. The second reel is just straight slapstick that doesn't register many laughs.

Laughs a-plenty come in the first reel, which shows the home of Keaton and his pal—the home consists of one room which is used up to serve the purposes of dining room, kitchen and bathroom. The way the couch becomes a bathtub and how the water from the tub spills out the side of the house and forms a pond for the ducks, together with other tricks along this order afford considerable amusement.

"The Cloud"—Paramount—Post Nature Scene

And still they come. One more beautiful than the other but surely "The Cloud" is about the most beautiful scenic yet presented. The photography is exceptional. There is not the slightest bit of nature revealed, one after another. There are several shots that look like living paintings. The scenes consist of not only some gorgeous views of clouds, but shots of placid water and natural beauties of lakes that have not been surpassed.

"Dynamite"—Mermaid—Educational

This is the kind of a comedy that you'll laugh at because you can't help it. Try and keep a straight face. It can't be done. The laughs are spontaneous and come one right after the other in rapid succession and it's not old stuff. To be sure, some of the tricks have been done before but there's also a lot that are new. The antics of "Ham" catching fine fish in a shallow little brook by dropping flies for the fish and having them jump right into his hands and later his "peaceful" job as foreman in a powder factory, together with the titles that also get laughs, make "Dynamite" among the leaders in this type comedy offering. Book it by all means.

"June Madness"—Rolin—Pathé

In this series of single reel comedies, if the first may be used as a criterion, Rolin has a good bet. Whenever girl comedies are mentioned now-a-days the chances are in the cases out of ten, that bathing-girl offerings are alluded to and that some more exposed-naked productions are going to be presented to the public which has seen more than enough of them. Here, however, if a picture in which the damsels do not sport the scant attire, but which nevertheless produces the desired result. The theme of the piece, while not strictly new, holds interest nicely and the oped with which it is clothed are in themselves funny enough to keep his interest at a satisfactory pace. Most of the girls are attractive enough, while the principal comedian holds his role up acceptably.
Pathé Review, No. 72

Unusually effective, are two of the shots included in the colored scenic which opens this Pathé Review. Dinan, France, is the locale of it and a number of commendable bits of footage combine in making it one of the best things of its kind. The slow-motion portion of it shows a skilled performer tossing a saucer, cup and spoon in the air and balancing the three successfully on his head. It is an interesting bit and is followed by an industrial section, showing the manner in which peas are canned. Dr. Dittmarsh's part deals with mice this time and to close it, there is the Dance of Siam. Although some of the parts, if made into separate reels, which could easily be done, might not go very well if drawn out, the brevity and conciseness with which they are taken up in these reviews enables them to hold attention. This is particularly true of the industrial material, as in the case of the cannyre scenes.

Another Bray Comic—Goldwyn

This Bray Comic, made up of the same variety of material seen in the others, is much above the standard set in most of those that have preceded it. In the first place, the Lampions which come first are much funnier on the average than most of those that have offered hitherto. As for "Apollo," the Happy Hooligan series, which makes up the rest, that is also much better than many of the others presented in the set. Instead of consisting of a fantastic tale of one of his exploits, as shown in most of the Hooligan pictures for some time, it presents him the possessor of a perfect head, which is a source of wealth until he obliges a negro who poses as a target for shoes. Some creditable comedy is gleaned from the theme and the offering is quite commendable.

"For the Future"—Ford—Goldwyn

A Michigan school where the youngsters are taught various vocations is shown in this Ford reel, in which the photography is not always up to the desired standard. There is not very much entertainment value in the offering, the only interesting feature of which is the skilful manner in which the boys handle the different tools. It takes up the routine of the inmates and is hardly likely to hold the attention of anyone excepting those directly interested in that type of school.

"Screen Snapshots," No. 8—C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.

What is undoubtedly the most interesting feature of this issue of "Screen Snapshots" is the portion dealing with underwater photography. It shows the manner in which Maurice Tourneur's camera man, Homer Scott is lowered into the sea in a sort of bell-buoy with an open bottom and how he shoots the deep-sea stuff. Opening the reel is a bit of footage devoted to lack Pickford and Oliver Thomas. Probably, the material was edited and titled before the death of the latter for it was handled in a light manner, not necessarily fitting when one considers that the tragic end of the star is still fresh in the memories of most fans. Later, Grace Darling smiles at the spectator for a while and there is an other part in which Wm. J. Burns, noted sleuth, breaks in upon a comedy scene in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are participating. Mack Murray looks cute in a section devoted to canine comedy. A crocked animal trainer, is seen acting in a familiar manner with several snarling lions.

"Seven League Boots"—Chester—Educational

Switzerland is the scene of action in this Chester-Outing offering in which the sports of the natives, particularly their feats on skis, are shown. Throughout, the atmosphere is cool and brisk, with several shots in which youngsters are seen, adding cute touches. As a matter of fact, there is little that is really new in the production, for the scenes offered are for the greater part quite familiar to picture audiences. The general aspect of the reel, due partly to the titling, the work of Katherine Hilliker, is quite pleasant, and as a whole it is a meritorious travel picture.

"The Great-Eared Bat"—Mentor

In houses where they have been playing the Mentor colored reels, this issue should prove acceptable. Two parts comprise the first handling with a bat and the latter with the Chukchi tribe of Siberian Eskimos. Several unique and interesting shots of the bat are shown colored, there being two particularly good bits. They show the animal eating and drinking, and then folding the membrane which it uses in flying about itself. As for the second section, that has several commendable bits of footage dealing with some of the types to be seen among the Mongolians, for these people belong to the yellow race, and some of their habits. The coloring is not always up to the highest standard in the opening part, but good enough to get it by. Some of the scenes of the seals on the ice floes toward the finish of the film are certainly out of the ordinary.

Another Mentor Scenic

Diversity is the ruling feature of this Mentor offering which first takes the spectator to Cologne and over the Bridge across the Rhine, then to some of the tropical lands along the Mediterranean, later to Sweden and finally to Holland. The longest part of it shows the German city, while in the more southern states, the onlooker is not permitted to linger for any great length of time. In the part devoted to Sweden there is an interesting shot or two, but the stuff taken in Holland is by far the most picturesque. Especially of merit, is the culminating scene, showing one of the windmills and some water stuff.

"The Big Show"—Chester—Educational

"The Big Show" is another animal-kid comedy that certainly contains a fine quota of unusual laughs. The action concerns a children's circus, bossed for the most part by the very clever ape who was seen in "Four Times Foiled." There is a wealth of funny business with the circus as the center of the action and with ape, dogs and children all helping to create the laughs. A shot after a baby winds up the story and the ape leads in this too.

William S. Campbell directed "The Big Show" and has again shown himself as exceedingly capable in handling the business and gags in a picture of this type. Much of the stuff was undoubtedly invented on the spur of the moment. Certainly it all appears as spontaneous and funny as if it had been.

"The Big Show" was at the Rivoli last week and went over very well.

"Peaks, Pikes and Pines"—Reifen Film Corp.

Some of the shots included in this scenic reel are excellent, while others due either to the haze which is very much visible in places or poor photography which results in indistinct shots are not quite up to the mark. As a whole, however, would have been quite satisfactory, were not for the fact that the tourist party was included in several scenes, being particularly out of place in one, and the fact that the titles are distinctly out of harmony with the production. Such odious comparisons as a view from the spectator's bedroom window and a mountain peak, shown in the piece and observations as "It's Great" when discussing the atmosphere of the high regions are certainly out of place in a scenic offering calculated to appeal to the esthetic instincts of the onlooker. The waterfall footage is the best thing in the picture. Of course, it is a new spectacle, but somehow or other, one never seems to tire of it properly presented. And here for the interference of the lens-fends who strolled into focus, it would have been even more effective. With judicious cutting and retitling, this could have been considerably improved.

The dazzling light of public favor has fallen upon Betty Compson whose work in George Loane Tucker's 'The Miracle Man' was greeted as the screen's greatest individual performance.

'Prisoners of Love' throws into strong relief her consummate skill as an actress and that quality of powerful, alluring magnetism that lends to her beauty an unusually and irresistible enchantment.

It is a story of fiery passion and ennobling love, lifted above common levels by extreme delicacy of treatment and acting that is absolutely flawless.

Nye signed a two-year contract in Japan where 90 productions a year will be made. The distributing company, inaugurated and financed by Nye on the spot, is financed and controlled by one of Japan's large commercial and mercantile companies.

In China, Nye signed a two-year contract for Goldwyn. There are at least 60 theaters in China, with a population of 400,000,000 persons, according to reports. While the Chinese stereotyped pictures when away from a native country, in China itself, there has not yet formed the habit. The cinema price in China is $1 Mexican (standard), which now equals about 74 cents gold.

In India, Nye signed a contract for $2 Goldwyn subjects a year.

Suing Johnson Now

In a suit of Teff Johnson against the Rogers Film Corp., the defendant filed an answer claiming $700 judgment. The result of this suit at Johnson falsely represented that he was competent to direct a photo-}graphy for the defendant, but did it so skilfully that the defendant had to send $700 in having the film made suitable for use. The answer alleged that Johnson's claim was satisfied in full by the payment of $400.

Worth 12 Million

Real Estate Value of Five Broadway Picture Palaces, According to City Assessors

The City of New York places the real estate value of five Broadway picture palaces—the Capitol, Criterion, Rialto, Rivoli and Strand—at $12,000,000. These figures are the ones drawn up by the Board of Taxes and Assessments upon which the city's 1921 tax budget will be based.

It is interesting to note that compared with the figures for the present year, which give the value at $9,445,000, an increase of $2,555,000 is placed on the theater properties.

The valuation of the Criterion is placed at $3,300,000, more than any other theater, but the assessors calculated the New York and Criterion as one piece of property.

Here are the assessed values for 1921 as compared with those of 1920: Capitol, $2,400,000, as compared with $1,650,000 in 1920; Criterion (with which is calculated the New York theater), $3,300,000, as compared with $2,665,000 in 1920; Rialto, $2,050,000, as compared with $1,580,000 in 1920; Rivoli, $1,500,000, as compared with $1,250,000 in 1920, and the Strand, $2,900,000, as compared with $2,425,000 in 1920.

There are said to be 40,000 American troops in the Philippines and the consumption of films, both among them and the natives is entirely of American origin.

In Singapore and Java, Nye reports that the demand is mostly for serials. Usually three episodes of a serial and one comedy are shown at a performance. Sometimes 16,000 to 22,000 ft. of film is run off at a show. Singapore has six big picture theaters while Java in general has about 300. The British military censorship of films in Singapore is very strict, says Nye, nothing being permitted which would reflect on the white race; even low cut gowns are taboo. Nye arranged for Goldwyn pictures in Java.

In Australia he contracted for the distribution and showing of the entire Goldwyn product for one year. In New Zealand the Goldwyn pictures will be handled by a New Zealand concern which was founded and managed by Nye. Nye says there are about 1,200 theaters in Australia and about 300 in New Zealand. In Bombay Nye arranged for the releasing of 40 Goldwyn pictures a year for a period of 18 months in India. Burmah and Ceylon. The contracting firm owns about 25 large picture houses in India. Indian theaters run serials, Nye reports, two and three episodes being shown at a time.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

An advertising tie-up with theaters is being arranged by Geraldine Farrar, for "The Riddle Woman," which Pathé is distributing. It is being handled by the Germain Farrar Chocolate Co., a candy manufacturer, and its advertising is being made with local agencies in a majority of cities and towns of the country. Plans have been made for lobby displays, special hop window dressing, newspaper advertising and special exploitation.

The candy manufacturers propose to notify their agents in towns where "The Riddle Woman" is booked, and utilizing an advertising campaign to be conducted in co-operation with the theater.

Sterling, Ill.—Getting the merchants of a town to pay for the exploitation of a picture is a feat accomplished by Har-ry S. Lorch, Goldwyn exploitation representative in Chicago and the manager of the Lincoln here. The manager had arranged to hold a Goldwyn Week at his theater from Sept. 6 to 11.

They got out a four-page herald, 9 1/2 inches, on heavy coated paper, and distributed it to every house in the city. All of the first page and nearly half of the other three pages were devoted to advertising the Goldwyn pictures to be shown or two days each. The rest of the three inner pages were sold to theM. Odell, a merchant, who advertised the Goldwyn salesman at the door of his store at a price of $1.25, and distributed it to every house in the city.

Kansas City, Kan.—The management of the Victory effected an advertising tie-up with the Post on the serial "The Outlaw." In its issue of Sept. 9th, the Post used its readers to see "Daredevil" Mack as its guest, printing a coupon which admitted the bearer to the picture for one performance. The story ran three morning performances on Friday and Saturday. The get-up proved an excellent idea.

Warren, O.—"Find out what the public wants and give it to them." This is the simple but sound creed upon which Jack Osseman has built his success as manager of the Duchess.

In determining the type of entertainments most suitable to his clientele, Osseman, unlike many exhibitors, does not rely entirely on box-office figures. Rather, he injects the personal element into the task of judging what the public wants.

"While cold box-office figures are generally used to set a criterion of the public's taste, says Osseman, "I have found that considerably more accurate gauge can be made by personal contact with patrons," says Osseman. "In book- ing pictures, I am guided almost entirely by the personal expressions of my patrons. I use a weekly report on which is tabulated the character of pictures played during the week.

"At the end of each show, I make it a point to talk with at least 20 people who have seen the picture and get their opinions. I then personally acquirented with almost every person who patronizes the Duchess and find it an easy matter to get their candid opinions. I ask them how they like the star, the story and the general character of the picture. I then classify the consensus of opinions into three divisions—popular, acceptable and unpopular—and give each picture, its star and story a definite rating."

Omaha—The exploitation possibilities of "The Law of the Yukon" were again demonstrated by a campaign put over by Manager R. S. Ballan-tyne of the Moon. The most notable feature was a "Law of the Yukon" Ver- can, which an Australian Wombat fur coat valued at $225 and contributed by the Alaska Fur Co. was offered for the best 16-line poem describing "The Law of the Yukon." Twenty-three additional prizes ranging from a season pass to the Moon to a pair of tickets to see the picture were offered to stimulate competition.

Ballantyne in promoting this feature succeeded in enlisting the cooperation of the Omaha Daily News, the motion picture editor of which acted as judge of the contest. A novel and striking lobby display also contributed to the success of the engagement. The Alaskan lobby front has been somewhat overworked in Omaha, and Ballantyne, desiring of imparting a novel touch to his lobby, hit on a photographic display with a wall paper background. He used paper with vertical black and white stripes, hanging it on a compo board and mounting it with silhou- ted scene stills. The effect was un- usual and attractive. So effective was the wall paper as a background for a lobby decoration that it has been adopted as a permanent feature on the Moon lobby. A different design of wallpaper will be used with each change of bill.

Chicago—J. M. Lyon, formerly with Fox is now local representative of American Film Co., succeeding M. G. Hamilton.

Two Companies Control Siam
(Special to WID'S DAILY)
Washington—Vice Consul Carl C. Hausen, writes from Bangkok to "Commerce Reports" under date of July 22, as follows:

"The motion-picture theater inter- ests in Siam are at the present time controlled by two companies only, namely, the Siam Cinematograph Co. and the Nakorn Khasem Co. (Ltd.). The latter company has recently purchased the entire business of the Nakorn Khasem Cinematograph Co. The paid-in capital of the new company is given at 500,000 ticals ($182,000), and it has in operation four motion-picture halls, with a seating capacity of about 9,000. While the average daily admissions number 7,000, more or less, at a charge ranging from 0.15 to 3 ticals. The new company intends in the near future to erect another hall at a cost of about 300,000 ticals, and at the same time its activities will be extended to all the principal provincial towns in the Kingdom.

"The Siam Cinematograph Co. operates nine halls in Bangkok, with a seating capacity of about 12,000, and also has branches in the leading cities of Siam. The company also supplies and deals in films and all kinds of accessories."

Thomas R. Gardiner filed an answer in the Supreme Court in a suit of the American Trading Association. He states that on April 15 last, the plaintiff obtained the right to exhibit certain films in Greater New York, for which the defendant was to have $1,650, but in violation of the agreement the plaintiff arranged to ship the films to a foreign country and when the defendant demanded the return of the films he was forced to enter into an agreement by which the plaintiff was to deliver the films to the Magnet Film Exchange and the defendant gave up checks for $1,250 and $1,300 to get the films. Pathe Lands Kipling

Famous English Author Will Write for Screen: Brunton to Produce Them

Pathe yesterday announced that Rudyard Kipling, the famous English author, had been signed to write several stories for the screen. Pathe's agreement was consummated while he was in Europe.

Coincident with that announcement comes another, that Robert Brunton, who at present is producing for Pathe a Ruth Roland serial and one with Charles Hutchinson, will make the Kipling stories for Pathe distribution.

The first Kipling script is expected in this country by November. Randolph Lewis has been commissioned by Pathe to confer with Kipling for that purpose and sign there will sail for England Thursday.

Only two of Kipling's works, according to Pathe, have been pictured. These are "The Light That Failed" and "Nabulshah," both handled by Pathe.

Brunton, who has been here for a week, is known to have had conferences with Brunton regarding a number of important productions during the New Year. It was impossible to learn yesterday just what these plans were.

writer, tells him that he is not the “whole cheese,” as they say in Spain.

“Now, all this is said not in derogation of the good qualities of S. A. Lynch. On the contrary, we were quick to appreciate his good qualities.

“Your committee has had rather intimate chats with S. A. Lynch on three different and distinct occasions, and we want to assure you that he is not the boogeyman which too many of you believe him to be.

“The moral of it all is this: do not be afraid of Lynch. He is not a wizard or a magician, nor is there any Onia board concealed on his person. If you take him as a matter of course and always keep in your mind that he is trying to outwit you with rapid fire negotiations and all sorts of clever propositions (half concealed and half revealed) you will never regret having met him. He is sociable and likable, but these qualities alone are not sufficient to take him as a partner in your theater enterprise.

“The motion picture market at present shows a great excess of supply over demand. Do not let Lynch persuade you to the contrary. Book his pictures if you can get them at a fair and reasonable price. For the rest, merely regard him as an animated conversation. He may wave (and he probably will wave) a blue print in your face, but as a rule there is nothing back of it. Second hand architects furnish blue prints at greatly reduced prices.”

"Allan Dwan's production of William Allen White's epic of American life, 'In the Heart of a Fool,' at the Madison, is a melodrama with a punch and an appeal from start to finish. William Allen White has presented an intensely dramatic story, which, in its adaptation to the screen, has been worked out with an intelligent understanding of the requirements of a screen play. In the cast are many players of distinction."—Detroit Free Press.

Howells Returns

Howells is firm in the conviction that Europe's most pressing need at the present time is a number of modern theaters while those now in operation, in his opinion, can be improved upon. Modern exploitation methods can also be used to excellent advantage.

Howells spent considerable of his time in Paris while away. He thinks that the European market wants good pictures only and that the day of mediocre product is gone. The exchange question of course has had a good deal to do with the activity of the European market. Because of the tightening of the money market and the difference in exchange there has been no such activity in buying films.

David P. Howells' stay abroad will be an indefinite one, according to his brother.

Asked regarding the First National-Greenhill deal, first announced by cable in WID'S DAILY last week Howells said that at the time of his leaving England the deal had not been definitely terminated, although he knew negotiations were under way. Howells said that the Greenhill deal was with Vattudar, Ltd., to whom the Howells organization had originally sold the First National rights for the United Kingdom.

shaken her curls at the Rialto this week as the star of "Sweat Lavender," a picture which gives Miss Minter opportunity to grow sweet without resorting to the use of saccharine.

Herald—On the whole the saccharine element is apt to close at times, for college boarding houses never before appeared to be such dens of loveliness. However, Theodore Roben's script which he has written restores the balance in favor of humanity eventually.

News—No comment.

Times—No comment.

Tribune—To be reviewed later.

Globe—To be reviewed later.

Telegram—Those who remember Miss Eline Shannon's charming performance of "Sweat Lavender" in the old Lyceum Theater will be equally delighted with the film version of Pinero's famous comedy of sentiment, with Miss Mary Miles Minter as the golden-haired heroine.

Mail—Sweet Mary Miles Minter in "Sweat Lavender" has a sugar coating at the bottom which she does not deserve. The picture is taken from Pinero's play, which insures an interesting if unoriginal plot. But Besuah Marie Diox's scenario and Paul Powell's direction follow Reith's intention of making Mary Miles Pickford out of Mary Miles Minter.

Post—Altogether, it is a simple little play without any violence or blood tingling episodes, yet not without a pleasant interest and a certain decorous unfolding of plot. The captions  * are excellent.

included, inasmuch as they have not been definitely consummated. He was very enthusiastic, however, over what the future had in store for the industry. "We have just completed the building of the biggest stage in the world," said Brunston. "It is 300 feet long by 125 feet wide, and will permit of the making of any kind of motion pictures. Our plant in Hollywood now covers 42-1-3 acres, while in the foothills we have 350 acres for the filming of 'outdoor stuff.'"

Mr. Brunston was asked what he thought would be the next big improvement in the art of motion picture making. "Technically," he replied, "I believe we have reached the limit in picture making. There may be some improvements in camera work, slight improvements. But the next big thing of importance will be the filming of dramas in natural color. However, that will not be for some time."

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—A delegation of California exhibitors, all members of the M. P. T. O., are seeking an interview with Douglas Fairbanks regarding the methods of Hiram Abrams in conducting United Artists.

Abrams has been the storm center of a number of discussions on what exhibitor organizations have termed his arbitrary attitude on the booking of "Big 4" product.

In New York the Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce has had considerable discussion with Abrams over the payment of rentals more than seven days in advance of a picture's showing. There was some discussion later on the acceptance of a surety bond by Abrams in lieu of cash payments.

Brunton to Build?

Unknown Purchaser Secures Studio Site in Long Island—No Confirmation

It was persistently reported yesterday, but not confirmed, that Robert Brunton, who is now in New York, was the purchaser of a tract of land, 12 acres in size, called the Davison Farm and situated near the town of Rockville Center, Long Island, upon which a studio will be erected.

A Brooklyn newspaper in a recent issue stated that an option had been granted to "one of the largest Southern California motion picture concerns for the erection of a moving picture plant." The Davison Farm is about four blocks from the old Milburn Reservoir in Rockville Center, upon which site another studio is being talked of.

The actual purchase of the Davison Farm was made by a man named Meudel Presberger through C. C. Mackay, both of Rockville Center.

Efforts were made repeatedly all of yesterday to get in touch with Mr. Brunton at the Hotel Astor for a statement. Presberger and Mackay could not be reached, either.

At Broadway Theaters

Rivoli

You Never Can Tell," the first Reelin starring Bebe Daniels, is a good attraction at the Rivoli. The film, produced by Mack Sennett picture, "My Goodness," also distributed by the Reelin, has a cast containing many numbers, the majority of them brighter than the others. "Russian Hungarian Rhapsody" with Bela Nyary at the cymbals in the finale, Nyary receiving much applause. "A Trek into Switeland" goes well, while following is a record holder. The picture includes "The Politicians," latest Matt and Jeff number. "Towards the feature "The Spirit of the Monarch" and Paul Voedler render a dance, "Bacchanal," which will interest particularly well. "Variations on Yankee Doodle" is given between the feature and the comedy.

Capitol

The first Associated Producers offering, "Honeymoon Polka," went particularly well at the Capitol on Sunday night. Larry Semon's comedy, "The Suitors" also registered with fine effect. The overture number is pretentious, the music of "Hungarian Lullaby" being rendered by the orchestra assisted by a lively hand and a ballet. The Capitol main miniature gives two old songs, "When I Have Glasses-Swinging" and "Oh, Time, Take Back," previous to the feature which is an amusing and peculiarly artistic piece. The love story between feature and comedy is utilized to play a marriage of two ladies. Other numbers are "Heigh Ho," "He Who Dares" and "Blow the Wind Southerly." "Evolution of Music," an Art Color production, "The Great Western" of Rialto and the Capitol News.

Strand

A pleasant surprise is in store for those who secure seats for the feature "The Good Old Days," presented instead of the usual long Fate overture selection. The picture consists of numbers from Victor Herbert's "The Goul," with Mitchell singing the selection. While you're watching the feature the Strand also registers with fine effect. The overture is pretentious, the music of "The Hungarian Lullaby" being rendered by the orchestra assisted by a lively hand and a ballet. The Capitol main miniature gives two old songs, "When I Have Glasses-Swinging" and "Oh, Time, Take Back," previous to the feature which is an amusing and peculiarly artistic piece. The love story between feature and comedy is utilized to play a marriage of two ladies. Other numbers are "Heigh Ho," "He Who Dares" and "Blow the Wind Southerly." "Evolution of Music," an Art Color production, "The Great Western" of Rialto and the Capitol News.

Rialto

Mary Miles Minter in "Sweet Lavender" is the headliner at the Rialto. No particular presentation in the form of a program goes with it, which is somewhat surprising considering the opportunity it offers for the renewal of old sentimental songs. "The House" is the overture and it gets a big hand. It is the first time that it has been heard in one of the Broadway theaters for several years. "The Explorers," a Bruce scene, follows. Then comes a baritone solo with the weekly coming next. A Technicolor number, "Autumn in Calcutta in B Flat Major," rendered by four of the Rialto orchestra musicians, precedes the feature and features a dance and a "Lone Flower," a Centaurea, casino, the last.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Creston, Iowa.—If someone suggested to the average exhibitor that a pair of lambs, a shepherd dog and a sheep pen, could be used in conjunction with a lobby display so as to draw crowds to a theater, the owner would probably reply with some such self-explanatory expression as “How do you get that way?” Nevertheless, Catherine Schleip, who manages the Willard did just that. Anita Stewart in “The Fighting Shepherdess,” was the attraction and Miss Schleip had theer desired at show time to the lobby. It occupied all of it except the space needed for passage to the box office and into the house. The canine and lambs were placed into the pen, while a cut-out of the star was placed at the rear. “We are waiting for the fighting shepherdess to go through inside” were the words on a sign placed over the affair, and a crowd constantly gathered about the entrance to the house.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Peter Antonoplos, who manages the Olympic, cuts in with a few remarks about lobby displays and what he has to say is quite interesting. One rule is placed for- most by Antonoplos and that is that the display must improve the appearance of the house. “The lobby display,” he says, “offers greater variety than any other form of exploitation. The failure of the average lobby display, can be usually attributed to one cause, that being that the lobby is crowded.” Continuing on this subject Antonoplos declares that the cut-outs, posters and other paraphernalia are too frequently distributed in an unbalanced manner. Any arrangement will not go in his opinion. It all leads up to the fact that in arranging his display, the exhibitor must be just as careful as the man who advertises in writing his copy and making his layout.

There is no doubt that pictures of the first magnitude on the screens of the country that made the world.”

Usually Sunday shipments are not affected by this edict. The purpose of the decree is to afford booking offices and other employees an opportunity to enjoy a day of rest.

The Greatest Comedy Drama Attraction

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Brooklyn—A bridal suite and wedding altar with the radiant bride in all their glory were the highlights of this week at the Brooklyn Mark to add effectiveness to "The Bells of St. Mary," rendered by Edwin Hays, soprano.

Several drops and a variety of hallowed lights are used, too. The orchestra played lightly the choruses from the Mendelssohn wedding march, the curtain parted revealing Miss Carey in bridal attire, with veil and corsage—a vision in white against the background of black blus. She sang one verse and the curtains parted again, showing a gay church interior with light streaming through many stained glasses. At this point Mrs. Carey sang the second chorus of "The Bells of St. Mary.

The stunt is particularly pleasing to the women. Manager Hyman said he novelty takes only a few minutes, but is different and inexpensive.

New Brunswick, N. J.—How an event of local interest may be utilized in telling a house story is clearly demonstrated by Manager Schusterman of the Strand. The picture which was being presented was "In Old Kentucky" in which Anita Stewart is starred, but the trick could have been used just as easily with any other picture. A band of gypsies visited the city recently, and stories about the band, most of its members traveling a disarrayed automobiles. All of the local newspapers printed short stories about it and Schusterman immediately started using his sky-piece. First, on one of the tinted papers, a full-length picture of the gypsy with a type of a queer nature, resembling the romany style, were printed. Schusterman engaged several members of the band to distribute them. Following this house-to-house canvass, he engaged some of the members for fortune-telling booths. New Jersey newspapers eventually heard of the stunt and money, admission to these booths was free and those who told the future were paid that as an immediate source of happiness, the trick at the Strand should be witnessed. Anita Stewart was described as the type of a woman everyone knows. And the fact that the theater was constantly packed, many new faces appearing at the box-office windows, proved that the scheme worked.

New Unit Launched
Called Peck’s Bad Boy Co.—First National Men Reported Interested
(Exclusive to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Sol Lesser, First National franchise holder for Southern California, and Col. Fred Levy, First National franchise holder for Kentucky and Tennessee, are understood to be actively interested in a new company formed here. The company is called the Peck’s Bad Boy Co. and will produce a series of eight pictures, three of them based on the well-known stories by George W. Peck.

Space has been leased at the Louis B. Mayer studio. The first of the series will be “Peck’s Bad Boy,” in which Jackie Coogan will be starred. Nat Watt will direct and Bernard McConville will make the screen adaptations. Coogan has a prominent part in “The Kid.” Charlie Chaplin’s hve reeler.

A First National official was inclined to doubt that Col. Levy was interested in the new company. He was quite sure that Levy was not planning to enter the production end of the business.

Watch Out, Says Adler
Bert Adler, general representative of Allan Dwan, sends this statement to WID’S DAILY:

“I wish to call your attention to the fact that an effort has been made to sell me various ancient pictures with which Mr. Dwan is alleged to have been connected in his early days and that I have been told that Mr. Dwan had better purchase these or they would be distributed as Allan Dwan Productions.”

“I trust no exhibitor will be fooled into accepting these obsolete subjects as Allan Dwan productions. Comparison of the titles of all subjects that might be offered with the titles of genuinely new Dwan releases, as offered by Associated Producers and First National salesmen, will protect the exhibitor against misrepresentation.”

Irwin Claims Credit
Court Suit Reveals His Interest in National Playhouse Corp. Which Planned Theater Chain

Papers submitted to Supreme Court Justice Newburger in a suit by Walter W. Irwin, formerly of Famous Players and Vitagraph, against Harvey H. Hevenor and Arland W. Johnson, promoters of the National Playhouse Corp., which planned to build a string of playhouses throughout the country largely with local capital in the cities in which the theaters were constructed, show that Irwin claims the principal credit for the plan, which is now practically dead. Because the corporation's assets have been attached in a suit by Johnson for about $150,000 damages for breach of contract.

The corporation is also threatened with a receivership owing to the fact that an application by stockholders for the appointment of a receiver to conserve the assets is now pending before Supreme Court Justice Finch and is undecided.

Irwin has not yet drawn up his complaint, for the reason that he doesn't know what to sue for until he examines Hevenor and Johnson before trial. He says they agreed to give him one-third of all they received from the project, but that after one way or another they left him out of it. After he had obtained an order to examine them to find out what they have been doing, Hevenor applied to Justice Newburger to vacate the order for his examination. Jus-

Six Months' Run
Up at First National there is a tremendous amount of enthusiasm over "Fashan" in which Pola Negri, the famous European actress is starred.

The picture deals with the life of Madame du Barry and the Court of Louis XV. It is the plan of First National to secure a Broadway theater and keep the film running for six months. J. D. Williams is of the opinion that the picture will do, as he puts it "$5,000,000 worth of good" to the industry that it will serve to remove the prejudice against costume plays. The picture was shot in Germany and is said to be lavish in the extreme.

Criterion, New York and Roof Theaters—F. P. Considering

Although nothing definite has been as yet determined upon, it is learned that Famous Players are seriously considering extensive alterations in three Broadway houses: the Criterion, the New York and the New York roof.

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Through a special arrangement with Doubleday Page and Co., the publishers of Margaret Prescott Montague’s story, “Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge,” upon which film is based, the complete story is to be printed in booklet form of eight pages, with an illustration on the cover.

These booklets are to be printed in lots of one hundred, and are to be furnished to the exhibitors of the country at 2 1/2 cents each. The exhibitor in turn will be permitted to sell them at 5 cents per copy.

The back page of this booklet is left blank, so that the exhibitor may imprint therein announcements of coming attractions, or any other matter he wishes.

Cincinnati—Roy H. Haines, manager of the local First National office, recently pulled a worth-while stunt in conjunction with “Go and Get It,” the Marshall Neilan production. The local Y. M. C. A. staged a treatment hunt. Prizes were buried in a secluded spot and typewritten sheets, telling of landmarks on the way and giving an idea as to how to get to the place were given to numerous youngsters.

Haines immediately decided to add to the happiness of the lads. He had buttons made, bearing the words, “Y. M. C. A. Go and Get It Treasure Hunt.” Over 1,000 of the youngsters tagged thus, by agreement between Haines and the Y. M. C. A., were in no way connected with the advertisement for the slogan stuck in the minds of most individuals. Similar stunts are no doubt planned for elsewhere, not necessarily in connection with a Y. M. C. A.

Americus, Ga.—“Mac” Prather, manager of the Alcazar, took advantage of the title of the Constance Talmadge production, “The Perfect Woman,” in putting out some clever advertising. All those who entered the house prior to the opening of the production received cards upon which were printed the words, “Do You Know a Perfect Woman?” All sorts of answers were handed in, the recipient of the cards displaying the interest. Shortly thereafter, Prather had signs made, bearing the words, “A perfect woman will visit Americus soon,” and he went about taking these women to the theater. The results were that a perfect woman will be at the Alcazar soon.” Of course these signs let the secret out, but curiosity had already been aroused, and the effect was quite apparent when one watched the box office results.

COAST BREVITIES
(Special to WID’S DAILY)

Hollywood—Norris Munger, studio manager of Beniamin B. Hampton producing company, has departed for New York to be gone two weeks, in which time he will confer with officials of Pathé relative to a number of pictures which are being produced by Hampton for that concern.

Henry Ginsberg, general sales manager for the Educational Films Corp., is visiting the Christie studios this week.

It is rumored that Al Christie, veteran comedy manager, is going in for a revival of the old “morality plays.” This report is based on the fact that Christie is starting a comedy written around the adage of “Don’t swap wives in the middle of a hallway.” The comedy will be called “Shuffle the Queen” and has nothing to do with playing cards.

Work from 6 P. M. to 6 A. M. nightly for two weeks has characterized Tod Browning’s rapid wind-up of production on “Outside the Law,” starring Priscilla Dean.

The title of the latest Chester comedy has been titled “You’ll Be Surprised.”

Wallace MacDonald, who plays the leading role in “Trumpet Island,” has been selected by Edgar Lewis to enact the feature role in his next production, as yet unnamed.

Stuart Holmes, has sacrificed his weary auburn hair in the interest of Metro’s “The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.”

Phillip E. Rosen has been selected to direct Metro’s production of “Abe Wives to Blame,” in which May Allison will be starred.

Tom Moore has completed work on “Caravan,” which will be released under the title “The Flag of Fortune,” and is expected to start the first of next week in “Made in Heaven,” under the direction of Alfred E. Green.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have finished the fourth of their comedy features “Fixed by George” and are now supervising the cutting and titling of the film. Their next picture will be “One Bright Idea,” written for them by Edgar Franklin.

“Partners of the Tide,” story by Joseph C. Lincoln, will be Irwin V. Willett’s next production for Hodkinson release.

The September issue of “The Silversheet” published in the Thos. H. Ince studios, and edited by H. Stromberg, was this week mailed to exhibitors.

Charles Ray Proves Big Success on the Coast in 45 Minutes from Broadway

His First Independently Made Picture for First National Highly Praised by Newspaper Critics

IS GLORIOUSLY SUCCESSFUL

“Charles Ray in ‘45 Minutes from Broadway’ is gloriously successful in making himself convincing as Kid Burns. His role enables him to bring his public a different character, adding to the apparently never ending delight of his talents.” — Los Angeles Times.

His Best Role

“An event of unusual significance in the motion picture world is the arrival of Charles Ray’s first picture from his own studio, and crowds came to witness his first flight among the independent producers. Every one will admit, after laughing through the humorous reels of ‘45 Minutes from Broadway,’ that Mr. Ray could not have had a happier role than that of Kid Burns. His naturalness and wholesome comedy have full play in this character sketch. There is also an interesting and refreshing romance. There is plenty of swift action, amusing complications and suspense. The ‘happy-ever-after’ ending comes amid chuckles of laughter.” — Los Angeles Examiner.

A Rampage of Joy

“In ‘45 Minutes from Broadway’ Charles Ray, the young and popular star (see box office statements everywhere) finds a new way of expressing the humor and the wit of the camera. He enacts his role so well he sends the risibles on a rampage of joy. The play admirably suits Ray and he in turn is admirably qualified to portray Cohn’s pet fiction character. His portrayal of the prize fighter here comes nearer giving full potency to the artistic expression for which Ray has become endeared to us than any role yet tackled by him. Personally I am convinced that George M. Cohan could not improve on Ray’s work.”

Party a Success

Loew's "Outing" Gets Great Ova-tions in the South—Due Home Monday
(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Memphis, Tenn.—Before the greatest crowd that ever witnessed the arrival of a group of picture stars, Marcus Loew's party was tendered tremendous ovation when their arrival here Thursday. All the way from the station to the City Hall, where Mayor Payne tendered Loew the keys to the city, the streets were blocked and it seemed as if every one in Memphis was on hand.

There were individual motors for each of the 15 stars and celebrities, and the Shriners, Rotarians and Kiwani Clubs had delegations on hand to greet the visitors.

There were mounted police and two bands in the celebration, which was enlivened by huge bombs bursting every consecutive minute. Loew and he was astounded and overwhelmed by the reception.

In the party were Bert Lytell, Herbert Rawlinson, Montague Love, Doores Cassinelli, Agnes Culkin, Gladys Leslie, Ruth Hargraves, Texas Guinan, Anne Luther, Vera Shapiro, Helene Davis, Lillian Walker, Mildred Reardon, Martha Mansfield and Peggy Elion. From the shouts and ap-aplace, Lillian Walker and Montague Love seemed to be the best liked favorites of the group.

All of the stars, together with Loew, William Danforth of J. P.
Morgan & Co. and many other prominent film folk of the South attended the opening of Loew's new State Theater yesterday afternoon and again appeared at the night performanees.

They left last night for Birmingham, where another of the new Loew houses will be opened. The party will return directly to New York from Birmingham, although Marcus Loew will leave for the coast, stopping at a number of cities where new theaters have been erected. He will be away about six weeks and while in California will materially enlarge the Metro plant.

Thursday morning at eight o'clock when the stars special passed through Corinuth, Miss., about 400 people had gathered at the platform to greet Bert Lytell, but all of the stars were in on the party.

SCENARIO BY Nazimova
CAMERAMAN Rudolph Berghurst
AS A WHOLE Just what you’d expect from this star, but not up to the mark of her previous productions

STORY Very slight material stretched to point of exaggeration to allow star opportunities; too long for story material

DIRECTION Could be much better
PHOTOGRAPHY All right
LIGHTINGS Has dual role
CAMERA WORK Adequate
STAR No one especially worthy of comment EXTERIORS Hardly any INTERIORS Too much sameness

CHARACTER OF STORY Selfish mother who deserts child and husband for fame is later outshone by daughter’s success

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION 5,400 feet

If, at least, they had dressed the picture with a Parisian atmosphere there might be some understanding to the extreme temperament of “Madame Peacock” but laying the blame all on the fact that the biggest part of her nature is “sham” and which fact they keep reminding you of in the titles, they have Madame go through all the spectacular outbursts of temper typical of a spoiled and much catered to Parisian favorite.

Despite the performance of Nazimova, who plays a dual role and gives adequate distinction to each character, “Madame Peacock” does not at all measure up to some previous productions of the star. In the first place the story material is too slight and not at all suited to a production such as the star is accustomed to appearing in.

The direction is not what it might be. There are long scenes where the players remain almost motionless except for close-ups which show slight changes in facial expression. Then too, there is altogether too much sameness of setting. The home of “Madame Peacock” which certainly is made to represent the bird whose name is part of the title of the play which makes her famous, and shots of the stage and behind scenes are practically the only ones used and they appear consecutively.

With nothing in her mind but the desire to become famous Jane Goring leaves her husband and little daughter. On the night that she reaches the height of her career in the title role of “Madame Peacock” she finds her husband awaiting her at her home but his tubercular cough disgusts her and she sends him away.

Janes continues to be a favorite while unknown to her, her young daughter has been making her way on the stage under the name of Gloria Cromwell. After much display of temperament Jane finally agrees to star in a Harvard prize play, the author of which incidentally, gives a terrible performance. Gloria has a part in the play and on the opening night she is given an unexpected ovation while Jane is forced to retire to her dressing room and listen to her rival’s evident success.

She returns to her home and is haunted by visions of her husband and child and her treatment of them. She seeks comfort in her mother and there is a happy reunion when the husband comes to her home with Gloria, who has not known that the star is her mother. In the cast are George Bobert, John Stepping, William Orlamond, Rex Cherryman, Albert Cody, Gertrude Claire and Mrs. Woodthorpe.

May Satisfy Star’s Admirers

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Folks who like the work of the star and her particularly distinctive personality will probably be satisfied with “Madame Peacock” but unless you are sure of the star’s popularity, there isn’t much to promise them. There is neither sufficient action nor a well sustained interest to hold the attention for even the footage awarded the production, and the usual spectacular effects found in the star’s productions are not included in “Madame Peacock” except one or two scenes showing the interior of Madame’s home.

Tell them that the star plays a dual role, that of the mother and the daughter. Tell them it’s the story of an artist’s temperament, the leading lady who insisted upon having a star on her dressing room door, etc. Or the line, “Even fame did not bring her absolute happiness. See how the return of the mother love made a different woman of Madame Peacock.”

DETAIL .......... Splendid in acting and settings—story needs more

CHARACTER OF STORY .......... The high spots in the life of Madame Du Barry, famous courtesan of Louis XV

RUNNING TIME .......... Approximately two hours

"Passion" is a stirring spectacular feature conceived about the life of the famous French courtesan of Louis XV's time, Madame Du Barry. Special significance is attached to it inasmuch as it is the first picture imported from Germany since the war. There is nothing about it that proclaims its Teutonic origin.

From the spectacular point of view the picture is astonishing. Its climax scenes showing the outbreak of the French revolution, the storming of the Bastille and related scenes bring into play thousands of people in whom are imbued all the conflicting spirits of a raging mob. The scenes reach the ultimate in realism. Their effect on the emotions is little short of sweeping. They are full of color, action, excitement and thrill.

Chief interest, however, must center on the figure of Du Barry herself, this for the reason that the part is so superbly played by Pola Negri, one of the best known actresses on the continent. She is versatility itself, at times being the sensuous courtesan, then flashing into a being of childish simplicity. Her sense of dramatic values is acute, her physical charms are at times boldly displayed and often suggested but she never becomes vulgar because of the rarity of her art.

It is in the matters of story and production detail that "Passion" falls short—and only in these matters. And these faults are probably not due to those concerned in the production but to those who cut and edited the picture. The story of Du Barry's rise to the position of mistress of Louis XV would be considerably greater in interest had the scenes touched upon other things than merely the highlights in her life. It looks as if some of the connecting continuity links had been eliminated.

The spectacular scenes would also have possessed greater value had there been more intimate touches injected between them. For instance, the sequence of Du Barry going to her death on the guillotine would have had greater sustaining force if the surging mob scenes had been more closely commingled with closeups. Detail is absent.

As it is, however, the picture possesses a tremendous interest because of its superb acting—every part in it being played with the utmost skill and effect—its historical side and its spectacular element.

Many Angles to This—Fine Entertainment

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Passion" is a costume historical drama and there has long been a prejudice against such a form of entertainment. However, this picture should do a lot toward doing away with such prejudice. The personal adventures of Madame Du Barry create a continued, if not sustained, interest in "Passion" and the fine skill of the star and players coupled with the marvelous spectacular effects insure an entertainment far out of the ordinary.

First National has chosen a frankly box office title for the picture. It is one that, at the same time, is rather appropriate considering the central character, a passionate, foolish woman with the heart of a child. In advertising it, however, mention should be made of the fact that it is based on the life of Du Barry.

As said, there are no signs about the picture that denote a German production. The types might be any nationality—even American. There should be considerable interest over a picture as pretentious as this produced on the other side just now and when you advertise it be sure to mention it is of European origin—the biggest thing that has come across the water since "Caberia."

For both the continuity and direction of "Curtain" director Young shares honors with the star for making as much of Rita Weiman's novel as is shown at the Strand this week. The story is just one of those familiar types consisting of the star who gives up her career to marry a wealthy "first-nighter" and then finally discovers that he is untrue to her. But despite all these time-worn situations, "Curtain" manages to hold the interest nearly all of the time and this is due to the work of the star and the smooth running production given the story.

There is just one thing perhaps that is lacking. The climax is not led up to with any marked degree of suspense. It would have been well to have in some way heightened the interest at this point, thereby bringing the climax upon the spectator with more force. As it is, a title which certainly is misplaced announces something to the effect that the heroine is about to receive a shock, but things continue along the same scale of interest for considerable footage following this title.

The photography is generally pretty good except for the lighting which in one instance is very much blurred. Instead of the usual close-up ending there is a long shot which while different, doesn't seem to satisfy. Florence Deshon in the role of the vamp isn't over-convincing. Charles Richman is the leading man and E. B. Tilton does well as the theatrical manager.

Nancy Bradshaw (Miss MacDonald) is at the height of her career when she meets Dick Cunningham, a wealthy first-nighter who usually gets what he wants. He insists that when they are married Nancy give up the stage. This she does reluctantly and the scene jumps to four years later showing Nancy with her little boy. A Mrs. Bishop, with whom it is hinted Cunningham had an affair prior to his marriage to Nancy, visits the Cunningham home and intimates that Dick was seen in company with Nancy's successor, Lilla Grant.

Dick alibies his way out of the incident and hints that he does not question the visits of Thorn, author of Nancy's last starring vehicle and former aspirant for her hand. Later Cunningham leaves for an extended trip and Nancy, while visiting her old friend and former manager, Jerry, accidentally learns that Lilla is with her husband. Lilla is booked to open in a play by Thorn, but Jerry decides that he will "fix that Jane," and the opening night shows Nancy Bradshaw's name in electric lights and the announcement of her return to the stage.

The husband returns and admits he is in the wrong and promises a divorce, whereupon Thorn again offers himself to Nancy and is accepted.

Not at All Unusual Production But Has Satisfying Quality

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The star's beauty alone has probably gained her many admirers throughout the picture going world and in this case you will undoubtedly satisfy them with "Curtain," which is about the best thing she has had and her work is very satisfactory. Director Young should be given his share of credit for making the picture as pleasing as it is. Play up the atmosphere of the stage contained in the picture. This always appeals to a good many.

You can use lines such as the following: "She was forced to choose between love and a career. What was her choice? See Katherine MacDonald's latest production for the answer." Or, "With the final 'Curtain' she found the real love."

"The Prey" is more or less of a refash of very old picture material. The fundamental course of the plot is quite apparent from the very outset. The interest, however, is mildly well sustained through quite clever juggling of the "balance of power" between the heroine and the villain.

Helen Reardon breaks her engagement with Calvin, reform candidate for district attorney, when she hears him refuse her father financial aid. She refuses to believe that Calvin is right and her father wrong. In reality Reardon has embezzled a trust fund and is desirous of enlisting Calvin's help to procure more money for him to invest in a stock promoted by Lowe, a disreputable character. Reardon soon afterwards commits suicide.

Jack, Helen's weakling brother forges Lowe's name to a check and using this as a weapon, Lowe forces Helen to marry him. She discovers immediately after the marriage that he is a vicious beast and refuses to submit to him. He threatens her again by holding her brother's disgrace over her. Helen visits Calvin, now district attorney. He promises to help her brother and subject Lowe to the law.

There then ensues a long sequence between Helen, Lowe and Calvin during which each at one time or another holds the whip hand. Eventually Calvin places Lowe under arrest. He dies during the night from a stroke. Thus Calvin and Helen are reunited—their differences having been swept away. And Calvin does quite a questionable thing in quashing the indictment against Jack.

"The Prey" has been given a production that is at times quite lavish, particularly in the scenes of Lowe's base reveries on his wedding night. The settings have a certain tone to them that gives the picture "class" while the acting is commendable throughout. Alice Joyce is given many opportunities in the role of Helen and takes good advantage of the majority of them. Her many changes of mood are sure and may well excite a certain admiration from those who enjoy real characterization.

Should Get Over Fairly Well—Concentrate on Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Prey" will probably give just average satisfaction, while its drawing power depends on the popularity of the star and how big you handle the picture in the advertising. If you desire you ought to be able to work up a good deal of interest in it by dwelling on its political angle. With election time right on top of it's release date this angle is very appropriate.

However, a moderate campaign is about all that "The Prey" can stand, for it is no more than a moderately entertaining picture. It has little suspense in its general story, the interest rising almost wholly from the handling of individual scenes. Picture wise folk will easily sense the plot and, moreover, will doubtless realize that it is but a very old story warmed over a bit.

As a consequence the best advertising angle is, after all, the star, coupled with the information that her performance here ranks with the best work she has done on the screen.

CHARACTER OF STORY ........ Romance of college

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ... About 5,134 feet

“Sweet Lavender” is just the sort of picture that the title suggests—very sweet, very pretty, at times saccharine. It tells the story of a romance of a college freshman and a little boarding house girl, supposedly the daughter of its proprietress, but in reality the child of the boy’s snobbish guardian.

There is little more to be said about the picture than just that. The story is exceedingly simple and though it contains an interest, this interest is by no means universal. Matinee audiences and girls in their teens, just beginning to shorten their dresses, will find the greatest pleasure in it.

Mary Miles Minter is seen in the role of the boarding house girl, Lavender. She amazes now and again by her appearance with her golden tresses concealed beneath a towel or a close-fitting boy’s hat. She evidently knows by this time that curls aren’t everything in an actress’ life.

The production has been handled favorably in the majority of instances. There are two or three scenes where the direction seems rather mechanical and obvious but on the whole the action is very prettily and worthily staged.

Miss Minter also receives some valuable assistance from Harold Goodwin who plays the college juvenile.
His performance rings with sincerity and is realism itself. Theodore Roberts is also present to inject some character comedy into the proceedings as an ancient college professor.

After the romance between Lavender and Clem gets under way it is severely interrupted by Clem’s guardian, Weatherburn. He insists that it stop. And Lavender’s aunt (to her, her mother), agrees when she learns that Weatherburn is really Lavender’s father—the man who had brought sorrow into her mother’s life years before and caused her death. Lavender is ship-off to boarding school but breaks out when she hears that Clem is seriously ill. She is overcome with fatigue in a rainstorm. The next morning Weather-burn finds her by a stream and, his sympathy getting the better of his snobbishness, he takes her to Clem.

Milton Sills appears as Weatherburn, while others are Sylvia Ashton, Jane Keekley, Flora Hollister, Starke Patteson and J. M. Dumont.

A Mildly Satisfactory Attraction
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

As said this is hardly a picture to register a big hit with a metropolitan audience or even the family audience educated to expect a little thrill now and then in its entertainment. It will get by with such crowds but they are more than likely to pooh-pooh it at after leaving the theater. Its a little too sweet and pretty.

In advertising concentrate on the star and recall her last fine performance in “A Cumberland Romance.”
Her work here is of the same high grade—in fact by her acting she creates much of the mild interest that will center on the picture.

Also bring out the fact that this is an adaptation of the play by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero. His name will attract people to your theater that don’t usually come.

The picture gives an opportunity for a pretty musical setting. Some of the old, sentimental songs could be rendered as a prologue, while during the running of it college airs would fit very appropriately.

Make sure to follow it up immediately with a good lively comedy and if you can pick up a good dramatic two reeler such a subject would go well on your program.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Mountain girl falls in love with hero from the city.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 5,000 feet

Except for a rather belated unusual twist at the end of its story, “Forbidden Valley” presents the same old plot of the feudal mountaineers of the Cumberlands and the romance of the girl of one of the families and the supposed son of the other. But the young man planted as the son through the greater part of the action turns out to be a sure enough “furriner” after all. This little twist comes at the very end of the picture and even then it isn’t used to dramatic effect.

Had the case of mistaken identity been introduced previously, a portion of suspense could have been built up. It’s a matter of rather poor construction.

“Forbidden Valley” contains little real plot meat in any of its sequences. After the romance starts it’s just a matter of waiting for the conclusion. An attempt has been made to introduce a sustaining dramatic conflict by bringing a half-witted mountaineer into the action. After one attempt on this fellow’s part on the life of the hero has failed he starts in attempting again. Incidentally the intricacies of his plots are so involved that his brain photographs as whole and not a half. At times he displays more intelligence than the rest of the characters.

But whereas Mr. Blackton has fallen down somewhat on the treatment of his story he has taken further steps upward in the artistry with which he has endowed his production. Beautiful photography and lightings have helped considerably. But more important has been his choice of locations—the striking composition of various of the mountain shots. Pictorially, indeed, the picture ranks very high, but it is action plus pictorial beauty that results in the perfect production.

The two featured players do satisfactory work, though May McAvoy is too mechanical in her emotional scenes. She is pretty and reveals a countenance that appears mobile enough to easily register such conventional emotions as her role of the mountain girl demands. It is too bad she tried so hard. Bruce Gordon is a likable hero. William Dunn is the half-wit, while others are Charles Kent, Warren Chandler, Nellie Anderson, Gene Layman, Emil Mink and Harry Kiefer.

Names of Producer and Featured Players Can Be Used

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

“Forbidden Valley” will get by as an average production. On the one hand is its great pictorial beauty and on the other its story, quite obvious and lacking in sustaining power. Its two extremes average down to a picture that will give just the usual amount of satisfaction. The beauty of the scenes will, to a certain extent, compensate for the exceedingly obvious story. Any real picture fan will have all of it but the last final twist figured as soon as the romance starts in.

There doesn’t seem to be a great lot to advertise in this aside from the name of the producer. If you have found that previous Blackton productions have gone over well, play him up big here. Dwell on his artistic ability—an ability that has been in evidence in many of his Pathe productions. Also mention the featured leads as they appeared together in his last picture.

It won’t do much good to concentrate on the story in your advertising for it really offers nothing original to talk about. Be content to dwell on the beautiful merits of the picture and to play up Blackton if his name means a good picture to your clientele.
All that your audiences hope for in a Southern picture

You may offer this picture to your patrons with the utmost confidence. It must please them, for aside from the fact that it is splendidly produced and enacted, it has innumerable points of appeal. There are certain things that they expect to find in a Southern drama; it's got them—plus!

First—ROMANCE—Charmingly is presented the love-tale of Phillip and Luzelle among surroundings that delight the eye.

Second—CHIVALRY—Their hearts will warm to the gallant old Colonel whose life is dedicated to the service of another.

Third—ACTION—A fierce-fought feud furnishes many a thrill and there is a rare display of horsemanship on spirited mounts.

Fourth— ATMOSPHERE—So real, so true, that it will almost seem to transport them from their seats to the very heart of the blue-grass country.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Romance of hotel hat-check girl and millionaire who poses as chauffeur
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 5,300 feet

As far as telling a story legitimately or presenting a drama according to fundamental laws, "You Never Can Tell" fails completely. But when the effect of a conglomeration of comedy and pretty scenes is good there is little use in quibbling over points of construction. To be explicit: every time the drunk comes on the scenes there is a laugh along with him yet neither he nor his actions have the remotest connection with the simple little story.

Rowena is dissatisfied with her lot, particularly her basement home. The luxuriousness of her surroundings in the fashionable hotel make her yearn for a taste of high life herself. A Frenchman, creator of fine fashions, enlists her as one of his models in the hotel fashion show. She gains his consent to wear her gown down through the lobby. Thus disguised she meets the hero. There is a case of love at first sight.

The next day the hero comes back to seek her and finds her a hat-check girl again. She, in turn, mistakes him for a chauffeur. Thus the situation remains with the comedy business and sequences providing the interest until the end. There is a bit where Rowena gets mixed up with a hotel lizard and receives the usual villainous proposition but eventually everything comes out all right with regard to the romance. The lizard proves the hero's uncle but he remains quiet regarding his episode with Rowena for obvious reasons.

This picture is one that has been "built up." Small in story interest something had to be done to put it over as a comedy-drama.

Miss Daniels does nicely as a star, is quite appealing and wears her gorgeous clothes (and her shabby ones) well. Jack Mulhall is the hero, while others are Neely Edwards (the drunk), Edward Martindel, Helen Dunbar, Leo White, Mrs. Harry Davenport and Graham Pettie.

Will Surely Amuse—Center Exploitation on New Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There is small doubt about this one getting over with all audiences, although it will almost certainly find its greatest popularity with the down town and metropolitan crowds. There are many very clever quips in the subtitles and neat little turns in the action that will surely be appreciated by those at all acquainted with city life.

A picture with a greater story interest might have been secured to introduce Bebe Daniels as a star, but after all the entertainment it offers is very good—how it is produced is a matter of little importance.

Play up the star big in advertising this. She has had lots of publicity and people surely remember her from her recent Paramount pictures. She is a distinctive young lady and was never buried. no matter how small her roles. Special exploitation to introduce her as a star should be used.

Here is a hero for men and for women; here is a picture of the great sweep and power, and of the gentleness and god-like beauty characterizing the finest works of literature and of the stage and the screen.

Shipwrecked and left alone with books the power of his mind found itself. He went back to the civilization that had branded him, and men and women bowed before his power.

With his soul aslumber he struck with mighty fists, he defeated champions, he bullied bullies, he racked hard heads, and he scorned the law.

With his soul aroused he appealed with mighty voice, he defeated the keenest minds of evil, he lived in justice, he loved in ten-erness, he was the manly idol of women.

CHARACTER OF STORY .......... Old sweetheart attempts to renew romance with happily married husband
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,000 feet

Al and Ray Rockett are making their bow as producers with "The Truant Husband" and a more auspicious beginning has seldom been recorded for a producing company. "The Truant Husband" is one of those intimate little pictures, something on the scheme of the comedies produced by the late Sidney Drew and the comedy realities produced by Mrs. Drew with John Cumberland as the star.

The story is one of Albert Payson Terhune's best and tells of a husband, happily married for six years, who meets an old sweetheart and, on her suggestion, attempts to revive their old romance. The major part of the action concerns their trip to an inn where they used to have such good times.

Vera, the old flame, insists on taking the train just as they used to. It is a hot and dirty trip and wears down the good humor of each of them. To make matters worse, Vera loses her vanity case and when, after the dirty ride and the long dusty tramp along the road, she is unable to freshen up her charms, she presents a very sorry sight.

Friend husband is quite disillusioned when he sees Vera's makeup running amuck over her fact but struggles bravely on to the inn. This garden spot of their romancing has deteriorated into a picnic ground.

More disillusionment. Finally an argument and the two go their ways home.

The husband's excuse to get away from home for the day had been an airplane trip with a friend. The friend was to send a telegram when he reached his destination purporting to come from him, the husband. Back in town he reads a paper that his friend has met with a fatal accident on the return trip. He hurries home, not knowing what alibi to offer his wife and finds, to his joy, that she has been away—the telegram lies on the table unopened. He decides, anyway, to make a clean breast of the affair to his wife but she laughs when he tells her the truth.

Type doesn't convey the delightful subtleties and satirical thrusts of "The Truant Husband." It is a joy from start to finish. Director Heffron has done his work in splendid spirit and has been assisted by a remarkably appreciative cast. Betty Blythe deserves worlds of credit for her portrayal of Vera—especially since she seems willing to "smear" her beauty with the effects of the hot railroad trip. Mahlon Hamilton is exceedingly good as the husband and Francelia Billington's part as the wife is given rare charm by her performance.

A Fine Attraction for High Class Theaters

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Releasing arrangements haven't been concluded with regard to "The Truant Husband" but when they are this picture ought to be signed up by all exhibitors who cater to audiences of intelligence and appreciation. Its parallel with the comedies referred to above only goes part way, for certainly this is chuck full of the most entertaining sort of action and never a dull scene shows itself.

There are good advertising angles too, notably the name of the author and the fact that this was a Cosmopolitan Magazine story and the three featured players. Such a combination of names to advertise ought to draw the crowds in pretty well. And certainly the picture will entertain. It is one of those that causes chuckle after chuckle. Of boisterous laughs it has very few but its THERE in every entertaining point. Grab it when you get the chance.

AS A WHOLE.....Crook melodrama with very exciting action, but contrary characterization leaves much to be desired.

STORY.....Just about as inconsistent as they make 'em—action would have gotten it over if characters had acted convincingly.

DIRECTION.....Thrills very well handled—suspense nicely worked up in individual sequences

CAMERA WORK .................. Very good
STAR......Rather attractive in repose—not much on expressing emotion.

SUPPORT.....Satisfactory with exception of George Cheseboro, who overacts terribly as villain.

DETAIL.......As regards story, very awful—good from thrill point of view.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Girl crook double crosses gang and spoils theft of ten million in gold.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 4,560 feet

"Wanted at Headquarters" is to be noted for some very well suggested thrills. Director Paton has done this end of his work with much skill. The hold-up of the gold train and the subsequent blowing up of the two engines are exciting sequences. The cameraman has come to the aid of the director with some superb night photography—the manner in which the spotlights have been manoeuvred resulting in increased suspense for the action. In fact, the thrills of the picture, taken separately, are altogether unusual.

On the other hand the story of "Wanted at Headquarters" is just about as inconsistent as a story could be. And running it a close second in this respect are the various important characters. Characterization is not looked for in a melodrama, to be sure, but when a character at certain points turns completely about face and starts working contrary to its previous course without any explanation whatsoever, the entire action is liable to falter as it does here. Consistency is the least that can be expected from melodramatic puppets.

The heroine of "Wanted at Headquarters" is Kate Westhanger, the "master mind" of a gang of Australian crooks. She plans a gigantic hold-up of a train carrying ten million dollars worth of gold. How the gang accomplishes it is one of the good thrills. The gang then proceeds to hoodwink a couple of truck drivers into believing the gold is chemicals, ordering them to take it to a certain wharf. Of course the truck drivers don't suspect anything even though the shipment is handed them in the dead of night, far from any sign of civilization.

For some reason best known to herself Kate gets the idea that the gang has double crossed her. She slips the chief truck driver a different address and then spills the news to the gang. They plan to torture her by some unknown means together with Mike Pretherson, an amateur detective, who has fallen into their hands. At the crucial moment the police come to their rescue. The crooks, in escaping in an engine, get into a tail-end wreck which provides another thrill.

Later Kate and Mike embrace after Tommy Carter, a villainous crook who has persistently maltreated Kate from first to last, suddenly reforms when she speaks of her love for Mike.

Feature Thrills and Hold-Up in Advertising This
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The usual crook melodrama has a consistent set of characters and inasmuch as "Wanted at Headquarters" has not, it falls down. However, it has thrills and action enough to get it over with the audiences of the smaller and later run theaters. The thrills are good, not spectacular in themselves, but effective in the manner they are led up to and "suggested."

The title is a good one to advertise and you also have avenues of special exploitation open to you in introducing the new star—Eva Novak.

Stuart Paton, director of innumerable serials, has a name with certain picture folk and mention of him in connection with this will help.

Bill the story as a crook melodrama and feature the daring hold-up of a ten million dollar gold train. Such sensationalism will undoubtedly attract those who will most likely enjoy the picture.

We repeated this to you and asked you to watch the rest of them—told you that they would be better and better. Every NEW Christie comedy is just a little better than the one that went before—because they have behind them the inspiration of exhibitor success, appreciation of audiences, praise of newspapers everywhere. "King of the Circus"—Universal

Thrills and action are furnished the onlooker a-plenty, in the newest Eddie Polo serial, but those who will expect novelty in the way of stunts will be supplied. The fourth episode, called respectively, "Blood Money," "The Mushroom Bullet," "Stolen Evidence" and "Facing Death" all end with situations that have been seen before by serial patrons, and while the speed at which the entire affair moves is satisfactory, the predicaments of Polo and the heroine in a blazing room, Eddie being tossed into the water while tied, and facing the villain who is about to shoot him from a close vantage point are by no means unusual.

Circus atmosphere, as the title leads one to expect, is the predominating feature of the production and will in all likelihood make a favorable impression upon serial fans. It is that which should be the principal card in your exploitation campaign. The tent-show scenes will undoubtedly hold attention and the story generally is quite acceptable. With more novelty in the way of excitement-providing tricks, it would have been an overwhelming success. As it is, it will probably go well, but it does not rank above any of the other Polo draw-out offerings.

Anthony W. Coldwey adapted the story, from what one of the titles tells the spectator, is part of the actual life of the star. J. F. McGowan directed and Cecil Myers and Jean Perkins photographed it. As for the cast, that includes Corrine Porter, Charles Fortune, Harry Madison, arch-villain, and others. In exploiting, play up Polo, of course, for the benefit of his followers, and tell them that it is a tale of a circus star, interwoven with circus occurrences and thrills.

"Balling the Junk"—Chester-Educational

This latest Chester scenic contains some very pretty views along the Yangtse in China. These various shots together with some showing the method of navigation along this river offer some interesting bits. The photography, as usual, is very fine.

"A Flivver Wedding"—Warner Bros.

Whether it does anything else or not, "A Flivver Wedding" proves that all the jokes and comedy business available with the Ford haven't been used. There are several new ones in this and as a whole the picture measures up to the average comedy offering. Practically all the comedy is derived through the hero's effort to reach the home of his sweetheart before her father marries her off to a nobleman. And hero make the journey in a flivver, meeting with all kinds of obstacles to detain him. The bit that gets the most laughs is where, while working on the car he turns away, his car rolls down the hill and another Ford stops in his place, and the driver gets out to examine a flat tire. Hero turns around and by this time thoroughly disgusted, completely wrecks the front of the other man's car.

"Fellow Citizens"—Rolin—Pathé

Pathé's newest Snub Pollard release is distinctly below the standard set in most of the recent single reelers distributed by that organization. The theme about which it is built is practically negligible, while the stunts, are straight knockabout comedy bits possessing little real humor most of the time. At the beginning, the mustached comedian is introduced as a hen-pecked husband, who manages to make his way into the company of a group bound for a party. Some of the footage concerning his ride to the scene of the reception and his being obliged to pay the taxi bill after being compelled to run half of the way and ride on one of the spare tires, is fairly clever.

Pathe Review, No. 73

Colored scenic material, as usual, opens this issue of the Pathé Review series. Portuguese shots comprise it and are far more picturesque and pretty first and quite likely to hold the eye. The slow motion section, this time shows a skilled performer juggling four hats and makes evident the manner in which he tosses them from hand to foot, etc. Some orchids are shown in another colored part which is sure to hold the eye and the portion called "Tricks of the Profiteer," depicts how short quantity containers cheat the consumer of what he pays for. Hy Mayer's Travelogue, "Such Is Life at the Zoo" is one of the best of the series and winds up in tip-top shape.

"My Goodness"—Paramount—Mack Sennett

The usual Mack Sennett plot of the country girl with the inheritance, her yokel suitor and the polished "guy" from the city forms the basis of "My Goodness" a number which measures very favorably besides the fine average of Sennett comedies. The picture contains its full quota of scenes of chasing, shooting and dodging in and out of rooms and although the sequence of this are as somewhat usual, the manner in which the action has been handled results in a fine bunch of laughs. Louise Fazenda and Billy Armstrong are the two best known in the cast though the country bumpkin is played by the fellow who first made a name for himself as a property man in the comedies that Sennett laid on the stage and who since has fast risen to prominence. His work here is very good. Teddy, the Great Dane, also appears.

"An Elephant's Nightmare"—Fox—Sunshine

This is one of the funniest comedies that has issued from the Sunshine studios in a long time; it gets a laugh in the very first scene when Jack Cooper is introduced walking along the street dropping a dozen or so oranges from his trousers. He had previously been robbing the fruit stands. Cooper's walk, expressions and makeup are great. The usual jealous husband and flirtatious wife are introduced and Cooper is then caught up in this situation. The wife is an actress and Cooper gets a job back stage in which he bungles everything, the funniest part of the action, and the most strenuous, is the climax sequence when Cooper and various others of the cast are pursued by two elephants whom Cooper has annoyed by feeding them nitro-glycerine as drinking water. They chase their tormentor into the hotel, upstairs and down, and finally start in breaking down the walls to get at him.

The picture was directed by Vin Moore. It has an unusual number of very fine comedy gags and tricks besides those resulting from the introduction of the elephants.

"All Ballied Up"—Hall Room Boys Photoplays

Percy and Ferdie, H. A. MacGill's caricature duo are seen on the golf links through a considerable portion of this two reeler, which coming shortly after another golf offering, is made less effective than it would ordinarily be. Some of the stuff in the piece is quite funny and the general atmosphere likely to cause merriment, but it might be a good idea to eliminate all discussion about golf from the series for a while. While there is not any very great hilarity most of the time, the average maintained in the production is quite satisfactory and the result is an offering which will probably hold its own in reasonable fashion. Some of the department store material is quite humorous and the links and courtroom are the scenes of some laughs also.
Short Reels

"Kiss Me Quick"—Fox

If the succeeding issues of the Clyde Cook comedy series maintain the pace set in the initial release of the set, the list of bookings will undoubtedly assume prodigious proportions. From start to finish, barring perhaps one or two bits of little importance, the offering is one continuous chain of laughs. Hampton Del Ruth is credited with directing the production and the handiwork of that expert of knockabout comedy extravaganzas is apparent. The manner in which the different incidents are linked together and the order in which they are presented are similar in more than one respect to the formulas so frequently followed in the Sunshine comedies. In the very opening scene the affair hits a high point for the spectacle of the star washing dishes with a machine improvised after some of the contraptions drawn by Rube Goldberg is ludicrous and certain to amuse. Cook's use of the microphone in inducing a young lady to furnish a limb display and some of his other antics kept it going at a high rate of speed. A new bit of chase stuff is that in which Bert Gillespie, second to the star in prominence, rests while Cook dashes about.

Some cutting would probably help the wrestling scene which is hilarious but drags slightly at one or two points. The finishing chase, in which an aeroplane and flivver are used to advantage, with the toppling over of telegraph poles, dragging of boats and people as well as other stunts is a comedy thriller of high quality.

Contortionists are somewhat unusual in pictures and Clyde Cook who can twist himself into all sorts of knots helps relieve a deficiency in that direction. As for this, the excellent quality of the material insures its success.

"The Phantom Foe"—Pathe

Spiritualism is one of the most popular topics of the day. Thousands, both intellectual and otherwise, are interested in reported discoveries about the occult. This serial does not deal directly with spirits, but there is an air of the supernatural about it, an atmosphere that suggests the unknown. Certainly this fact should afford the exhibitor who books it with an excellent exploitation angle.

In the initial episode, the disappearance of the heroine's father is the incident which suggests this means of exploitation. That occurrence is linked with excellent action, including some splendid material in a flashback showing an Indian massacre of the inmates of a trading station.

Technically, the production is up to the mark, but on the other hand, one feels that certain scenes could have been made more effective. In the story, from the pen of George B. Seitz, Pathe has a genuine asset for it possesses the element of mystery to a great extent. Fault may be found with the ending of the second episode, which is almost exactly like the first, but the lure of the unknown as offered the spectator is so great that interest is certain to be aroused.

Juanita Hansen is the principal character and does some excellent work especially in the initial section. Warner Oland as the heavy holds his end of it up as well as anyone could expect, while prominent among the others are William N. Bailey, leading man; Harry Semels in the title role, Nina Cassavant and Wallace McCutcheon.

In advertising, tell them of the mysterious figure, swathed in heavy furs, and the manner in which he causes the father of the heroine to vanish—play on their imagination—start a discussion of the occult and then spring this. They will remember Juanita Hansen, who is starred, and Oland, who is featured. Play their names up sufficiently and use the titles which are a good one. George B. Seitz is another name which should help. As a whole, this is up to the Pathé serial average, and you safely promise them a worth-while, drawn-out attraction.

"The Politicians"—Fox

Mutt and Jeff go campaigning for one of their friends in this. Mutt's idea of getting votes is to force various citizens into the dog-catcher's wagon and drive them to the polls. However, a policeman interferes with his plans. Jeff canvasses among the ladies and wins up the day by getting elected himself. This is a good number, hitting about average in the series.

"Screen Snapshots," No. 9—C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.

As in most of the preceding issues of this series, this one has just the proper blending of personalities of screen celebrities and scenes showing how different varieties of action are put into the picture "Go and Get It," directed by Marshall Neilan was shot from the top of a train, being worthy of mention. It shows how one of the members of the cast stumped from a rope lowered from a flying machine to the top of a moving train. Another bit of interest shows Al Christie directing an elaborate cabaret scene, with several dancing maids. Ruby De Remer has the honor of opening the reel, being shown aboard a motor boat and strolling along. Gale Henry and Bruno Becker, her husband and director are seen making a scene after the tall and thin comedienne is shown as she appears off the silver sheet. Herbert Rawlinson strums a banjo for the benefit of some who would dance at the studio in another section, while Grace Darmond, Helen Jerome Eddy, the late Robert Harron and Pauline Frederick, who occupy quite a few feet, all smile at the onlooker. It might have been a good idea to shift the section showing Neilan at work further towards the finish, for it is by far the most interesting bit of footage in the reel. Otherwise, the production is up to the mark.

Theater Owners Want Non-Theatrical Distribution Stopped Matter Pending

An interesting matter now hanging fire between the theater owners, the Chamber of Commerce and the I. L. M. Club in Greater New York is the question of supplying theatrical institutions with regular dramatic features. Not so very long ago the Chamber of Commerce filed a complaint with the F. L. M. Club and now the question is being revived again. The exhibitors, it is stated, do not object to the showing of films in so-called centers, etc., but do object to the hushing of films in neighborhood armoires, for example, where the life picture theaters can be threatened. They point out that theaters representing heavy financial investments must be safe-guarded.

The matter is now being discussed and nothing definite has been decided upon.

Case on Trial
Symphony Theater in Court Litigation—Fox Reported Interested in the Action

The trial of a suit by the Broadway and 96th St. Realty Co. to compel the City Superintendent to revoke his permit for the erection of the former Symphony theater at 96th St. and Broadway, which suit is said to be in the William Fox interests, has begun before Supreme Court Justice Lehman. Building Superintendent Walsh is opposing the suit, and in his behalf Assistant Corp. Counsel Kennedy said in his brief to the court:

"The real purpose of the litigation is to prevent the owners of the Symphony from operating. The plaintiff is a corporation controlled by William Fox, a business rival in the production of motion picture plays, now operating a theater one block away from the premises in question." In opposition to the plaintiff's contention that the construction of the Symphony is in violation of the building laws, the Building Superintendent insists that it is "the safest in the city."

Lesser to Produce
(By wire to WID’S DAILY)

Los Angeles—It is stated here at Wheeler Oakman will start work on Sel Lesser as soon as the fore completes his engagement with Bessie Love.

It was generally understood in the trade, that Lesser, because of his First National affiliation and base of his interests in the exhibiting part of the business, would cease producing.

At First National, it was stated a few days ago that Lesser had had an understanding with the circuit before left for the coast recently regain future producing activities. For this reason, First National was unable to doubt the veracity of the above dispatch.

Burton George has been engaged by A. J. Binberg to direct a picture in his new series of Broken Productions, tentatively entitled “What is Love?” in which F. Dawn will appear.

The superiority of the RITCHEY poster is based mainly on this fact—it sells the greatest possible number of tickets.

In the current issue of the Motion Picture News, William A. Johnston speaks his mind on "bunk" in motion picture advertising.

We refer this advertisement to his attention. It contains some pretty extravagant statements about "Madame X." Would Mr. Johnston say this was "bunk?" Would he say it to Mr. Lick, of Ft. Smith, Ark., who wrote it?

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION

This is an unsolicited letter from an exhibitor who has the reputation of being a hard man to please. Would Mr. Johnston call this "bunk"?

NEW THEATRE
FORT SMITH, ARK.
C. A. LICK, MANAGER
DEVOTED TO FEATURE PHOTO-PLAYS

September 25, 1920

Mr. L. B. Remy,
Goldwyn Distributing Corp.,
Dallas, Tex.

Dear Mr. Remy:

You need never be afraid of misrepresenting or overestimating "Madame X" to exhibitors. Your description of the picture was inadequate; it even surpassed your most enthusiastic recommendation.

"Madame X" will take its place among the biggest pictures made in the past ten years. At the private press showing we held last week, all agreed that "Madame X" as portrayed by Pauline Frederick was the most masterly example of emotional acting ever seen here. The cast is superb, and the production as a whole is one that will stand out for many months; perhaps years.

The box office power of this picture should be unlimited. As you know we are going to put this picture in for an extended run, and we have decided to advance our admission price, although we have never changed our prices except on one or two occasions. Whatever we charge we can certainly feel that we are giving them their money's worth.

I don't remember of ever having written a voluntary letter of recommendation for a picture; but then I don't remember of ever having seen a picture like "Madame X." You will, of course appreciate that this letter is a sincere tribute to your picture when you realize that we are paying you more for "Madame X" than for any picture ever shown on our screen.

With very best wishes, we are,

Very truly yours,

C. A. Lick,

The Woman Untamed

Nomads of the North, by James Oliver Curwood
Most Gripping Drama
— New York Evening World

It’s Mr. Curwood’s own story, his own continuity and his own production. He’s the author of “Back to God’s Country” and David M. Hartford directed both pictures.

ANIMALS ALMOST HUMAN.

"Nomads of the North’ is an absorbing screen melodrama and the animals almost human. The work of the four principal characters is splendid." — The New York Tribune.

SCENES ARE STRIKING.

"The scenes in this picture are strikingly well made and there are stirring pictures of a forest fire and a storm. The actors are well suited." — New York Times.

POWERFUL THROUGHOUT.

"Wonderful photography, featuring especially a forest fire and the terror stricken flight of wild beasts it traps, marks ‘Nomads of the North.’ Nothing so genuinely gripping has been seen on the screen for a long time. The play is powerful throughout." — New York Evening World.

FULL OF ACTION.

"Nomads of the North’ is full of action in a background of excellent and picturesque play. The cast contains clever players." — New York American.

WONDERFUL FOREST FIRE.

"A godly stretch of timber was sacrificed in the making of a forest fire in ‘Nomads of the North’ and the cameraman must have breathed smoke and scorched his hands to photograph some of the scenes. The silver sheet itself fairly crackles. The impersonations are faultless." — New York Mail.

FINE ANIMAL ACTING.

"A puppy and a cub bear play an important part in ‘Nomads of the North.’ Their acting was highly amusing. There is a thrilling representation of a man’s fight for life and a forest fire." — New York Telegram.

SCENES ARE NOTABLE.

"The most notable scenes are a thrilling forest fire and a storm. The scenery is beautiful. A dog and a bear do excellent work." — New York Morning Telegraph.

REALISTIC FOREST FIRE.

"Nomads of the North’ furnishes an attraction of unusual merit. It is a splendid story of primitive life in the Northwest. The picture is generously supplied with the native beauty of that country. There is an unusually realistic forest fire which brings the story to a powerful climax." — New York Sun.

3 Years’ Contract
Arbuckle Allied With Famous Players for That Period—Schenck Still Holds Interest

It developed yesterday that Roscoe Arbuckle, by arrangement with Joseph M. Schenck will be starred for a period of three years on the Paramount program. The arrangement is such that Paramount is to finance the productions.

The above was learned through a statement made by Mr. Schenck of a report published in WID’S DAILY on pt. 9, that he had disposed of his interest in the Arbuckle contract to Famous Players. The report emanated from the coast but Mr. Schenck is in Europe at the time and his general manager could not reach him for a statement.

Schenck yesterday: “I have sold the contract and I certainly could not do so.”

By the sale of the Princess, Palace and Public Theater Macon of five houses, four picture theaters and the Grand, are now under one management.

The purchase was made through Capital Theater Co. of which Joseph Howard is president, and the Capital Theater Co. is controlled by Lynch organization which has for some time owned the Capital and Grand.

Signs Herbert Brenon

Joseph M. Schenck has signed Herbert Brenon to direct a Norma Talmadge-type production. The story has not been determined upon as yet.

Whispered words of love that meant nothing except to a woman deceived. One of the dramatic episodes in J. Parker Read, Jr’s, second Associated Producers’ production, “A Thousand to One,” starring Hobart Bosworth.

After 100 Theaters

Louisville, Ky.—Col. Fred Levy of the Strand Amusement Co., holders of Associated First National franchise in this city, has purchased theaters in Owensboro, Ky., including a new $100,000 house, the Blech theater, which will open on the 18th.

This purchase brings the number of theaters owned or controlled by Strand Amusement Co. to 16, these situated in Louisville, Paducah, Owensboro, Mayfield, Princeton and Irving.

A report is current that Col. Levy is about to build a new $150,000 theater here.

“The purchase of all the theaters in Owensboro,” said Levy, “is the consummation of plans entered into prior to my recent visit to the coast, and were put through by Messrs. Goldberg, Leo Keller and myself as a step towards our ultimate project of the accumulation of 100 houses in this state and in Tennessee.

767 Millions

That is Figure of Business Done at the Box Office for Fiscal Year—Distributors Did 87 Million (Special to WID’S DAILY)

Washington—A preliminary report has been issued by the Department of Internal Revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30 last, based upon figures reveal that the Government collected from the exhibitors of the country taxes aggregating $76,733,647 and from distributors for the renting of films, $4,381,410.

The report is particularly interesting inasmuch as it gauges in a very definite fashion just what amount of the distribution end of the industry business was done at the box office.

The admission tax is a ten per cent, tax and therefore places the gross business from July 1, 1919, to June 30, 1920 at $767,336,470. Likewise the rental tax is a five per cent, tax and therefore places the gross distributing business done in the United States for the same period at $87,028,200.

Vidor Arranges Distribution

(News Item)

Los Angeles—It is understood that King Vidor has completed distribution arrangements for his new series of films, "Heading Home," for release away from location at Truciee and in his absence, his studio will not talk.

New Organization Under Way

What will undoubtedly prove a surprise in film circles will be the formation of a new company in the business by a well known figure in the distribution end of the industry.

Ruth Files Suit

“Babe” Ruth added to the list of court suits by seeking an injunction against William A. Shea and Herbert Yudkin on Monday to restrain them from promoting "Heading Home," on the ground that $30,000 of the $50,000 Ruth alleges to be due him for posing in the film, has not been paid.

What the Leading New York Daily Have to Say of Bway Shows

Following are brief excerpts of reviews of several current productions as published in the New York evening newspapers:

WORLD—Occasionally, however, a picture is shown which is everything a motion picture is supposed to be. "Doubt My Wife," which is the featured screen attraction at the Rivoli this week, is one of the most articulate and interesting pictures to be shown at the Rivoli since another picture motion house this year, but of the act before the camera was excellent, the work of Mabel Johnstone Scott as the Indian maiden being especially noteworthy. TIMES—Although the story, in its simplicity, may be regarded as slight, the picture is marked by a vigorous performance of its leading players, and the photography. Much of its action takes place on a Canadian frontier and the pictures relating to it are rich in atmosphere, detail and scene effects. George Melford, the director, made many striking scenes, even if he did not make his story and its principal characters as vital as possible. TRIBUNE—The picture is attractive, but the picture is perhaps due to our way of thinking of the feature. The Tschalowsky's "March She's" is played as the picture, and we never heard it rendered more effectively. And to us the brightest spot in the picture was Mr. Douglas. He is a charming, sincere actor, and a picture star. HERALD—A very praiseworthy adaptation of a novel, written and directed at the Rivoli in "Beloved My Wife," by studio director Hugo Rosenn. In booking this picture at Rivoli, the studio decided on a successful approach to complement the picture, but it may be somewhat a hard path. The story is carried out admirably and the acting is fine, bringing her to a fine, clear and delicate from the day of the picture. "The Sin of Rosanne" is a very sympathetic picture. SUN—The central character of the picture is played by a woman of the highest type, Miss Clayton. A novel which probably which appeal to a large audience. Around the world of "Rosanne" is not appealingly simple, even when she is not her best self. And Miss Clayton's time is spent in showing how particularly she can in such a complex character. TELEGRAM—At the Rivoli Ethel Clayton gives a very sympathetic performance, in the role of Rosanne. RIVAO—"Rosanne" is not appealingly simple, even when she is not her best self. And Miss Clayton's time is spent in showing how particularly she can in such a complex character. MAIL—No comment. HERALD—Ferdinon devotes an extended review later. To the Rialto, through this story, is apt magazine Director Hugo Rosenn with St. cloud, with Rosanne's title. It is dreadfully wicked and also dreadfully sweet. AMERICAN—No comment. MAIL—No comment. "The Sin of Rosanne" is not appealingly simple, even when she is not her best self. And Miss Clayton's time is spent in showing how particularly she can in such a complex character. MAIL—No comment. RITCHEY—In the 'Song of the Soul,' "Behold My Wife" is well regarded. MAIL—No comment. TELEGRAM—"Behold My Wife" This is not just an exciting picture for the reason that it is a tough, hard-hitting picture. Photography. Photography is well-raised in the picture, and the story is always logical and convincing. MAIL—A use of the scenes should result in one of the best pictures of the year. Otherwise, the plot is gripping, logical, powerful. The scenes in the picture are the greatest. The picture is not only for the audience, but also for the entertainment. MAIL—No comment.

D. W. Griffith Plans That Many Tours for "Way Down East"—"Birth" Record is Exceeded
Within the next six weeks 20 companies will be sent on tour to play "Way Down East" in first class theaters and their prevailing scale of prices for regular road attractions. Each organization will be a separate unit comprising two baggage loads of costume and effects and carrying a symphonic orchestra to interpret the score.

The weekly receipts at the 44th St. Theater are said to exceed from $4,000 to $5,000 those taken by "The Birth of a Nation" for the corresponding period of its run in New York.

In addition to the New York engagement "Way Down East" is being presented at the Majestic and Tivoli Temple in Boston; the Chestnut St. Opera House, Philadelphia; the Curran, San Francisco, and the Auditorium, Los Angeles. The combined receipts for the five shows are said to average between $80,000 and $90,000 weekly.

Griffith makes the authentic announcement that his present plans exceed his similar bookings for the seasons of 1921-1922 and 1922-1923.

One action was directed against the against L. F. O'Donnell, an exhibitor, for $25,000 damages.

In both suits an injunction to are sought.

According to the complaint, Hart acted as star in the films in ques-

now. Hart declared the old films have been damaged by constant use and by being transported from

The plaintiff sets forth that the old films were being shown under titles which are similar to films produced recently by Hart and he alleges the titles were selected with a view to decoying the public.

which means that "Way Down East" will continue as a traveling attraction for at least three years to come and will not only be seen in any other theaters but those given over to the bookings of theatrical attractions.

As soon as the American routes are laid out other organizations will be sent out of New York to cover Europe, Asia, Australia and South America.

Plan Short Reel Output

Los Angeles—The Artographic Films, Inc., a company which will specialize in making short reel features, has been launched. J. E. Kelly, former production manager for Thos. H. Ince, and Charles Boydeu are heads of the new company.

Temporary headquarters of the Artographic Films, Inc., will be at the Bloom film laboratories. Releasing arrangements have not been completed.

Want Shows in Watervliet

Watervliet, N. Y.—Theater owners here are to renew their efforts to open their houses on Sundays. A petition signed by hundreds of the citizens will be presented to Mayor Michael P. Walsh, requesting that the question be submitted to the voters at the coming election.

The sentiment in favor of Sunday performances is decidedly stronger than ever before and if submitted to the voters, there appears to be little doubt but that the picture interests will win.

"THE RACE OF THE AGE"

EVERY DETAIL PICTURED, THE WHOLE RACE SHOWN AND THE REASON WHY TOLD BY

THE picture was made under exclusive contract with the owners of Kenilworth Park, Windsor, Ontario where the great race was run.

Not a camera—motion picture or still—except the ones in the hands of the ten men who photographed "The Race of the Ages" was admitted to the track. There is no possibility that any other motion picture can offer even the slightest bit of actual views of the race.

Exhibitors should guard against make-shift reels, composed of scenes of the two horses in previous races in which they have separately engaged—this has been their sole meeting.

Thousands will demand to see this picture—but they will know the genuine.

Wonderful results have been obtained in making "The Race of the Ages." It will be the box office triumph of the year. You should watch the trade papers for the detailed announcement.

Every newspaper in the world carries columns regarding this race—Every one of your patrons knows of this event—"The Races of the Ages."

EDUCATIONAL FILMS

CORPORATION OF AMERICA

729 Seventh Ave. New York
Irwin's Stand

Gustavus R. Rogers, of Rogers and Rogers, attorneys for Walter W. Irwin, who is involved in litigation over the National Playhouse Corp., yesterday issued a statement regarding the action in which Harvey H. Hawes and Arland W. Johnson are defendants, against their client, Irwin.

"I desire also to make it perfectly clear that Mr. Irwin has not organized nor does he claim to have organized the National Playhouse Corp. This was an institution which Mr. Hevenor and Mr. Johnson had gotten up in corporate form and attempted to sell its stock. Mr. Irwin never directly or indirectly sold or counseled the sale of a dollar of stock in that corporation. On the contrary, Mr. Irwin's suit is based upon, and he so alleged in his papers, that what he had laid out as a perfectly legitimate plan was distorted by the defendants into a plan such as he would not countenance or have anything to do with, his suit being based, in part at least, upon his knowing that which he claims was practiced upon him and upon those who were the parties to the plan.

"In other words, instead of it being true that Mr. Irwin helped form the company, his claim is that the defendants, in forming the present corporation and did upon a plan which they know he would not approve or participate in."

David Powell, who is the first and only one-third of the stock company to be maintained in the London Studio of the Famous Players, sailed last week for England.

Ford Sterling Touring Country

Los Angeles—Carrying with him an appointment from Mayor Meredyth, Ford Sterling, of the stock company, is touring the country as a roving advertising agent for Angel climate, industries, good roads and other attractions of Southern California. He is especially signed with Special Pictures Corp. for a personal appearance tour of the exchange centers of the country.

Empire Film Co., Chicago purchased rights for Illinois, Wasasman and Stephens, Atlanta, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida and Alabama and Alexander Film Corp., Greater New York and Northern New Jersey on "The Devil's Angel" produced by Lejaren A. Hiller and state, righted by Clark-Cornellies Corp.

Fox Production Being Rushed

The William Fox studio in Culver place just places now, with 19 companies at work.

"The Hidden Light" To Be Shown Buyers

So insist have state-right buyers been to see "The Hidden Light," the playphoto starring Dolores Cassinielli, which is being offered on the independent market by the Commonwealth Film Corporation, Sam Zierer, president, 1600 Broadway, that the latter is decided to send a field man to many of the key cities of the country. This will make it possible for the anxious buyers to get a first-hand view of the production.

It is expected that little time will be required to close the various territories for the picture. The unusual success of the picture in Greater New York and upper New York State is expected to be duplicated in the territories soon to be covered.

"The Hidden Light" was written by Abraham Schomer, whose play "Tecay" was a big, gripping, dramatic success on Broadway.—Advt.

Death to Percentage

Is M. P. O. Cry to Country's Exhibitors—Likens It to a Mortgage

"It is time we in the motion picture industry put a stop to the attempt on the part of some producers and distributors to make a percentage, the real purpose of which is to make a mortgage on the independent picture.

"Percentage has all the disagreeable aspects of a mortgage. You must account to the mortgage holder. While you are playing percentage, you cannot truthfully say that your property is free and incumbered and you do not get sufficient returns proportionate to your investment to justify so dangerous a precedent. It's a bad habit to get into.

"Certain interests have advocated percentage booking as a fair proposition. Percentage booking in the very nature of things can never be quite fair. It immediately handicaps the owner of the theater. It establishes as a precedent for rental rates for subsequent pictures irrespective of the extraordinary conditions prevailing with the playing of the present picture.

"It is an indirect method for certain interests to secure your theater or to find a location for a new theater. If their percentage returns are sufficiently inviting.

"The way to kill percentage booking is to keep away from it, as you would from a dose of bichloride of mercury. Stand by your friends, shut your cars against even the suggestion of percentage booking. Remember, you are playing for your life.

"Several brainy, ambitious women desire who can sell an unique picture to the theaters. State film service in detail.

Jap Film Shown on Coast

Los Angeles—"Shadows of the West" the film dealing with the Japanese situation in California concluded a week's run at the Philharmonic auditorium here last week. This is the picture which met with a number of difficulties before it was finally concluded. The producer Chinese who acted as actors held up the film for a time and there was also a lawsuit suit to be fought. The film is expected to be defrauded of $100,000—representing a one-third interest in the film.

Robertson-Cole Undecided Over Making Future Pictures With Carpenter

The pros and cons of a rather important question are being discussed at Robertson-Cole. The issue is whether or not Georges Carpenter, who made "The Wonder Man" for that organization will appear in any more pictures for that organization. It will be recalled that before Carpenter left for Europe some months ago Robertson-Cole announced that the Frenchman had been signed for three years.

The New York Times carried an interesting item yesterday morning which read as follows: "Carpenter's plans are somewhat uncertain. He may contract for another appearance in the movies. Curry, who is Carpenter's accredited American representative, stated that possibly the French boxer would again appear on the screen." It seems that Robertson-Cole holds some sort of an option of Carpenter's screen services and that if he ever (Continued on Page 2)
$122,579 Attach'mt
Leved Against Mack Sennett—Charles O. Baumann Brings Suit

An attach'mt for $122,579 was granted in the Supreme Court yesterday against Mack Sennett in a suit by his former eastern representative, Charles O. Baumann for breach of contract. The attach'mt was granteed on the ground that Sennett is not a resident of New York and the action is now seeking property of Senett's on which to levy the attachment.

The complaint alleges that in July 1917, Sennett and Baumann entered to an agreement by which the latter was to act as eastern representative until Sept., 1920, and was to get $100 a week, and 2% of the net profits on all the Mack Sennett-Paramount pictures. He was also to get $100 a week when he was absent from New York and his carfare.

Bauman clains $570 of carfare and salary for a months' trip to California in 1918. Baumann alleges that Sennet discharged him without cause on Nov. 8th last, and claims that his salary to September would have been $22,000. He estimates that his share of the net profits under the contract would have amounted to at least $100,000.

should make future pictures it will be under its management. But whether those pictures will ever be made is the question. Incidentally it was said yesterday that bockings on "The Wonder Man" continue to poorly.

A Tivoli Planned

A Tivoli, acrively identified with Koncolidated, is secretary of the new company.

The theater proper will seat 1,560 and the roof garden 1,200. House wreckers are now tearing down 9 three and four story buildings on the to the block with stores at 831 to 841 Eighth Ave. and the three-story dwellings at 303 to 307 West 50th St. The plot has a frontage of 133.5 on 8th Ave. and 137.6 on 50th St.

The main entrance of the theater will be at 830 Eighth Ave. On the remaining portion of the avenue from the frontage the building will be from four to five stories in height, with stores on the ground floor and apart-mants on the upper floors. The operation will cost in the neighborhood of $500,000.

The Arena Theater Corp., a sub| subsidiary of the Consolidated, has taken
| a 21 year lease on the plot, with
| a 21 year renewal.

The property is interesting to note, is little more than block away from the Capitol and within a short distance of the Rivoli.

Griffith Offices Give Some Figures on Business Done by "Way Down East"

The Griffith offices are enthusiastic over the manner in which "Way Down East" is piling up the shekels. Yesterday the following information was ascertained from the Griffith organization as to box office receipts in various cities.

44th St., New York, on Oct. 2, $16,471.25. Gross in New York for week ending Oct. 2 (only two shows per day), $16,471.25.

In Philadelphia, where it is playing at the Chestnut St. O. H., the average weekly business is now $13,000. Only 12 shows a week are being given in Philadelphia, there being an Sunday shows. On Sept. 25, in Philadelphia, "Way Down East" did $1,807 on the day. On Oct. 2, the day's receipts totalled $3,273.50 in two performances.

In Boston the show at the Majestic played to $3,070.50 on two performances, Oct. 2nd. For the week ending Oct. 9, the gross receipts on 12 showings reached $14,260.

First National Proud, Too

First National is proud of what "Pasion," the Pola Negri picture, did at the Garden theater, Paterson, N. J., last week in the way of box office receipts. The picture played to 27,000 people in six days and the theater, which played the picture has a seating capacity of 1,100.

A Broadway theater is being sought for the picture. The Paterson showing was in the nature of a test.

Phillips Film for B'way Run

Universal is seeking a Broadway theater to house "Once to Every Man," the Allan Holubar-Dora Dwan production.

Special Showings for "Over the Hill"

The Fox organization is making special plans for "Over the Hill." The picture will be given special runs all over the country and will not reach neighborhood theaters until 1922. This does not mean that big first runs will not get the picture, however.

The picture will be moved from the Bay to the Central on Sat., Aug. 1. Everyone at Fox is hoping that long runs are kind enough to allow it to remain there.

Berman went on to state that he had talked with some of the largest theater owners in the country, as well as some of the men who had small show houses in the various states he visited, and he states that it seems to be the consensus of opinion that regardless of the quality of merchandise that the company releases, that the exhibitors will be skeptical of doing business with Abrams’ company until they concede to the demand that a moderate deposit or advance payment be substituted for their policy of demanding a 100% deposit in advance. Berman was firm in his belief that the exhibitors of all states are more anxious to have a definite nation-wide policy set by this company, than this special modification which has been going on in various territories.

The United Artists’ offices had no comment to make on Berman’s observations.

Selznick Wins
"Blind Youth" Litigation Ended in District Court—Damage Suits Pending

The long drawn-out litigation between National Picture Theaters, Inc., of which Lewis J. Selznick is president and the Foundation Film Corp., over the use of the title, "The Blindness of Youth," has resulted in a decision by Federal Judge Learned Hand in favor of National. The litigation revolved around the picture "Blind Youth," which Selznick produced for National. He claimed "The Blindness of Youth" infringed on "Blind Youth." The trial of the case was concluded this week in the U. S. District Court. The Selznick offices have announced their intention of filing damages suits against the several exhibitors and state right buyers who have infringed in any way with "The Blindness of Youth." Selznick claims to have warned these various individuals the time the litigation was started.

Murray Garson stated yesterday that Foundation will appeal the case. He stated that the title of his production has been changed to "Youth Blindness."

Bean, in an affidavit to the M. T. O. Commit- tee, stated that Black threatened him when he refused to sell his Wonder- lane of the best with, however, denies knowing this man or that his organ- ization entered upon any negotiations with him.

Regarding the affidavit of Mrs. Sanjentait, who stated that Black tried to secure her theater and a piece of property at Pembroke, N. H., Bean stated:

"* * * I asked her if she would be interested in some combination arrangement where she would finance a theater. She was interested and the town was enlisted, and her answer was 'Yes.' (She was very discourteous.) Simply told her that we did not know what she was purchasing, she could not expect such a home as she was attempting to move the mo- tor inn at Pembroke. It was not our judgment that we might do it, but we did know that since.

Black admits that he attempted to engineer a deal with Mrs. Minnie C. Eames of Petacberry of Denver, He said a $88 seat theater, but that one of Charles Bean's friends in Manchester was the one who threatened to build in competition and not Black, after all, were said.

S. C. Carpenter of Richmond, Vt., former member of the M. P. T. O. Committee, charged that his rent was raised $1,600 a year because Black tried to secure a lease on the Town Hall which Carpenter operated. Black's defense is this:

"I found that ' * * * there were two factions in the town, one faction being the one ' * * * and the new faction ' * * * of which Mr. Bean was a member, that the most likely thing was that some of those gentlemen did not want the opera house when it expired, and the rent was raised $1,600 a year. The committee gave no testimony to the lease of the opera house."

Chester J. Glavine, former partner with Carpenter, Black and others, at a latter date of Sept. 25, that Carpenter's testimony was false. Glavine said, in part:

"Carpenter has never run the theater for the benefit of the town or any one else but himself. If there wasn't good money in it for himself, he would drop it quick. Carpenter gave me a peculiar deal of the first year of the day he did not hand over the theater to Mrs. Goodwin and I don't think he got away with that."

According to Black, he never offered Mrs. Pauline Dodge of Morris- ville, Vt., $700 for her property as stated at the hearing.

Another portion of the Black state- ment deals with the statements of John Eames who testified in consid- erable detail relative to Black's meth- ods in Vermont. Black says:

"* * * I was exonerated, as was Bean, of the fact mentioned in the affidavit to the M. T. O. Committee, that Black threatened him with the purchase, and Mrs. Good- win had raised his rent. Mr. Bean stated that Black would not do as he said. After some talk with the person for the 53 shares belonging to himself and Mrs. Good- win. He said Mrs. Goodwin would prefer to state a lower amount, he would not, and would be known to the contract and I gave Eames an additional check for $1,981.25 on Oct. 14, 1919.

Black then related how Eames ac- cused Mr. Black, and the Park after that deal and that Zanleoni, a leading stockholder, was suspicious of Eames methods. He was finally discharged by Black, who further says:

"Soon after I took over the Park, Eames asked me if I couldn't take a trip in his auto in the surrounding territory to see if he could find some good theaters or openings for theaters. He told me that many of the owners and he wanted to tell them about the errand I was running for him. It was in this way that he told me about these things, that I had been interested in the game and the rentals, I have and his associates now have five or six of the theaters in this territory and make their living by putting on picture shows. I think I may be able to get his theaters, as I have an option on about $5,000, and an old pianist which he would like to put in a private house in the city, which he could sell in a private house in the city, he should sell in Mass. not with regard to his. I have a case against him. I have everything in the state so that if I have a case against him. I am very fortunate enough to get his theaters."

"When we found out the kind of a man we were dealing with, I called upon attorney, called upon my attention to Eames way of getting the purchase money when he and Mrs. Good- win sold us the theater, and we had a satisfactory understanding that we require of Mrs. Goodwin with $5,000. I am in touch with Mrs. Goodwin and the theaters, and the following affidavit speaks for us."

Black has in his possession an affi- davit signed by Mrs. Goodwin and dated Sept. 27 which says that Eames never paid Mrs. Goodwin her share of the $1,981.25 Black says he gave her.

Eames told the M. P. T. O. Com- mittee that a Famous Players sales- man named Sam Merchant knew of the affair and was present at Barre, Vt., which Black "in personal con- fidence" secured four days later. To refute this, Merchant has voluntarily prepared a statement, under date of Sept. 28, in which he says, in part:

"In a recent article in your paper, you stated that Mr. John R. Eames of Barre, Vt., testified at the Hotel Astor meeting that he was working for the M. P. T. O. Committee. statement I think he had an option on the Bijou Theater property and that I gave him the information and he suc- ceeded in getting the option away from the committee."

Checking Waste
“The waste incurred in distributing films,” says the Exhibitors’ Bulletin, “as is the case with all other industries, is like an incurable disease which is felt throughout every branch of the industry. It entails a tremendous loss on the man who pays the film rentals.

This organization is now working out means and ways of stopping, or at least checking, the waste thereby materially reducing the cost of film. Any recommendations on this subject which your practical experience may suggest to you will be greatly appreciated by the organization. Please reduce these suggestions to writing and send them in. They may be of great value.”

Pittsburgh—The City Council, sitting as the Public Safety Committee has heard arguments concerning the new law permitting the use of projection machines in schools, churches, etc., without requiring that they be enclosed in booths or operated by a licensed operator. REALART continues the policy which it adopted early in its career, the sound box-office principle that a picture is no stronger than the weakest member of its cast, and it continues to provide its stars with the best support which the entire moving picture acting personnel affords. The old idea of equipping a production with a star and nothing but sawdust for support is disastrous to the picture, the star, and the Box-office.

Charles Ray and Director Storm have gone and "done" it this time and it isn't so much the story they selected even if it is Sol. Smith Russel's stage success. But it's the way they did it. What with the star's inimitable personality and the wealth of realism which he puts into his portrayal of the "rube" and Jerome Storm's faculty of doing the right thing at the right time, "Peaceful Valley" comes about as close to perfection as anybody could want and as for its entertainment value, well—even a chronic grouch will be pleased in spite of himself and if they don't go away feeling repaid for the price of their admission, they're all wrong.

To give a cut and dried synopsis of the story would be like telling someone who had never seen a Rolls-Royce that it was an automobile, for it's all in actually seeing the thing. The story of a country boy who tried to support his mother and sister and then has to combat with the villain who steps in, steals his sister and later comes back to cheat him out of his home doesn't sound like very much, but it's there nevertheless due entirely to the star and his director.

Just imagine the star in country boy outfit being chastised by his mother for working on the Sabbath, then imagine him laughing it off by picking the mother up and running into the house with her. Then see him get his Sunday togs out of their weekly hiding place and see the camphor balls roll out. Then watch Charlie get out his Sunday derby all carefully wrapped up in newspaper. They'll get a good laugh when our hero's funny little dog "Whiskers" follows his master to church and interrupts the services by running up the middle aisle and into Charlie's lap.

And perhaps one of the most human bits in the picture is the boy's first shave, when after considerable discouragement from his mother, he insists upon trying out the razor and his manoeuvring to manipulate the blade. With the male members of the audience this will probably register the biggest hit.

Charlie returns from the city after a futile search for his sister who ran away with the villain. Later he "falls" for Virginia who is stopping at the summer hotel in "Peaceful Valley" with her father but the villain, again in town and unknown to hero, the one with whom his sister ran away, is also after Virginia or rather her father's money. Villain tries to enlist Virginia's father's aid in buying hero's home because he has tasted the well water and believes it contains valuable substance.

Of course, in the end the sister returns, the wicked one is invited to leave town and hero gets the lady of his heart. Incidentally the ending is everything you could want. Hero and his girl are in the back seat of an auto with hero's pup "Whiskers" nodding approval in the front seat. In the cast are Ann May, Charlotte Pierce, Walter Perkins, Lydia Knott and others.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Book this without delay because if you don't you'll be sorry. There isn't an over abundance of worth while pictures on the market and when there is one around you'd better grab it. "Peaceful Valley" is more than just a picture. It's a bit of real life with the humor and pathos mixed in and Charles Ray as the hero of the tale is a real country boy with all the mannerisms and the capers of a "rube." Don't miss it.

Go the limit on promises. You can't say too much for the star and his work in this and by all means give Jerome Storm his share of credit. He deserves it. Stills taken from moments in the picture will attract attention and do anything to get them in and they'll go out more than satisfied.

It is said that folks don't go to the theater to weep but there are times when even the most calloused find a measure of satisfaction, or is it relief, in tears? And that's just the way you feel when you look at "The Song of the Soul." You'll cry because you can't help it and feel the better for it. And at that you'll go out feeling happier and more satisfied with your lot, for you can't resist the influence of the blind girl who smiles through her tears and finally sacrifices her sight forever that her husband may not be made unhappy by the fear that his wife will scorn him if she sees his disfigured face.

You'll Please Those Who Like Good Pictures By Showing Them This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Despite its pathetic tone and perhaps some improbabilities, "The Song of the Soul" is bound to find favor with those who have any sentiment at all. The influence felt by actions and resignation of the blind girl produce a feeling of consolation in spite of you and folks are apt to leave the theater feeling benefited by the story even without the happy ending.

Recall the fact that the production is an adaptation of William Locke's "An Old World Romance." Give the star a prominent place in your advertising and tell them this is the best thing she has done. Also mention Mr. Lieber, who is well known for his work on the legitimate stage. Refer to the story as that of the "happy blind girl" and tell them it's pathetically beautiful.

Unusual Story Twist To Squaw Man Plot Makes Entertaining Picture

“BEHOLD MY WIFE”
George Melford Prod.-Paramount
DIRECTOR .................. George Melford
AUTHOR ...................... Sir Gilbert Parker
SCENARIO BY ................. Frank Condon

AS A WHOLE .......... Squaw man story with very unusual twist; generally very good entertainment STORY ..................... Well handled throughout DIRECTION .................. Very good
PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Excellent
LIGHTINGS ................ Fine
CAMERA WORK ................. Very good
LEADING PLAYERS ........ Mabel Julienne Scott, Milton Sills and Elliott Dexter all very good SUPPORT .................... Commendable
INTERIORS .................... Splendid; Canadian Northwest scenes EXTERIORS .................. Good atmosphere

“Behold My Wife,” an adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker’s “The Translation of a Savage,” presents a version of the squaw man story but it is conventional in this respect alone. One very unusual twist comes in the early part of the picture and sheds an originality over the whole that results in a generally very fine piece of entertainment.

George Melford has given the picture a very good production. The English scenes are particularly well presented with regard to atmosphere, while the scenes of the Canadian Northwest offer a fine contrast.

The story tells of Frank Armour, an Englishman of fine family, on business in Canada. One day he learns from a home newspaper that his fiancee his jilted him for another, while the mail also brings word from his family that her act was all for the best.

Armour is furious at his relatives for their attitude and plots a subtle form of revenge which takes shape when he marries Lali, supposedly a full-blooded Indian princess. He sends her home to his family thinking to humiliate them.

In the meantime Armour takes to drink, takes to it a little too much by the way, for complete conviction as regards character, and goes quickly from bad to worse over a period of several years. He is finally taken in hand by an engineer who breaks him of the habit by administering several sound drubbings.

A new man again, Armour returns home. He discovers that his crippled brother, Richard, has made a perfect lady out of the previously rather savage Lali. She is an honored figure of society and a proud mother. Thus it is that Armour’s method of revenge proves the making of himself and the happiness of the old English family.

Particularly are the scenes between Lali and Richard entertaining. Mabel Julienne Scott and Elliott Dexter make them so by contributing very fine performances. Milton Sills work as Armour is satisfactory, although he sometimes fails in giving a consistent characterization. The support is very good, including Winter Hall, Helen Dunbar, Ann Forrest, Maud Wayne, Fred Huntley, F. R. Butler, F. Temple-Powell, Mark Fenton and Jane Wolfe.

An Exceedingly Good Drawing Card
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

“Behold My Wife” ought to do a particularly good business for all exhibitors. While it is not a perfect picture as pictures go, it is very satisfactory in its entertaining qualities and with its unusual twist to the squaw man story it certainly ought to register big with all audiences.

The title is one that ought to arise considerable interest and the information that it is an adaptation from a work of Sir Gilbert Parker’s ought to act as a further box office attraction.

The three leads will also serve to draw, particularly Elliott Dexter. Aside from his work in the latest DeMille picture, which, however, has not been shown in all localities, this is his first appearance since his illness. Real fans will certainly welcome the opportunity of seeing him again.

Use George Melford’s name also. His work has been consistently good throughout a long period of years, so good in fact that he is now making “director” productions for Paramount. A liberal use of his name in advertising this picture will help draw the crowds and also help you on the future Melford productions that are coming.
Terriss Scores Another Success with Gouverneur Morris Story

Tom Terriss' "TRUMPET ISLAND" Vitagraph

AUTHOR ..................... Gouverneur Morris
SCENARIO BY .......... Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Chester
CAMERAMAN .................. Ernest Hallor

AS A WHOLE .... Well produced with good airplane thrill and pleasing romantic touch that is well handled STORY ...... Has varied appeal and considerable entertainment value for most any audience

DIRECTION ...... Very good; works up to the climax with a punch that makes it go over big

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Splendid
LIGHTINGS .......................... Good
CAMERA WORK .................. Good

PLAYERS ...... Margaret De La Mottt pretty little heroine; others all good

EXTERIORS ................ Some pretty coast shots
INTERIORS ...................... All right

DETAIL ........................... Nothing very wrong

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... After many separations hero and heroine are finally united

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 6,141 feet

Tom Terriss has surely provided Gouverneur Morris' story with a thoroughly live production. He has selected a suitable company of players and set out to make an attractive picture and has succeeded in handling the story material in a way that presents a varied appeal. There's a brief convent atmosphere at the beginning, later that of a home of wealth, then a peep at "high life" followed by some wonderful outdoor stuff.

The airplane sequence has been very effectively manipulated and one shot especially which shows the machine break in two, with one wing bearing the husband dashed to the water below while the wife in the other section is driven by the wind and lands on "Trumpet Island."

Some minor faults such as improbable coincidence and one or two slip-ups in detail aren't going to matter much as far as the audience is concerned when they size up the picture as a whole. "Isn't life a queer thing?" This is the excuse for having the hero and heroine meet several times before they really discover their mutual love.

There are some close-ups of letters that are not as legible as they might be. Margaret De La Mottt is a very pretty and attractive little heroine while Wallace MacDonald does very well as the hero. Arthur Hoyt also gives a good performance as the rich old wife-seeker.

Margaret is brought home from her convent school to be married off to a wealthy old Englishman because her father is financially distressed and depends upon his daughter's marriage to a wealthy man to relieve this distress. But Margaret has her own ideas as to a husband and cherishes the memory of a soldier she had seen while at school. It happens that the soldier is out of work and chances by Margaret's home and sees her with her intended husband. Later he saves her life when she attempts to drown rather than face the marriage.

Wallace MacDonald, the soldier, secures work in an airplane factory and comes in for a lot of money when an old man he had once befriended dies and leaves him the right to his airplane invention. Hero sets out to spend his fortune and leads a wild life for a time but comes to his senses and departs for "Trumpet Island" to regain his manhood. In the meantime Margaret marries and immediately following the ceremony departs with her husband for a ride in the air. The plane is wrecked and the two are brought together again on "Trumpet Island" where the husband is later killed by robbers.

Promise Them a First Rate Production and a Good Airplane Thrill

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This should be a good box office attraction on account of its variety of appeal if for nothing else. Tom Terriss has given the story an adequate and colorful production for you to talk about and the airplane thrill toward the close will certainly get them. This has been remarkably well done. Also the jazz party in which the hero endulges when he suddenly comes in for some money, is presented in a truly "high life" manner. This bit will always appeal to certain in any audience.

Give the director prominence and tell them "Trumpet Island" is another of his special productions for Vitagraph. Also mention some of his previous successes such as "The Third Degree," "The Vengeance of Durand," etc. The cast is a good one and you can use the names of Margaret De La Motte who, if she isn't well known, will make many friends for her work here, and Wallace MacDonald.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 6,253 feet

As far as production is concerned J. Parker Read's latest picture, "The Leopard Woman," starring Louise Glaum, offers a novel spectacle with a splendid Egyptian atmosphere with plenty of natives, caravans or safari, lavish settings, etc. The story, however, underlying all this splendor is not just as clear as it might be for the spectator's comfort.

The star is introduced as a mysterious woman in a way that promises to divulge the reason of her mystery, but at the end the reason for her apparent "duty" to kill the man she loves is somewhat vague.

The various sets depicting small settlements near Cairo show care as to detail and generally speaking these lavish sets and spectacle air get "The Leopard Woman" over well enough in spite of the story's shortcomings. The star displays some strangely beautiful gowns and does well in the title role, although she isn't called upon for as much acting as in former productions. House Peters and a score of blacks form the rest of the company.

John Culbertson, in the service of the British Government, is on his way to the savage kingdom of M'tela. Also journeying in that direction on the same mission and bound by oath to prevent Culbertson from securing control of the kingdom, is Madame, secret agent of a rival government. Madame and her safari overtake the British man's party on the desert and she is forced to accept his aid when her men become exhausted.

Though bound to kill Culbertson, "The Leopard Woman," as she is called, finds herself in love with him and instead of carrying out her oath, delays his progress by feigning illness. He makes love to her, but then scorns her and later that night Madame's man is ordered to kill Culbertson, but the attempt is not successful and in the morning Madame is glad that it wasn't, for she really loves him.

Culbertson's progress is further delayed when he is blinded by the sun. Madame is forced to decide between duty and love because the man is at her mercy. She chooses the latter and the Britisher reaches M'tela before the troops of the rival government, has his sight restored and confesses his love for "The Leopard Woman."

Not as Big as "Sex" But Has Been Given Good Production

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The lavish effects and general spectacular atmosphere of this will undoubtedly prove it a moneymaker. Also the name of the producer and mention of his former successful productions are good exploitation angles. The title is one that has box-office value and should be played up considerably and affords opportunity for fine exploitation stunts if you go in for this sort of thing.

The star's name will also draw, so altogether you have enough to attract the crowds to your house.

And even if the story isn't as good as they may expect or as strong as the star has had in some previous instances, the production accorded it by the producer together with some very pretty effects and a pleasing desert atmosphere will probably send them away fairly well satisfied. You could use the line: "She was forced to choose between love and duty. Which did 'The Leopard Woman' do? See Louise Glaum in her latest J. Parker Read production."

"The Poor Simp" registers as the best comedy that Owen Moore has appeared in under Selznick production. The star apparently has cast off the lethargy that seemed to grip him in his last two or three pictures and blossoms forth here as a capable comedian in every sense, sometimes registering surprisingly good comedy.

Perhaps Moore's awakening was due the well treated farce plot of "The Poor Simp." Its course has has been travelled many a time and introduces the hero who, believing his sweetheart has thrown him over, is ready and willing to accept death as the way out. A doctor friend realizes that to relieve him of his melancholy, he must be made to believe that there are people desirous of killing him. He engages a number of rough characters to play the game and they start their threats just as the hero learns that the girl loves him after all.

This old plot has been treated in exceptionally good style both in the writing and direction. The star is the center of innumerable sequences of high comedy value and besides injects various pieces of business, perhaps of his own concoction, that enrich the worth of the situations to a great degree.

Some of the funniest action takes place between the hero and his man servant, a real colored man, played by Douglas S. Carter, when the young man has just learned that he is a castoff after all. The fear of the pair at the prospect of meeting death at any turn strikes a very responsive comedy note. Both Moore and Carter surely make the most of their opportunities here.

The star also receives very good support from the others in the cast, including Nell Craig as the girl, Harry Rattenbury and Vera Lewis as her parents, Tom Kennedy of slapstick note as the leader of the toughs, and Herbert Prior and Lassie Young in other prominent roles.

This Ought to Please Exceptionally Well

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

From exhibitor reports it appears that the majority of the Owen Moore features have gone over quite well. On the whole those pictures preceding this in which Moore has appeared have been pretty inferior as regards story and comedy value. So if his other productions have registered well this one ought to be something approaching a knockout.

Its title and its introductory action showing the hero hopelessly in love, so much so that his mental state is becoming dangerous, are calculated to put an audience in a good comedy frame of mind, ready and willing to laugh at what is to follow. And certainly the producers have fostered this mood of the audience throughout, catering to it time and again with really clever comedy. Practically all the possibilities of the story have been realized. There is no expecting a laugh and being disappointed by not getting it. Expectations are always realized—that's one of the picture's fine points.

One of the following lines might be used in advertising the production: "He thought she had thrown him over and so he courted death: Then he discovered that she loved him after all but then too death started to court him." "The story of a man so hopelessly in love that it went to his brain. It will go to your brain too and we guarantee it will prove most amusing."
This famous story has been made into a production of tremendous punch and power. It is, as millions of readers know, a story of a great love that grew out of a woman's hatred.

Louise Glaum follows her huge successes "Sex" and "Love Madness" with one of the great emotional achievements of her career. 2,000 theatres have booked "The Leopard Woman."

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Girl who leads gay Parisian life while temporarily afflicted with aphasia

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,800 feet

For people interested in the subject of aphasia or temporary loss of will power, "Body and Soul" will prove an interesting example of the extent of this malady's possibilities but on the other hand its actual improbabilities as far as the ordinary picture audience is concerned, make the subject not an altogether entertaining one unless they are willing to overlook this phase of the thing and be satisfied from the mere standpoint of pastime.

And even at that, the author doesn't stick to his theory as imparted by titles in the early reels which indicate that the victim must suffer some shock or blow on the head to either cause temporary loss of will power or to restore her to a normal state and in the last instant she is brought back to her own self by a slight shaking and the words "Wake up, Wake up." This is probably due to the fact that the director was making an effort to bring his story to a close without dragging the action but a little of this speed would have been effective in the first reel which is given entirely to introductory titles and a long sequence between the victim and a doctor which establishes nothing definite in the mind of the spectator.

"Body and Soul" contains some good Parisian atmosphere in the sequence where the star lives a gay life in Paris during her loss of memory. The work of the star in this bit is good and Stuart Holmes is seen in the role of a sort of villain although he isn't as wicked as may be expected.

Claire Martin (Alice Lake), an artist and victim of aphasia, suffers a fall when attacked by a street rowdy and upon regaining consciousness she is a different being, longing for the gay life of Paris into which she pitches with feverish excitement except that she knows enough to protect herself against Scott Houghton, an artist for whom she poses and who tries to lure her with pretty clothes and money. But Houghton brands her and then throws her into the street when he believes she has double-crossed him.

Another fall brings the victim back to her right senses and she returns to her studio, where a note from her sweetheart tells her the police have told him she is dead, but that he doesn't believe it and is waiting for her, evidently in America, whither she goes but cannot bring herself to marry him because she cannot remember what happened during her loss of memory. Later she meets Houghton and he promises to tell her about herself but he is killed by his nephew whose money he is swindling. The shock causes the heroine to go "off" again and claim she did the killing but in the end everything turns out all right.

Play Up the Aphasia Idea. This Will Get Them In Out of Curiosity

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Perhaps this will find favor in view of its theme which certainly is out of the ordinary even though there are sufficient implausibilities to be found but based on the idea of this peculiar malady these may be overlooked. Cases of this disease are common occurrences; you can appeal to your crowd from this standpoint—the fact that such things actually happen and you can prove it by securing newspaper clippings from your local paper.

The theme lends itself to excellent exploitation ideas and catchline along the following could be used: "Have you complete control of your mind? Claire Martin though she had but see what happened to her?" Or, "You have heard of the disease called 'Aphasia.' Do you know what it really is? See its effect on the victim whom it owned 'Body and Soul.'"

CHARACTER OF STORY ......... All about a heroine who has an uncontrollable desire for diamonds
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... 4,862 feet

Present day producers seldom come through with a production so utterly mechanical and uninteresting as “Sins of Rosanne.” It resembles nothing so much as a picture that Paramount, or one of the producing units that united to form Paramount, might have turned out five years ago—at the said unit’s worst.

In the first place the story is totally unsympathetic and often exceedingly foolish. Being by Cynthia Stockley, it is naturally laid in South Africa and has much to do with diamonds. Miss Stockley in this story has displayed a far greater knowledge of diamonds than she has of people and good situations.

Rosanne is the heroine. Due to the fact that when she was a baby she was saved from death by a Malay woman who said a lot of hocus pocus over her, she has a mad passion for diamonds. The Malay lady also imbued in her a hate for those who cross her even in little things.

So because of the demented Malay, Rosanne becomes a smuggler of diamonds. She removes them from a mine where her brother-in-law is superintendent, and turns them over to Syke Ravenal, wicked villain. He in turn gives her nicely cut and set stones which she fondles as if they were babies. This fondling by the way, grows ridiculous.

Every time Rosanne wants to be nice to her fiancé, Dennis, the Malay woman, says some more hocus pocus and Rosanne gets the thought waves and goes out for more diamonds. When the Malay woman finally passes out Rosanne becomes normal and accepts Dennis, which is just about the only satisfying twist in the picture.

Tom Forman’s direction of this has many faults in it. It is as mechanical and obvious as the story and the players often seem to suffer from a lack of knowledge as to what to do with themselves. There is nothing smooth about the picture.

Ethel Clayton had a hopeless task in the role of Rosanne. She is very emotional but all her emotions register as false, because they are caused by just diamonds and more diamonds. Jack Holt hasn’t much to do as Dennis. Others are Fontaine La Rue, Mabel Van Buren, Fred Malatesta, Grace Morse, Clarence Geldart, Dorothy Messenger, James Smith and Guy Oliver.

Very Difficult to Determine Where This Will Fit
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It is hard to determine just where “Sins of Rosanne” fits. A careful process of elimination really leads to the conclusion that it doesn’t fit any where. All the hokum in it fails to register with any sort of illusion. This sort of stuff stands a chance of getting over if it is handled well but it certainly isn’t here.

Perhaps the title will attract but it certainly will disappoint those seeking something sensational. Rosanne’s sins are more ridiculous than serious.

If you’ve got this coming the best thing to do is to slip it in quietly and say little about it. The star and her leading man will serve as sufficient attractions and perhaps the name of the author. However, the admirers of Miss Clayton are due for a severe jolt when they see this.

Character of Story... Elemental tale of love and vengeance

Length of Production... About 5,000 feet

E. Lloyd Sheldon has contrived a very simple yet forceful story for “The Challenge of the Law.” It is a strictly elemental tale of love and vengeance but it is so constructed as to result in a strong sustaining interest while the acting and in general the director’s handling of the material have aided the author in creating a work of sure strength and high dramatic power.

William Russell appears as a member of the old Northwest Mounted Police and true to type, he must “get his man.” This man is the father of the girl he loves and of course love goes down in the face of duty when it comes to the test. Madeline, the girl, lets her love run into hate when she learns of Bruce’s resolve to keep his oath, and so she journeys with her father and his two disreputable companions across the border, down through the states and on to the Arizona desert in an attempt to escape the unusually long arm of the Northwest Mounted.

Bruce pursues them across the desert and finally overtakes Madeline who has fallen back of the others with intent to turn him off the track. But he handcuffs her to him and presses on. In the meantime one ruffian, dying, reveals the other’s perfidy to Madeline’s father. There is a gun fight on the desert and the father is triumphant. Alone he plods on.

Bruce finally gives up the search, but not until he has fallen nearly dead on the hot sands. Then it is that Madeline’s hate runs the opposite direction again and her heart goes out to him. They return to Canada where all is peace again.

William Russell gives a very fine performance as Bruce. Helen Ferguson as Madeline acquires herself of an unusually good piece of acting. She plays her part with such a vivid touch that she seems eloquent at times and, running a wide range of expression, performs with rare skill in all scenes. Arthur Morrison, James Farley, Fred Malatesta, Robert Klein and D. I. Mitsoras complete the cast.

A Real “Audience” Picture

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Those who revel in the western pictures and their companion pieces of elemental plot and action such as the tale of the Northwest Mounted Police, will certainly delight in “The Challenge of the Law,” for with but few minor faults, it is one of the best pictures of this kind.

You can advertise it as the best production William Russell has had recently with a clear conscience and you can go further and say that it is the best elemental melodrama of its type recently released. Superlatives are good and proper the comparatively few times they are warranted, so don’t hesitate to use them in the present case.

Use catch lines and advertising readers that paint the highlights of the plot in bold, elemental strokes. This is the sort of stuff that attracts just as it is this sort of story that entertains so well on the screen.

Use Helen Ferguson’s name as well as the star’s. She has had prominent roles of late and her performance here certainly deserves to be featured.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Male vamp who has more women and telephone calls than he can handle

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 5,000 feet

There isn't even the elaborate social functions of some previous Cody productions to compensate for the weak material contained in "Occasionally Yours." In fact it is hardly a story at all, merely an opportunity for the star to meander about from place to place wreaking the lives of his foolish admirers without effort.

The star is never required to do any acting—or, at least he doesn't—not even when his current victim is dying and he asks her to become his wife when she is well again just because he knows it will make her happy. "Occasionally Yours" never gets beyond being just a succession of scenes that contain no sustaining interest, command little or no attention and there are long lapses when the star plays checkers in the chairs in his studio. This certainly makes the production tiresome to say the least.

Lew Cody is seen as an artist although he doesn't seem to work at it. Betty Blythe as Mrs. Winston pursues the poor male vamp throughout the entire five reels and finally exits untriumphant after all her manoeuvring. Cody spends the week end with John Woodward at his country estate, Millstream. Mrs. Winston, also a friend of Woodward's, goes to Millstream mainly to be near her lover. But the lover becomes friendly with Woodward's daughter and when she is injured he learns of her delirium that she loves him, whereupon he later proposes for he thinks she will die anyway, but she doesn't, and when Mrs. Winston hears of this she marries Woodward.

Later, however, the daughter learns that her lover is not in love with her and the engagement is broken, and Cody leaves Millstream followed by Mrs. Winston, who informs her new husband that she merely married him to be near her lover. But the masculine vamp will have none of her and with the aid of his pet dog he selects his next victim.

The star’s reputation as a “lady killer” will get a certain crowd in when you announce his name, but outside of that there’s nothing to bank on in “Occasionally Yours.” Very little story, no action, no sustained interest and a cast that seems to realize the futility of even trying to act in a picture of such limited opportunities, make the latest Lew Cody production far from being attractive.

Make as little fuss about it as possible if you show it and secure a good accompanying program to make up for the feature’s shortcoming. You might mention Miss Blythe’s name if that means anything to your crowd. She does try hard in this, but is greatly handicapped. Stills showing the artist at work with his models will attract some if you think you need something to get them in.

CHARACTER OF STORY .......... Romance of surgeon and society girl after latter's selfishness has caused a break

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,000 feet

The most noticeable thing about this picture is a lack—a lack of story. Because of this the director's purposes are almost completely defeated and the work of Conway Tearle, the star, and Zena Keefe, his leading lady, suffers considerably.

Because of this lack there are long sequences showing the two principals moving about in pretty scenery and there are not a few scenes showing them standing still and registering just one emotion—disagreement. A picture must have variety of action, pretty scenery doesn't suffice for dramatic or narrative interest. It seems rather obvious to point out such fundamentals of a picture but it is so just these fundamental things that "Marooned Hearts" misses fire.

Tearle appears as Dr. Paul Carrington, a rising surgeon, attached to a hospital. While week ending with his fiancée, Marion, an urgent message comes from the hospital. Marian prevents it reaching him as she wants him by her side. Later Paul, acquainted with Marian's selfish trick, is a failure in his field because of his refusal to explain his absence.

Paul breaks with Marian and leaves for a tropical island to work on some gland theories. He is reported dead and one of Marian's suitors offers to take her south on his yacht to verify this. The yacht catches fire and Marian is bundled off into a motor boat by a vicious sailor. She escapes from him and is washed up on the island where Paul is marooned. He refuses to treat her as a friend and so the old conflict goes on until at last the sailor appears and forces Paul to fight for Marian. After that he suddenly discovers that he loves her.

The action amounts to little after all. The lovers' squabble comes and goes and it is never made plain that Paul and Marion will attempt in the future to meet each other half way.

The star is capable of much better parts than Paul. He has little to register except one train of emotion and this soon becomes tiresome. Of Miss Keefe the same may be said.

The production includes a wealth of semi-tropical scenery that is pleasing to the eye. The direction can not well be determined inasmuch as so much scenery has been substituted for action. There is one bad subtitle reading: "I took his dog and now I'm getting his goat." This comes at a supposedly serious place in the story. Some of the detail is quite poor.

A Big Drawing Card—Can Certainly Be Improved

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Interest centers on this picture due to the fact that Conway Tearle appears in it as a star. Of all leading men on the screen he certainly was the most deserving a stellar birth in point of popularity. His many appearances opposite the greatest of feminine stars earned him a big following particularly with the feminine fans. Certainly they will be quite eager to see "Marooned Hearts" when it is announced that he has the stellar role. In fact at the box office the picture ought to hit a very high mark.

In its present state the picture's content is not deserving its box office power. Big improvements could be made by careful editing and a few new subtitles. Such suggestions, however, have been made before subsequent to a picture's release and nothing has happened. Certainly the producers ought to revise this. When it is possible to improve upon a picture that has the unusual drawing power of this it is suicide not to.

"The Wonder Horse-Man of War"—C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.

Due to his impressive record on the turf, thousands who usually pay little or no attention to horse races have become interested in the doing of Man of War, the swift thoroughbred, owned by S. D. Riddle and trained by Louis Feustel. C. B. C. has a single reeler, which Federation Film Ex. will distribute, showing the equine and as well, August Belmont, Johnnie and Feustel. All of the incidents linked with "The Sport of Kings" are shown, including limbering up, a trial trot, breaking from the barrier, running down the stretch and finishing. The titles, many of them illustrated, are interesting and the entire offering finely filmed and generally up to the desired standard. Beyond doubt, you can help draw patronage with the offering, for it is neither a horse racing production, but a picture that will interest and attract many who are not devotees of the turf. Man of War is a national figure and the subject of widespread interest. This should meet approval for it is "good to look at" and shows the remarkable quadruped.

"There Is No Santa Claus"—Chester—Educational

The life of monks of a Hospice in the mountains of Switzerland, their feats on ski and several shots showing the famed St. Bernard dogs comprise this one reeler which is acceptable. Some of the titles are quite interesting and the entire affair pleasing. The type of film is sufficiently widespread as the title is irrelevant and far fetched. This gets by as a travel reel, but is not really a scene. Taken as a whole, it is just a fair offering but in no way really unusual.

"Crowning King Blizzard"—Chester—Educational

Territory about Quebec is the scene of another Chester single reeler, titled by William Henry Wright. The material which makes it up consists almost entirely of the manner in which some youngsters and grownups handle implements for amusement when snow is on the ground. Of course, the spectacle of people on skis, snow-shoes and sleds, is not out of the ordinary, but the tiling somewhat after the style of Katherine Hildler and general spirit of the piece is contagious and the result, a desirable effect. As a whole, this is up to the Chester average and a worth while addition to most programs.

"The Silver Harvest"—Educational

Educational is to be congratulated upon this single reeler, for it is one of the best industrial films seen in a long, long while. Rarely do productions of this character combine entertainment value with their instructive qualities, but the present offering has been titled in splendid fashion and has been handled in such a manner that it should secure much booking. Fault may be found with its continuity, for towards the finish, they skip from one process in the handling of the sardines with which this deals, to another and then returns to the former after approaching the finish. Generally, however, the handling of the sardines and preparations are interesting. The scene of it being somewhere in France or Portugal, one may expect some touches that a small fishing village in such a country can only furnish. And these are included.

"With the Sultan of Perak"—Burton Holmes—Famous

Perak, a Mohammedan land in the Orient furnished the material for a Burton Holmes travel reel which ranks with his best. Throughout, the general effect—the photography, settings and composition, to say nothing of the timing—is cause the material to register in good style. Towards the finish, there are several shots of the mosques, the architecture of which is of the variety that is certain to hold the eye. Generally, a worth while production of its type—one that can hold its own before almost any audience.

"Chumming with Chipmunks"—Educational

This one reel subject photographed by Irene and William L. Finley of the National Association of Audubon Societies for protection of wild birds and animals is an intimate glimpse of Mr. Chomppk and his little friends in the Oregon forest of considerable interest especially to animal lovers inasmuch as it shows how the acquaintance of this little animal is made, how he is coaxed with nuts and finally becomes very friendly. A good bit of short material if you need something of its kind for your program.

"May Days"—Prizma

A pretty little romance told in colored pictures is this "May Days." Released by Prizma. Besides containing some very good color work and showing some pretty bits of scenery, this release contains a short love story that is pretty told and given a touch of love's young dream by having two children imitate the love-making of their elders. The photography is good and the color work effective.

"Edgar's Sunday Courtship"—Goldwyn

This latest Booth Tarkington comedy produced by Goldwyn and featuring Johnny Jones is a splendid juvenile subject. Johnny Jones is a pleasing youngster and his "leading lady" an attractive little miss. The action takes place in Sunday School where Johnny has his own idea of the lesson "Goliath and the Gomorra" is dismissed from the class, where he is called upon to answer some questions and he is unable to answer. The dream sequence is good and the entire offering will have a strong appeal for the children of your audience. This should prove a splendid matinee attraction.

"A Pair of Twins"—Universal

Hoot Gibson plays a dual role in this two reel western, from the pen of Ford Beebe. The tale is somewhat different from the usual western and possesses some interesting complications, but the double exposures at the finish, incidentally the only ones in the picture, are not as effective as they might be, one of the evident faults being that Gibson is further away from the camera in one part than he is in the other exposure. Jim Corey is the villain again and Dorothy Wood the heroine. Corey, the owner of a note from the leading woman's father, played by Charles Newton, demands the girl in view of the fact that there is no money in Newton's possession. Gibson starts out to secure the lute, when a twin brother of his appears upon the scene. A grand mix-up is caused, everything turning out in satisfactory fashion. There are several thrills and enough gun play to satisfy the western fans.

"Monkey Business"—Universal

Most of the knockabout business comprising this single reel does not derive sufficiently from the ordinary to make this "Leading Reel" one of the productions. The latter receives a sound thrashing for some of his activities as the referee of a fictitious scrap. Both contestants are fearful of defeat and Franey is bribed by the manager of each, a promise to count the other battler out being secured by both of them. Naturally, it all leads up to the big battle, which turns out to be a slug- ging match in which the two administrate to each other the finishing wallop. Franey starts counting them both out and the two managers get at him. During all of this, there are some humorous flashes of different members of the audience, the entire affair having been staged and directed in good style. Thomas La Rose wangled the megaphone and George Richter photographed it. Grover Jones edited and titled the picture which should receive much printing.

"The Referee"—Reelcraft

In this single reel Billy Franey production, Reelcraft has an offering that is brimful of good fast action, has a satisfactory theme and several incidents of interest. Of especial merit, is the suspense aroused throughout by a tall performer whose identity is kept shrouded in mystery until the very end. It is explained that he is the author of the story and he congratulates Franey for his performance. The latter receives some shots reflecting some of his activities as the referee of a fictitious scrap. Both contestants are fearful of defeat and Franey is bribed by the manager of each, a promise to count the other battler out being secured by both of them. Short Reels

Pathe Review, No. 74

For the first time in quite a while, the Pathe Review does not include a slow motion study. There is instead, a second colored portion, which while beautiful, does not differ sufficiently in character from the opening colored scenic to make it stand out. As for "A La Carte at the Zoo," the part dealing with animals, that is entertaining as always and one of the most valuable features of this. Concerning the opening colored scenic bit, that is of average quality. "More Bread, Please" depicts the manner in which some Mongolians prepare flour, after which come some exquisite many-tinted shots of flowers. Joseph Hazel, the only "Zululand Zowie" dancer in America according to one of the titles, executes that dance at the close.

"Alias Alladin"—Rolin—Pathe

For lavish staging, few one reeers that compare with this one have been seen. "Alias Alladin" is the second of the Vanity Fair Maids series and throughout, elaborate settings and costumes, or lack of costumes, stare the spectator in the eye. And there is much in it that will hit him in the optic. When Eddie Boland, principal comedian finds himself on an Oriental throne, with a light and exposed-limbed bared of attractive maids, all males seated in your house will probably be thrilled. Fred Newmeyer who directed the piece, has arranged a cross between a modiste's display and naughty production, which is not objectionable. It all concern's Boland's entry into a cario shop with his strong-minded spouse. Boland dreams that he is presented with a lamp like the one Alladin used. And then the fun starts. Boland finds the fair damsels soothing, and as everyone expects, wakes up to find it all a vision. His order to his wife that she "Salaam" him is complied with, the latter taking it for granted that he means it in the English sense. And Boland is "Slammed." All in all, a carking offering of its length.

"Thirteen"—Reelcraft

Number 13 may be unlucky, but there is no reason why this single reeler which bears that title should be unlucky for Reelcraft. It is not a hiliarious offering, but has a good laugh at the finish and leads up to the conclusion at a fair pace. Billy Franey is starred in the piece which introduces him as the very necessary 14th guest at a dinner. A vicious looking fellow who sits opposite Franey turns out to be a police official at the close and Franey a thief who is escorted out by a due of blue-coats after it is discovered that he had loaded his attire with silverware. The manner in which he hails the patrol wagon, as though it were a taxi is good for a laugh, most of the fun coming at the finish.

"The Live Wire"—Reelcraft

Billy Franey is an electrician's assistant in this single reeler which has one good laugh, and averages just fair throughout the rest of it. The portion which gets the laugh, is the one in the butcher's establishment, where Franey unintentionally attaches some wires carrying current to the head of a hog, with the result that that portion of its anatomy begins to move its jaws, a grimming expression appearing upon its countenance. A negro who has been casting eager eyes upon it is naturally horrified at the proceedings and more so when he sees some sausages dancing about, also inspired by the electric current. In the dentist shop part, there is some fairly humorous stuff but the conclusion, while novel, leaves something unexplained. Nevertheless, it is acceptable entertainment and should receive a satisfactory reception where the other Franey offerings have gone well.

"The High Cost of Living"—Fox

This is one of the simplest Mutt and Jeff numbers and one of the funniest as well. Mutt consumes an extravagant meal but refuses to let Jeff have any of it. He mistreats the little fellow cruelly, holding him off and torturing him with the sight of mountains of food. Jeff's expressions of anger and deep humiliation are uproariously funny. He gets his revenge ultimately by managing to paint Mutt's clothes with stripes and passing him off as a convict for whose arrest a large reward is offered. With a portion of the reward Jeff purchases an elaborate meal, trundles it beneath Mutt's cell window in a wheelbarrow and there consumes it while the tall fellow looks on in anguish. This is by all odds the funniest of these comedies recently released and that's saying a whole lot.

"The League of Nations"—Fox

Mutt and Jeff are as funny as they have been in the best of the preceding issues of this series in "The League of Nations." Throughout the reel, the antics of the contrasting duo keep the spectator smiling, the theme of the piece being on a par with the comedy business it includes. At the start, Mutt in a bad temper blames the smaller of the two for mislaying his comb and collar button, and then continues to persecute him. Jeff, acting upon the advice of a policeman, organizes his own league of nations, made up of a conglomerate of people from all nations, explains his troubles and is told that Mutt may not hit him until he consults that august body. But Mutt ignores the message, whereasupon Jeff raises in his majestic wrath, administers a beating to the league as a whole and finally to his lean partner. Generally up to the desired standard.

When all the world cries "Guilty," why is it that an innocent child can feel the truth of a man's honesty?

When a man is wronged and embittered and vows hatred to the world why does the sympathy of a child make him a warrior of righteousness?

And when a woman feels the decency of the man she loves why does she alone believe in him when every circumstance points against him?

Perhaps because they are women and children. Perhaps because there is something divine about them. This remarkable motion picture is a tender and deep revelation of the great fight of a man's man loved by a woman.

St. Paul, Minn.—Harry Lux, manager of the De Luxe theater, scored a district triumph in exploitation when he opened his theater for the 1920-21 season a few days ago. Nearly three weeks before the opening date Uticans were advised that the newspapers and trolley advertising to never marry out. "Don't Ever Marry" screamed forth in large red letters on signs on the street of every street car operated in city. There was no indication as to whether the warning was related to. Just six days before the opening date Lux let the Utica publishers see the secret, announcing in 18 that the De Luxe would open following Sunday with Marshall Land's production. The day before the opening, boys in red in telegraph uniforms were stationed on the busiest street corners handed "telegrams" to every person. These were to Mrs. Mrs. General Public, wherever Get Married and You Die. So after you are married what is there left for your woman? During the week of the picture, Manager Lux did not let down on his advertising. He told the people of Utica that everybody was rushing over "Don't Ever Marry" with 14-inch and 8-inch ads. As a result the film played to very large audiences at each performance and the De Luxe turned from its policy of holding but two matinees a week to one of an afternoon performance daily.

The Jack-Knife Man
Called Most Pleasing and Heart-Gripping Tale

Critics Say “Harriet and the Piper” Contains Everything That Makes a Picture Attractive—Praise for Constance Talmadge in “Good References”

THE JACK-KNIFE MAN
“Delightfully refreshing in the newness of its theme and locale of rural simplicity, ‘The Jack-Knife Man,’ with its quaint characters drawn from real life, is full of genuine humor and pathos. It is one of the most pleasing and heart-gripping tales the screen has produced in a long time. It is a homely little tale of the affairs of plain people with its central character a lovable old chap filled with the love of fellow-man. King Vidor has chosen an excellent cast to interpret the difficult roles.”—Portland (Ore.) Oregonian.

GOOD REFERENCES
“Constance Talmadge, clever in the role of a young business woman which she has assumed with success in several of the latest of her productions. She hits the popular chord in ‘Good References,’ a bright, swift-moving story excitingly pictured. A sure hit of the laughter target.”—Exhibitors Herald.

HARRIET AND THE PIPER
“Almost everything that makes a picture attractive has been injected into ‘Harriet and the Piper.’ Popular story, logical plot development, highly dramatic moments, touches of the spectacular and a fine sprinkling of humor give the picture the effect of being well rounded out. It is a tribute to good direction from start to finish. Anita Stewart gives a performance that for real sympathy and vividness has been seldom, if ever, equaled in her career. The sets are elaborate, the costumes rich, and the beauty of the whole has been enhanced by fine photography.”—Moving Picture World.

Passes When Alfred S. Black and Willard Patterson Meet in the Astor

A little while ago there was a flurry in the exhibitor organization field when Alfred S. Black pointedly asked why no one had inquired whether or not First National had featured the activities of Willard C. Patterson in organizing the Chicago convention.

At that time Patterson, being a Southerner, answered it with typical Southern language. He said that if Black said that First National had featured his meeting in Chicago that Black lied.

That was all there was to it until Monday night when Black and Patterson happened to be in the lobby of the Hotel Astor. Patterson saw Black first and eyed him coldly evidently awaiting developments. Black, according to those who were there, saw Patterson as well, but turned on his heel and walked in the opposite direction, not even speaking to him.

The opening number is the overture "Capecotto Italiano" followed by the Strand Topical Review, Catherine Lampe, vaudeville, who renders "Gypsy Dance" and "Nanouk." It is an Artcolor production. The prologue to the feature, "Harriet and the Pipers," a first national attraction starring Anita Stewart, consists of a pretty setting with Sylvia Elia singing "Obtaining." Other numbers are a Mr. Nielson Educational comedy, "The June Bird," and Reddiffe Hollinshead's selection, "In the Wee Little Home I Love" and "All For You."

Capitol

The Capitol orchestra renders the overture "Poet and Peasant," followed by a scenic "Alaskan Wonders" showing the natural marvels of the glacier of the north. Milo Garmarelli and assistants present "Skaters' Waltz," a pretty dance with a winter setting appropriate to the atmosphere of the feature which is a Rex Beach production, "The North Wind's Flabber." The Capitol News; solo by Bertram Peacock, "Inviocita;" a Capitol Hy Mayer Traveler, "Swat Is Life In and On the Water," and the organ solo complete the bill.

Criterions

Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Something to Think About," with Elbert Healy, Gloria Swanson, Theodore Roberts and Monte Blue in the cast opened at the Criterion this week for an indefinite run. The picture is being well received. The opening number is a silhouetted musical novelty. The musicians are seen only in shadow and render "Le Coriolan de Claude." The scenic is a beautifully colored subject showing Versailles, its architecture, parks and fountains. A colonial musical and dance number precedes the feature, a juvenile Runnals cartoon comedy and the organ solo, "March Pitrannicque" conclude.

Plans Filed With Building Dept. by Famous Players Subsidiary—Criterion Unchanged

As indicated in WID'S DAILY recently, extensive alterations will be made in the New York and New York roof, owned by the Seneca H. Corp., a Famous Players' subsidiary.

Plans have been filed with Building Dept. The cost of the contemplated changes will be $500,000. The Criterion will not be changed.

For the main part of the building used as the New York the alterations include the lowering of the auditorium to the grade level and removing the present two balconies, substituting one large balcony. The change in the auditorium will enlarge the seating capacity on the ground floor, adding six or eight rows of seats, bringing the total to 31 rows. The roof theater will also be extensively altered, practically making a new theater on the top of the building and enlarging the roof capacity to 1,400 seats. There will also be a new lobby at the entrance of the main theater and the 45th St. frontage will be remodeled.

A special meeting of the creditors to act upon the petition will be held at the office of Townsend, 299 Broadway, on Oct. 29.

The jury in the Supreme Court has returned a verdict for $51,018 in a suit of the United Lettergraph Co., against Patrick A. Powers, and C. A. and H. M. Warner as stockholders in the Warner Feature Film Co., on their guarantee of the account of the film company for lettergraphs furnished. A previous verdict against the defendants was set aside and Mr. McClure reserved decision on an application to set this one aside. The corporation is insolvent.

Samuel Eiebowitz has sued the American Cinema Corp., Burrell Ruskey, Harry Glaser and Walter F. Viehbu for $25,000 alleged to be due on a note made by the corporation to Nathan L. Amster endorsed by the defendants and transferred to the plaintiff.

On an assigned claim of Ernest E. Gagnon, doing business as the California Moving Picture Enterprises, and owner of the film, "Temptation, the Eternal Combat," Jacob H. Hoffman has sued Charles Mintz, the Remarque Film Co., Inc., and Charles Jawitz for an injunction restraining them from disposing of the film, for an accounting of all sums received, and to compel the defendants to give up the films to the plaintiff. The complaint alleges that Emann has an office at 15 W. 25th St., and that Mintz is one of the managers. Jawitz is in business as the Popular Film Co., and it is alleged that Gagnon leased the rights to the film to Emann for New York State on a 50-50 basis and also disposed of the New Jersey rights to Mintz, that Emann failed to account for them but put bookings in the hands of Mintz who gave them to Jawitz and he made bookings without the plaintiff's knowledge.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor puts his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Pana, Ind.—The Eagle Theater booked "The Miracle Man" for a week's run. Harry Tanner, manager, arranged a unique exploitation stunt in conjunction with the St. Louis Paramount headquarters.

"DearIE:—I am in St. Louis visiting friends. I saw a rattling good show last night. "The Miracle Man." It's great. Don't fail to see it. Lovingly yours, Helen."

Thousands of these post cards bearing various females' names were mailed to the men of Pana and vicinity. One signed "Clara" landed at the home of a certain business man whose wife is rather jealous. She met him with a rolling pin that night and he fled to the garage. She didn't give him a chance to explain if he could.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Prizes worth $175 were presented to the winners of a ghost story contest held in conjunction with the showing of "Earthbound" at Miller's. The Record cooperated in the exploitation, printing all of the stories and laying the use of its columns to announce it. Charles R. Baker was responsible for the stunt which can easily be staged elsewhere in conjunction with the same production. There is much of the supernatural about "Earthbound" and a ghost story contest suggests itself as the natural thing to be arranged to boost it.

The Woman Untamed

No. 12—

Boston Traveler (in its review of "The Miracle Man")—
"We cannot be too grateful to George Loane Tucker, who discovered Betty Compson's ability, for placing her in a role that called for a varied and difficult display of them"
Are You Watching Signals?

The red lights of the block system perhaps are not used to anything like the extent of the green ones. But when they are up they mean something. They spell danger. And there isn’t an engineer who dares disregard them without risking disaster.

There are a lot of red signal lights being set all along the business world today. Some of them are noticable in this industry. Production is being slowed down, there is slackness in the booking world and from several sections come reports that admissions have been cut because of the slowing down of business.

The question is whether or not you are watching signals. If so all fine and dandy. If not—well, you had better rub your glasses or dig the sand out of the corners of your eyes. It’s time to set up and take notice.

From bankers down there is a strong belief that the entire country is in for a change, and a mighty important one, during the next six months, or possibly longer. Commodities are coming down, there is greater ease in the labor market, unemployment is greater and there is a big howl all along the line relative to the way prices are coming down. Some of the real thinkers in this business insist that this wave must hit the picture business—if it hasn’t already.

Why It Hurt

Several of the efficiency experts of the Dupont interests have just returned from the Goldwyn studios in Los Angeles. They have filed their reports with the big financial powers and it is said that as a result there is some gloom—in fact, considerable gloom.

Cecil B. DeMille has completed "Forbidden Fruit.

William DeMille has begun work on "What Every Woman Knows.

Gloria Swanson will probably begin work about the middle of December at the Lasky studio on her first Paramount picture.

The Assistant Directors’ Association will hold its second annual banquet on Nov. 5.

Earle Williams’ cast has been completed and production begun by Chester Bennett on "Diamonds Adrift."

Stuart Paton is on location at Laguna Beach, filming the opening scenes of "Out of the Sunset." Eva Novak is starring.

Bebe Daniels is in the second week of "In the Bashops’ Carriage" under the direction of Maurice Campbell.

Director Sam Wood has started the fifth Wanda Hawley vehicle.

Helen Lynch has signed with Carter de Haven to play a part in The Girl in the Taxi.

Johnie Waters will assist Irvin Willat in the direction of "Partners of the Tide."

Work has been started on "White Youth," under the direction of Norman Dwan.

"The Flip Flapper" has been commenced with Gladys Walton in the title role.

Wallace Reid has commenced work on Frank H. Spearman’s story, "The Daughter of a Magnate." Frank Urson is making his debut as a full-fledged director with this production.

Owing to the great increase in production work and the crowded condition of the laboratory at the Lasky Studio, a new cutting room is being built at the corner of Selma Ave. and Argyle St. The new cutting room will afford facilities for cutting eight pictures at the same time.

Mason N. Liston, Goldwyn director, will start next week on the fifth episode of the Booth Tarkington "Edgar" series in which Johnny Jones is featured.

"We Are Stung"
Says Montana Showman in Speaking of Independent Exhibitors Circuit

A Montana exhibitor who operates in one of the smaller towns writes William Smith inquiring the methods of the Independent Exhibitors Circuit in the Northwest. This exhibitor who, for obvious reasons does not wish his name to be used says:

"I have noted on several occasions reference to the Independent Exhibitors Circuit of the Northwest and noted also that a great deal, in fact nearly every item has had reference to the exchange or producer or distributor agency side of the matter. While I am one of those who were duped into the belief that the arrangement was to the good, I am finding out to my entire satisfaction that the thing is not working to any advantage at all.

"In my case as in a great number of those from Montana who signed up and put up money to guarantee faithful fulfillment of the agreement, we are haggled for a period of one year. We are forced to live up to the terms or lose our deposit and on the other side, appears to be belief as they neither live up to the agreements made at signing nor are they doing anything for us, save causing us to spend money for advertising and other expenses. It has caused some of us to lose our worked-up patronage to competitors account of not being able to do business in a hurry, which at times is necessary.

"I have had communication from other exhibitors of Montana and think we are all practically of the same opinion as to the way the deal, especially to us. I was not in on the former Ciemmer deal but got stung on this and believe me, I think that this last one on the wholesale booking deals for this territory and the only method in the future will be a local co-operative ownership with a community buying head, will be the only solution of cut-throat tactics, so often used by unscrupulous salesmen.

"I think there is little or no trouble with the better companies, but the ones that put hell into the business are those firm pirate companies who have but a few pictures which they sell as special and are the 'bunk' in a great many cases. If the exhibitors would band together to put those fellows out of the game, we would see the betterment of conditions in the exhibition end of the business.

I am writing this simply to give you some idea of what the idea of the smaller town exhibitor with regard to the booking circuit, especially the work out end of the matter. To put it in other words, we are haggled for a period of one year and told that they are doing nicely (with our money), and things look brighter (for them). We are holding the sack.

cannot see in a picture were pointed out to him by trade paper editors who have their fingers on the pulse of the public. Financial losses would be avoided and productions that later come into trouble with the censors would never have been made; all because some little thing, so obvious to some and yet passed over, by the director was not caught and weeded out of the story. Directors try to make what they think the public wants but they don't know and it is within the power of the trade press to acquaint them with what sort of picture the public wants.

Mr. Dwan's remarks elicited responses from various of the trade press editors and from J. D. Williams of First National who pointed out that what Dwan said was of vital importance to the industry. The problem, Williams said, was in convincing certain directors that criticism was meant to be constructive whereas, directors would be apt to consider suggestions in the wrong light.

Among those present were Arthur Butler Graham who introduced Dwan, Oscar A. Price, J. D. Williams, Dwight S. Perrin and trade paper editors. Dwan will remain here for possibly two weeks and then return to the coast.

"HALF A CHANCE"
Jesse D. Hampton—Pathe

DIRECTOR ....................... Robert Thornby
AUTHOR .......................... Frederic S. Isham

CAMERAMAN ... Lucien Andriot and Victor Milner
AS A WHOLE ...... Starts off with a punch and ends with a wallop; gripping and has action galore

STORY ...... Contains a good many complications but they never become involved DIRECTION ...... Splendid; has secured enough thrills for a serial
PHOTOGRAPHY ...................... Excellent
LIGHTINGS .......................... Good
CAMERA WORK ...................... Very fine PLAYERS ...... Mahlon Hamilton gives might fine performance in really stellar role; others all do well

EXTERIORS ...................... All very good
INTERIORS ........................ Correct
DETAIL ............................ Fine in smallest bits
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... One of the world's outcasts comes back as great criminal lawyer who proves his own innocence

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ... About 6,800 feet

One of the biggest features of "Half a Chance," Jesse D. Hampton's latest production, is the performance given by Mahlon Hamilton. The part calls for about everything in the way of acting and display of emotion that there is and indeed Hamilton puts forth his best in both endeavors, first as an ex-prize fighter and derelict who is falsely accused of murder but escapes and later as a gentleman following his regeneration.

Director Thornby has provided all the thrills and punch that could possibly be crammed into a little less than seven reels and in fact he has nearly the makings of a serial in his wealth of action and well maintained interest which never slackens during the run of the picture. The very opening pitches right into action with the derelict found guilty and sentenced to San Quentin prison. His escape followed by his recognition after being picked up by an Australian bound ship on which he works as a coal heaver and the wreck of the ship in which he saves the life of the daughter of the Judge who sentenced him, are only a few of the picture's big moments.

Titles, short and to the point, have their own innuendo and add to the comprehensive unfolding of the plot despite its almost unlimited complications which despite the amount of them, never become so involved as to confuse. The production is a trifle long but it would be hard to cut. Detail throughout is very fine and one instance especially deserving of comment is the stoke-hole of a ship which shows the coal heavers at work. Perhaps the situations which make up "Half a Chance" are not new but it is doubtful if so many have been ever used in one story and at any rate they have never been done any better.

Following the wreck "Sailor Burke" is cast upon an island. Later from the wreckage he secures some books on law which he studies. Years pass and Burke becomes John Steele, expert criminal lawyer who devotes his energies to aiding those falsely accused. Again he meets the daughter of the man who had caused his ruin and they eventually fall in love. Jack Ronsdale, a man with a memory, recognizes in Steele "Sailor Burke" and puts the "we always get our man" detective agency upon his trail.

The detective lands his man in the home of Judge Wray where Steele is visiting the Judge's daughter. Steele escapes and sets out to finish up the task of proving his innocence on the old murder charge. He finds the man who provides the necessary proof which turns the tables on Ronsdale and shows him up as the real murderer. Steele gives Ronsdale a chance to leave town and prepares to go away himself but the girl comes back to demand the return of her heart. Follows the mutual love of the two and curtain.

An Audience Picture That You Can Book Without Hesitation

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

An all around fine audience picture with action galore and thrills aplenty is what you will get in "Half a Chance," added splendid work by a well chosen cast and a great performance by Mahlon Hamilton. You can go almost the limit on promises. Tell them is a virile story of the out-of-doors, of a real man who from an outcast and condemned man becomes an expert criminal lawyer who devotes his life to helping those unefortunates who may be falsely accused like he himself had been.

Play up the shipwrecked scene, the derelict's island of regeneration, his work in the prize ring and promise them a real fight in one of the last scenes. There is an abundant variety of appeal and if it doesn't please "all of the people all of the time, it will certainly please some of the people some of the time.'"

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 7,000 feet

When Irvin V. Willat produced "False Faces" those who studied the production end of the industry realized that he had won his spurs. And when he followed this with several other good productions, including "Behind the Door" and "Below the Surface," it was only a question of time before he would go out on his own. This he has done, and the first of his independent productions, "Down Home," is the result. In a way it is disappointing. Willat has proven his worth in such a strong manner that it seems somewhat lacking in judgment that his first effort should be along the well known lines of rural drama, with the accepted types which make this sort of production possible. It is good enough in its way, not big, not important, but a very worth while production taken as a whole. It will probably not add to his reputation, and yet it has sufficient B. O. appeal that it may easily get by as a good average program release.

In brief the story tells of how Chet Todd (Edward Hearn) finally wins Nance Pelot (Leatrice Joy), the daughter of a drunkard, from Larry Shayne (Frank Braidwood), the son of a roadhouse keeper, who tries to secure the farm left to Nance by her mother because it happens to contain salt beds and is very valuable. There are several excellent sequences, including one where the minister of the little village holds a revival and where the old drunkard is lost in a snowstorm. There is also a gripping fist fight.

Leatrice Joy does some excellent work, and there are a number of good rural characters presented. Willat's work runs faithfully throughout, except for a back drop in the snowstorm scene which was easily discernible as a prop.

Bank Everything on Directors Reputation With Your People

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There isn't much to this except that it bears the name of Irvin V. Willat, who may be remembered by your folks as the director of two very recent successes, "Behind the Door" and "Below the Surface," both of which were heavy and grim, but splendidly done. The story gives Willat hardly sufficient opportunity to show himself at his best, although he has handled the story in a very sincere and worth-while manner. There is a fairly good snowstorm scene which you can talk about and a rattling good fist fight if your people like that sort of stuff. There is a novelty in the church revival, and outside of these points you haven't much to talk about.

Stick to Willat's name and plant all you can on that. If you like catchlines use something like this: "See how country folk live, think and work in 'Down Home.'" "Have you ever seen a real country church revival?—if not, come to the blank theater and get a glimpse of a real one in 'Down Home,' Irvin Willat's latest picture."
Olive Thomas' Last Picture Is Light

Olive Thomas in
"EVERYBODY'S SWEETHEART" Selznick—Select

DIRECTOR .................. Laurence Trimble
AUTHOR ..................... John Lynch
SCENARIO BY .............. John Lynch
CAMERAMAN ............... Robert Newhardt
AS A WHOLE.............. Fairly good comedy and human interest picture

STORY .............. Very slow at start; story's one twist results from very bald coincidence; touches register

DIRECTION .................. Satisfactory
PHOTOGRAPHY ............. Good
LIGHTINGS ................ Average
CAMERA WORK .............. Average

STAR ...................... Whatever work she does the thought of her tragic death remains uppermost

SUPPORT ................. Headed by Willie Collier, Jr., with Joseph Dowling and Walt Whitman in character roles

EXTERIORS .............. Satisfactory
INTERIORS ................ Adequate
DETAIL ..................... Satisfactory

CHARACTER OF STORY .... Romance of two poor farm kids

Disregarding outside influences, "Everybody's Sweetheart" is a fairly good comedy and human interest picture, its entertaining value springing solely from touches injected by author, director, star and supporting cast. The plot is a thing null and void, inasmuch as it contains no dramatic situations, while its one twist is accomplished by means of a terribly obvious case of coincidence.

Olive Thomas appears as Mary, a girl of the county poor farm. Her pal is John, a role played by Willie Collier, Jr. It is mentioned that both children were sent to the poor farm after being found in a nearby railroad wreck years before, so it's a pretty sure bet that one or both of them will turn up heir to a good fortune.

There are lots of scenes taken at the poor farm, chief of which is the funeral of Mrs. Blodgett, Mary's pet hen. It is rather an idiotic scene until the director gets busy with his comedy touch of the kid firing the old soldier's gun. He should have handled the whole sequence lightly.

After a time Mary and John run away together with an old Civil War corporal, whose memory is fading. They land at the home of the "General," an aristocratic old gentleman, and here the corporal breathes his last. Mary is cared for by the General while John works in the garden. Ultimately Mary makes the discovery that John is the General's long-lost grandchild, and so everything ends happily.

There are more cute little touches in the scenes taking place in the general's home and the juvenile romance between John and Mary is handled adeptly.

The scenes between the corporal, played by Walt Whitman, and the general, played by Joseph Dowling, are very well done and the death scene of the former is likely to produce a tear or two.

Both the star and her young leading man appeared to attractive advantage.

Will Star's Death Have Any Effect On This?
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Like many of the recent pictures made by Olive Thomas, this is light in theme and may get over fairly well with audiences that like this type of entertainment. There is, however, the question of whether or not audiences will care to be reminded of little Ollie Thomas, whose recent tragic death in Paris may be remembered by many of them. It is a serious question whether audiences really do go in for this sort of recollection, although it can hardly be doubted but that the better posted fans do. All of the young girls who "loved" Olive Thomas will undeniably recall her tragic death. Whether they will make up a sufficient percentage of your audience to be reckoned with will be up to you to determine. On the other hand there may be a sentimental value attached to this inasmuch as it is her last picture and they may want to see it particularly because of this.

It is a question whether much of this so-called audience opposition to a dead star isn't bunk. Just remember that practically none of your audience has even seen any of the stars they like, and figure for a moment from that angle.
Production Efforts Fail To Make Poor Story Material Entertaining

Anita Stewart in “HARRIET AND THE PIPER”
Louis B. Mayer Prod.—First National

DAILY

This simile introduced at the very beginning gave despite its sincere efforts does not compensate for its other shortcomings. Miss and the Piper” has been given a production that despite its sincere efforts does not compensate for its other shortcomings. Miss Stewart has been photographed to advantage and the remainder of the cast is adequate although Myrtle Stedman is indeed a young looking woman to be the mother of a young man and a young lady. An altogether unnecessary character in the person of the “good” man’s mother helps to complicate matters.

The opening scene of the story shows Anita Stewart as Harriet Field going through a “free love” marriage
The action jumps to “sometime later” with Harriet now social secretary to Mrs. Carter, a butterfly wife with an over-indulgent husband. The following scenes are merely by-play showing the star suffering in various ways. First by having young Carter propose to her and of course she has reason to refuse, and later to meet Blondin as a guest at the Carter home and suitor for the hand of Carter’s daughter. Later when Mrs. Carter elopes with one of her admirers Harriet finally marries Carter, not because she loves him but because he wants her to look after his “children”—both grown up. Blondin of course finds a way to expose Harriet’s past to her husband but she is forgiven and Blondin is given a check to forget it.

May Give Satisfaction But Not in First Class Houses

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you think the star is liked well enough to get over this poor story you can book “Harriet and the Piper” and not worry a great deal. On the other hand if you are depending upon the actual entertainment value of the production you will need to secure other good material for your program to balance up with a weak feature. And again, while not containing the ingredients expected by the educated picture-going public, the Greenwich Village business and the girl with the past idea still finds favor with certain audi ces so you can judge from the people you cater to just whether you will disappoint them.

You can mention the names of Charles Richman, Myrtle Stedman and Irving Cummings as members of the cast if you think well of it and say: “If you dance, you pay the piper. See the truth of the old adage in Anita Stewart’s latest picture, ‘Harriet and the Piper.’”

From small town to big city and back again goes the action of "Once to Every Woman" and thru it all, from humble poverty to selfish power and back to her mother's arms, Dorothy Phillips holds you fascinated, as can no other actress of our generation. Book this picture for 1920's surest attraction.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Man who believes his wife married him out of gratitude comes to realize her real love through faith

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 7,000 feet

Cecil B. DeMille's latest production "Something to Think About" is another of the faith theme subjects but in this case the patriarch is a woman and instead of affecting a cure she brings about a realization of love in a man who refuses to believe his wife's love. The production is first class in all respects, beautifully artistic and holds the interest from beginning to end.

Jeanie Macpherson as author, however, must be accused of being just a trifle extreme in her ideas if one is to take her subject seriously.

The tinting is very good. The title decorations are worthy of mention.

Ruth Anderson (Miss Swanson), finally secures her father's (Theodore Roberts) consent to accept the offer of David Markley, a wealthy crippled philosopher, to send the girl to school. Ruth returns a grown woman and upon her father's suggestion hints to Markley that she will marry him. Markley really loves Ruth and his greatest happiness is shattered when she elopes with Jim Dirk, a poor boy.

The pair live happily in the city until Jim is killed. Ruth returns to her father's home only to find him blind and so poor that he is packing up to move to the poor house. His anger at his daughter's marriage to Jim has not abated and he sends her away. She seeks shelter in a barn where she is found by David as she is about to hang herself. David again offers her his name but this time as a protection for herself and her unborn child.

Time passes and Ruth realizes her love for David, but is unable to find a responsive chord in David who refuses to believe that her's is anything but a feeling of gratitude. Ruth is about to give up begging for David's love when his housekeeper urges her to seek it through faith and eventually through her spiritual influence the couple are brought together and Ruth's little son returns from his play with his grandfather who also forgives his daughter.

Play This and Be Assured That It Will Please
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You will do the right thing to book "Something to Think About" if you can get it. Cecil B. DeMille has added another success to his chain in his latest production in the story of faith as the foundation of true love. The story is told in beautiful language prettily presented in illustrated titles and you can link up the story with the poem "The Village Blacksmith" from which lines are quoted.

Promises will be in order and you can be assured of providing an entertainment worth their while. The fact that "Something to Think About" is another based on the "faith" idea should not prove a handicap because it is distinctive in itself and with a cast that is superb.

SCENARIO BY ..................... Robert Townley
CAMERAMAN ........................ Arthur Boeuger
AS A WHOLE ..... Mostly horse riding and western feud situations with romantic twist coming in strong at the conclusion

STORY ....... Doesn't establish definitely enough what all the commotion is about

DIRECTION ...... Might have been more explicit in planting characters; works up to a good climax

PHOTOGRAPHY ........................ Fair

LIGHTINGS .......................... Might be better

CAMERA WORK ........................ Average

PLAYERS .......... Harry McLaughlin an athletic hero; Allene Ray pretty little heroine who hasn't much to do but rides well

EXTERIORS ........... Some good ranch scenes

INTERIORS .......... One very noticeable prop used for interior of dilapidated hut

DETAIL ..................... Titles much too long

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Factions fighting for free use of all Texas land with hero and heroine fighting for the right to love

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ... About 5,000 feet

Some good horse riding and an atmosphere of the out-of-doors together with a climax that has a fair amount of punch, sums up "Honeymoon Ranch" except for mention of its romantic touch which culminates with the lovers being interrupted in their first opportunity for a kiss by a funny looking little pup getting his head in the way. There is some very good riding and shootin' galore.

Allene Ray is the pretty little heroine who rides well but hasn't a great deal to do otherwise. Harry McLaughlin is an athletic hero who puts up a good fight in the climax and does a Douglas Fairbanks up the front porch to have a word with his bride.

The opening reel might be improved by less wordy and more explicit titles. There is a feud on between the factions, one believing there should be no fences separating the various properties or in other words the idea of “what’s yours is mine” and the other faction believing in law and order and protection of personal property. This foundation for all the fighting and commotion in “Honeymoon Ranch” is not made definite enough in the mind of the audience to warrant all the fuss they make about it.

However, they work in the romantic end of it for relief and really do work up a fairly exciting climax. The storm which forces the heroine to spend the night in the hero's cabin has been very poorly done. The lightning flashes have no semblance of realism.

Hero, formerly a lounge lizard in the East, inherits his uncle's ranch and decides to become a ranchman. He makes the acquaintance of Blue Bonnet (Miss Ray), whose father killed his uncle during one of their feuds about the "fence" question. Naturally Blue Bonnet's father continues the grudge on the nephew and when the girl is forced to spend the night in hero's cabin, the old theory of an immediate marriage is carried out with the girl locked in her room and the bridegroom ordered to leave town.

But he doesn't, and after some persuasion takes up the fight of his uncle and shows his metal by entering the saloon and beating up a goodly number of his father-in-law's gang. Later hero is prepared to fight to a finish and show them his wife will not be "ashamed of her yellow dog husband," but before he has an opportunity to do any shooting the tyrannical one is subdued by another enemy and the way made clear for Blue Bonnet and her husband on "Honeymoon Ranch."

Appeal to Those of Your Clientele Who Like Western Subjects

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This makes a fairly attractive state rights offering if they like western subjects. There is a good deal of riding through water, some good chase scenes and some shooting and a romance to bring about the happy ending. Added to this you have a rather catchy title to work with and one that can be used effectively for exploitation stunts and catchlines.

Use the lines: "They didn't want wire fences out west. They wanted open, free country. But there were those who wanted the privilege of ownership. Who won the feud?" Or "Imagine a bridegroom on 'Honeymoon Ranch' but minus a bride. See this new western with its horse riding, shooting and love making at the ——— theater."

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...... About 5,500 feet

First of all let it be said that the acting honors of “The North Wind’s Malice” go to Vera Gordon, of “Humoresque” fame. Hers is a performance that gets the audience before she is on the screen two minutes and in this picture the contrast between her work and of William Strauss as the Jewish husband as compared with the main story and its characters, causes a division of the interest from the spectator’s point of view which handicaps the general appeal of the production as a whole, for once Rachel (Miss Gordon), and her husband are shown turning the $16 sign into $91, they practically walk away with the picture and the audience is uneasy until they appear again.

Announce the Author and Another of His Stories of the North

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Generally speaking “The North Wind’s Malice” is not as entertaining as some previous Rex Beach productions, due mostly to the fact that the story resolves itself into two distinct plots with the man of the North and his petty troubled wife on one hand and Rachel and her husband on the other. The constant switching back and forth from one idea to the other is confusing to the audience and thus detracts from the picture’s appeal as a whole.

Despite this probably not serious fault the picture will please those who have seen Miss Gordon’s work in “Humoresque” and it may not be stretching probabilities too much to expect to see her starred in the near future. Announce is as a Rex Beach production; that should be sufficient.

The story contains an effective bit of moral which cites various unimportant events in people’s lives which they look upon as big things and by “making mountains out of mole hills” a wife, in this case, sends her husband away and both suffer unnecessarily just because the wife scolded when the husband tracked snow into the house, because he spilled coffee on the table cloth and because a burned finger aroused her temper. These minor incidents and later the careless disposition of a lighted cigarette form the links in the chain that make up Rex Beach’s story for the films.

Tom Santschi is given an opportunity to portray the virile man of the North toward the close in a good fight scene in the snow. There is also a fine storm scene and the general tone of the direction throughout is effective.

After the series of incidents noted above Roger leaves his wife and later when he is told that his wife is accepting the attentions of Carter he leaves the town and goes further into the North. He is shown at intervals in his travels and he writes his wife that he still loves her and will return if she wishes him to.
But the various letters never reach her and the interest reverts to Rachel and her husband Abe, who run a store in Roger’s home town. The store is burned and the couple and their daughter are near starvation when Abe’s claim to a gold mine turns out to be worth a fortune.

In the meantime Roger’s wife has accepted the kindness of Carter who takes her to his mother’s home where her baby is born. Carter then goes in search of Roger and finds him way up North. Believing Carter has stolen his wife, Roger tries to kill him but later understands and returns to his home where he finds his wife and baby. Tom, another character in the small village, confesses that he lied to Roger about Carter and also explains that the charge of theft against him was due to the fact that he stole food for Rachel and Abe and their daughter with whom he is in love.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,500 feet

The first of the Vera McCord productions, "The Good Bad Wife," adapted from a story called "The Wild Fawn" averages up as a first rate attraction of its kind.

The opening reels deal with the life of Paris' favorite, Fanchon, a dancer. A panoramic view shows Eiffel Tower and surrounding country but this is all that is done to make the spectator acquainted with the place of the action although parts of the titles are in French and the dances of Fanchon help to accentuate the atmosphere of Paris.

There are some effective indications of the director's work in the sequence dealing with the entry of the dancer into the home of her American husband. You have reason to know that the family are very good folks and typical "old school" people, who like things "churchy." The various ways in which Fanchon shocks her people-in-law by smoking and displaying her silken-clad limbs and later when she offers to perform at a church benefit and appears in her daring gown and goes through the celebrated slipper dance, amusement of the old men and the disgust of the women in the audience provide some exceedingly good mirth.

The melodramatic sequence following the entrance of the villain is the picture's weak point but this doesn't consume a great deal of footage and can probably be overlooked.

After Mason, as the hero of the story, brings his French bride to his parents' home in the South, he finds it difficult for his wife to accustom herself to the conventions of these plain people but nothing happens until the benefit performance mentioned above. At the close of the slipper dance, Fanchon, according to custom, throws her slipper to a man in the audience. At this point the villain enters in the person of a stranger, who announces he has seen the dance in Paris.

Fanchon is greatly disturbed by his presence and later the same man appears at her husband's home and demands to see her but the hero's younger brother has become very fond of Fanchon, in an attempt to protect her, kills the villain. He is imprisoned and later in order to testify truthfully and to aid in the boy's acquittal she confesses that the dead man had once been her husband, that he had forced her to marry him when she was a mere child. The boy is discharged and Fanchon, who had been ordered out of the home goes back to her husband and is welcomed by his family.

Play Up Parisian Atmosphere and Announce It as First Vera McCord Production

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You should have little trouble in getting this over as an up to the average program picture. Play up the double atmosphere—Paris and the South,—tell them it's the story of a Famous French dancer who gave up her career and fame for the love of a plain man. You might mention the fact that Dorothy Green plays the leading role. She has not been seen of late but her work in some past productions may be remembered.

Announce it as the first of the Vera McCord productions. They may be interested in noting the first efforts of this new company and look for their next offering. Use the lines: "She was the favorite of the French capital's theatrical whirl. What happened when she entered the home of her American husband's old fashioned parents? Where they shocked? See for yourself in 'The Good Bad Wife.'"

SUPER-SPECIALS
It is but a short time since Robertson-Cole entered the field of motion pictures, without entangling alliances, founded on an honesty of purpose from which it has not and will not swerve, and a desire to succeed only on a basis of merit and fair dealing with exhibitor and producer alike.

How well Robertson-Cole has succeeded is for those it is serving and being served by to judge.

Each step forward has been, quietly and unheralded, the logical sequence of a carefully planned administration by means of which there could be offered to the exhibitor a service which it is his right to expect.

Robertson-Cole has entered now upon its first new season as a distributing company, and a measure of its progress and the success it has attained is evidenced by the fact that it will offer during this year only super-special attractions which have met the standard of excellence upon which that progress is founded.

Except as human judgment may err, Robertson-Cole will not release any subject which it feels will not help the exhibitor toward the success to which he is entitled.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Girl who wants

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 5,000 feet

Throughout this production, there is a distinct lack of anything unusual either in the way of story material or handling. From beginning to end it moves along at an average pace, without rising to anything resembling a climax that can be expected to grip the spectator. It has a theme that is certainly old and the big situation in it, the one wherein the heroine is rescued by the man she really loves, is handled so that it comes as no surprise and does not furnish a very strong punch.

Sympathy and appeal do not really go to the star, whose attitude and general demeanor are far from the criterion by which genuine heroines are established. The quest for riches, the emotion upermost in her mind, all of the time will not favorably impress a great many fans and as for the comedy touches with Eddie Dennis, exaggeration has almost spoiled them.

Leona, a poor girl in a little town, is enabled by a legacy to visit a big city, where Geraldine de Forest, society matron and chum of her dead mother introduces her to the smart set. Her gilded dream of wealth and happiness seem nearer and the possibility of securing a wealthy husband becomes a reality.

Geraldine introduces Leona to Frazer Boynton, who has a well-lined wallet and is willing to make the girl his wife. Leona, meanwhile, has met Jasper Holroyd who interests her and attracts her more than a trifle.
And though Boynton has many dollars, he lacks pep Jasper on the other hand is interesting and Leona really loves him it seems, but doesn't know it. The rub comes when it is learned that the matronly Gerardine wants Jasper. She discourages Leona, but when an accident occurs—well you know how it is.

Diving into shallow water, Leona fails to rise.
Boynton hesitates and is lost, while the athletic Jasper skips into the waves, gets under the pier with Leona and the two participate in a kiss. It is not long before Boynton and his millions are sacrificed. When Leona dashes away from society life, Jasper is conveniently waiting at the station.

Forget the Powerful Adjectives in Exploiting This
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Probably, a production of this sort will appeal to certain members of your clientele, but the safest course is to let them know what it is all about. Accent the idea that is the story of the poor girl who wanted to marry dollars, but changed her desires and became the spouse of a man. Use as catchlines, some on the style of “The first man offered her money, the other affections. But the woman to whom she was indebted loved the other man. What was she to do?”

The last Carmel Myers offering was up to the mark, and you might find it advisable to remind them of it.
Tell them that the same people who turned out “In Folly's Trail” are responsible for this. As for the star, use her name, but don’t play it up too strongly, for you may not want them to remember this later on.
At any rate, don’t use superlatives in your advertising.
All the Lure o' Woman was in her—she was sleek and sinuous and softly sweet—and as dangerous as the tiger whose tints and tones were in her eyes—her skin—her hair.

A fascinating story this, centered about a fascinating personality, with a most talented cast—a cast which includes such gifted players as Lawson Butt, Myrtle Stedman and Tina Modotti—and a director whose genius has enabled him to draw from the story all the interest which the author wrote into it.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 5,038 feet

Charles Alden Seltzer has written another western full of scraps, shootin', a good man, a girl who needs protection, and in fact all the ingredients of a western formula suitable to the star. The action is kept up at a good pace and moves along logically and in good spirit for those that like wild and woolly ones.
It will strike a good many, however, that this quality of excitement presented in western offerings is laid on just a little too thick in "Drag Harlan."

There are at least six or seven deliberate "killings" during the feature's run and this is just a few too many for the average person to witness in the space of six reels, particularly since in almost every case the "two gun" man hasn't sufficient reason for aiming at his human target, but he goes right to it, mowing them down one after the other until one wonders if there'll be enough actors left to finish up the plot.

Despite this objection from some percentage of picture patrons, "Drag Harlan" contains all the qualifications of a good western picture. There are num-eros fine western shots, good riding and a story that works out the way the audience wants it to, the kind where the hero gets the evidence on the villain and wins the heroine. Farnum, in the title role, does his usual good work but certainly should watch his make-up a little closer. In several instances in this it is noticeably bad.

Drag Harlan, noted throughout his territory for his lightning-like handling of the trigger, comes upon Lane Morgan, a ranch owner who is dying as the result of an attack by a gang of fighters who are after his gold mine. Morgan dies, begging Harlan to take the map of the mine location to his daughter, and asking him to take care of her and protect her from the Deveny, an outlaw and his gang.

Harlan carries out his mission, but is questioned by John Haydon, who interferes with Harlan's action on the grounds that he was Morgan's friend.
But Harlan has a piece of a watch chain which the dying man handed him and the remaining bit of chain Harlan observes on Haydon, giving the clue that Haydon is really Morgan's murderer. Harlan practically has his man trapped by this fact and proceeds to carry things out pretty much in his own way.

But Luke Deveny, also in league with Haydon, conspires with the latter to "get" Harlan and they nearly succeed in doing so and at the same time kidnap Barbara Morgan. Hero makes a get-a-way and ar-vances at Deveny's cabin in time to rescue Barbara.
Later, after restoring peace all around, Harlan pre-parcs to say good-bye, but on second thought and with a little encouragement, decides to marry Barbara.

Play Up the Star and Promise Them an Exciting Western

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Drag Harlan" is an all around good western subject and if your crowd likes this type of entertainment they will find a fine display of shooting, trick gun-play and wild riding with the star handling two guns at once in expert fashion. Tell them Farnum is seen in a typical western role with a story containing plenty of the "wild and woolly" atmosphere throughout.

Play up the title by informing them that because of his peculiar, lightning-like faculty for pulling his gun, the hero is called "Drag Harlan." Promise them some bold and daring examples of shootin' and use the line:
"Even the most desperate outlaw feared Drag Harlan. But there was a reason. See for yourself in Farnum's latest."

New Comic 'Find' Appears on Screen in 'Kiss Me Quick'

Clyde Cook Bids Fair to Be Rival of Charlie Chaplin—

Film devotees who attended the Strand and the Rialto yesterday saw a new comic "find" hurdle across the horizon, for Clyde Cook has some of the zippy qualities of a comet, besides being much funnier. If his future pictures maintain his showing in William Fox's farce, "Kiss Me Quick," this English pantomimist, who revealed a bit of his abilities at the Hippodrome last season, should fill a large part of the vacancy left by Charlie Chaplin, now that the latter appears to be content largely with being an old master appearing generally at revivals.

Cook in his first motion picture here displayed not only Chaplin's wistful earnestness and expressiveness, but also a gift of contortionism that made him several knots faster than Chaplin. He tied himself up like a frog, wriggled like a snake and hopped like a grasshopper, displaying a hundred times the activity of the ordinary janitor he was supposed to represent. Not only is Cook hilariously funny, but the picture itself riots with laughter because of a wrestling match Cook has and an airplane trip that threatens to rip up most of the countryside.

CHARACTER OF STORY ... Girl hires a husband so that she may flirt like her married friends do
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 5,800 feet

It seems obvious that those concerned with the production of "The Dangerous Paradise" realized the proposition they had on their hands, the making of a farce comedy without adequate material for doing so and in order to get away with it they have attempted a sort of burlesque by having the titles present an atmosphere of intimacy between the players and the audience; that is they tell you that "this is the hero but the heroine hasn't met him yet" and so on in very friendly fashion.

However, this new style of title writing didn't seem to appeal to the audience at the Broadway theater where the picture was shown. Some specimens of current slang phrases found their way into "The Dangerous Paradise" such as "sit down and gather yourself, you look scattered," "You tell 'em sewing machine, Rollo's on pins and needles." When they resort to this sort of thing to cover up a story it's merely giving away what they think of it themselves.

Louise Huff and the supporting cast played in such a way as to indicate they were aware of their handicap. Nevertheless, "The Dangerous Paradise" runs along for five reels with its only redeeming feature in some pretty exterior scenes on the beach and garden. The attempts at comedy are rarely successful. In the cast are Ida Darling, Jack Raymond, Harry Benham and Nora Reed.

The star appears as a wealthy young girl, not yet of age, whom her Aunt desires to marry off to the man of her choice before the girl becomes her own mistress. The Aunt's selection does not meet with her satisfaction and Louise makes many serious attempts to vamp the hero, played by Harry Benham. The heroine thinks she is just a sweet young thing and keeps on with his attentions to the various married women.

Louise comes to the conclusion that in order to "have any fun" (as per the title), she will have to be a married woman. She overhears her Aunt's conversation that she is now of age so she asserts herself, buys a lot of clothes and hires a husband. The heroine and her "proxy" husband go to Newport where Louise again begins her campaign on the hero, quite sure that as a married woman she will be successful. And eventually she is.

But hero learns of the ruse and plays a trick on her by taking a duel with the supposed-to-be husband in which hero presumably succumbs but comes to when the girl kneels down beside him and begs him not to die. The "hired" husband falls in love with Auntie and the way is made clear for the young couple.

If Star Is Popular Enough You May Get By With It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Dangerous Paradise" may possibly get by in houses not of the first class. The picture contains practically no action and drags along in a monotonous fashion for five reels. If the star is liked well enough to satisfy your folks by her mere appearance, it may get by.

On the other hand if Miss Huff is not a drawing card with your people, "The Dangerous Paradise" will not serve as the very best introduction and you had best use your judgment. In case this is coming to you on contract and you do play if you can use the lines: "Has a married woman more freedom than a single woman? See 'The Dangerous Wife' for the answer."

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 4,638 feet

Utilizing the much-used and abused plan of placing the leading lady in the apartment of a man other than her husband, they have endeavored by adding numerous complications and offering a number of shots of the star in very scant attire, to brighten it.
The shifting of the different characters and imparting of bits of information in titles—points essential to the continuity of the offering, however, makes it exceedingly difficult to follow the story.

There is, for instance, a Mr. Weldon who is alluded to and who is impersonated by the star in the story.
Weldon, Noble and Henning, all characters in the play plan to wear a suit of armor in the possession of a dealer in costumes. To keep track of the grand mixup which occurs is not an easy matter, for after that one twist after another is presented.

Eileen Percy lends a pleasing personality to the production. In it, she is attractive, dresses judiciously, and looks especially good in her improvised costume of a lamp-shade and portiere. Walter McGrail plays well opposite her and Hallam Cooley as her previous suitor is excellent.

There are a few bright bits in the picture, some of the farce material being amusing. In addition, the principal appears in some negligee which adds to her predicament, but is not sure to meet with the unanimous approval. The scheme of having her wear a lamp-shade as a hat and portiere as a gown is a touch that helps considerably.

Value to You Depends Upon Your Audience

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Whether or not this production may be expected to get over in good style depends almost entirely upon your audience. If it is a critical crowd it is not likely to accept this without complaint. On the other hand, if you cater to a transient patronage, you can exploit this so as to lure lure to your portals.

Eileen Percy, if not already well known to your clientele should be given her share of the publicity.
Sooner or later she will be given better things and then you should be able to capitalize. Let her be the ace card in your campaign regardless of what sort of a house you run.

If it is a neighborhood theater you conduct, slip this in without too much bally-hooing. Sould yours be a house where the patronage varies, tip them off about the fact that it is the story of a newly married wife, who was placed in another man's apartment by circumstances. Flash the negligee stills on them, using a cut-out or two, and you should find it worth while.
EVERY one of the NEW two reel Christie Comedies plays at the Rialto or Rivoli in New York; at Tom Moore's Rialto or Garden in Washington; at A. H. Blank's Strand or Rialto in Omaha; at Rowland and Clark's Liberty or Regent in Pittsburgh; at the Valentine or Temple in Toledo; at one of the Loew theatres in Cleveland; at the Circle in Indianapolis, the Strand in Dayton, the Walnut at Cincinnati—at similar leading theatres in every city.

There IS a reason.

Christie Comedies are BETTER comedies.

FIRST, there are real stories behind them. They have the cleverest comedians and the prettiest girls, under able direction. They are not made hit and miss; very one of them scores a bulls-eye. They challenge comparison with any other pictures on the market for their quality, for their entertainment value and for their audience pulling-power.

If your theatre is not known as the home of Christie Comedies you are missing a "Welcome" to hundreds.

Begin with the first one of the new ones, "Kiss Me Caroline." And then through the list: “A Seaside Siren,” “Out for the Night,” “Seven Bald Pates,” “Don't Blame the Stork,” “Striking Models,” “A Homespun Hero” and “Shuffle the Queens.”
Some Short Reels

"The Race of the Age"—Educational

"The next thing to being there." That is what almost everyone will say of this two reeler showing the race between Man O' War and Sir Barton, the famous thoroughbreds that met at the Kenilworth track, Canada, recently. By using the Akeley camera, mounted on a swivel and making it possible to follow any moving object, Educational has enabled the spectator to see the noted horses throughout their struggle. In addition, there are slow-motion shots of the thoroughbreds bits showing the various characters associated with the event and then the limbering up, cooling off and other bits of routine work of the contestants. They have photographed practically everyone in any way connected with the race, the family of the owner of Sir Barton, Commander Rose, Samuel D. Riddle and Mrs. Riddle as well as the jockeys and others. Before they start with the race scenes, an entire reel is presented and some spectators may find it somewhat tiresome, but the scenes of the race are excellent. Many people who dot the track and masses of heads are apparent as the swift steeds pass the stand. But all of the incidents of the race, the manner in which Man O' War pulled up to Sir Barton and kept gaining, passing the latter to win by a very comfortable margin are all clear. In slow motion, the spectator sees them as only the camera can record them.

It is to be regretted that the race was not more of a genuine contest, for then it would have been really thrilling. As it was, the rather easy victory of the American horse made it a somewhat even affair. Of course, the tremendous publicity given the occasion will arouse considerable interest in this. And you had better grab it before the race shown in it sinks too far into the background. If you book it soon, you will have a very valuable addition to your bill.

"The Great Baseball Scandal"—C. B. C.

Lincoln A. Berthwick has photographed with both the common type and slow-motion camera the gentle art of "throwing" ball games that could ordinarily be won. The recent expose of the crooked playing of several members of the White Sox has provided C. B. C. with a title for the offering which is both timely and interesting. In Chicago, where the tricks of dishonest ball tossers originated, the reel should be especially well received, for the residents of the "Windy City" will probably want to see what they didn't think they saw last year. In all likelihood this will also go well elsewhere especially with baseball fans. The different ways in which close plays can be made so that the opposition benefits—laying the ball over the plate for the batter to hit, hesitating in the field, jumping or turning without need, over-sliding, striking out intentionally on balls delivered directly over the plate and other methods of the dishonest player are displayed. It is an entertaining reel and a good move on the part of C. B. C., which seems to be keen to take advantage of current events and turn out films in connection with them.

Pathe Review, No. 75

Hy Mayer's "Travelaugh," dealing with life at Coney Island, coming at the conclusion of this Pathe Review has been cut, which is to be regretted. They offer a second colored portion, showing some lace-making, but that does not replace satisfactorily the slowed-up material. As for the opening colored scene, that is up to the standard, including several very pretty shots. The footage dealing with the Belgian police dog holds attention and the Mayer novelty concludes. Incidentally, the Ditmars animal portion is eliminated and will be missed by those who have seen the preceding releases of the set.

"Marryin' Marion"—Universal

Ford Beebe wrote the story and scenario for what is probably one of the best Hoot Gibson two reelers turn out by Universal. It is a humorous western with several unusually clever complications, some excellent comedy situations and a creditable theme. From beginning to end, it is a production which sparkles with good humor, the direction being of the top notch variety, and the work of the cast up to the mark. Wherever the other issues of the Gibson series have been played, this can be depended upon to hold its own, and in houses where short westerns are popular, this should be a sure fire hit. It all concerns Gibson's quest for a wife, who in this case is Gertrude Armstead. The girl's father and his pursuit of some red hot liquor, as well as the exchange of costume between a gentle parson and an escaped convict furnish most of the twists in the tale. After securing the striped garb of the ex-prisoner, the preacher inflicts it upon the rancher. There is a chase to furnish some excitement, but throughout, the spirit of fun is uppermost. If you are thinking of booking a two reeler staged in the wooly region, seize this.

“The Spirit of Service”—American Red Cross

The Red Cross will release through its exchanges in connection with its campaign for new members, from Nov. 11 to 22, this all-American reel. Although in several scenes they use a black back-drop instead of a set and some of the dissolves are not up to the mark, the general atmosphere and handling of the subject has made an effective offering which will be offered you without any cost. Red you can help the Red Cross by running it if you wish to.

“When the Wind Blows”—Rolin—Pathé

Several clever bits of comedy business woven about a commendable theme, make this issue of the Slob Pollard series a worth while production. Sammy, the diminutive lad of ebullient spirit, is a prominent in the piece, having been given a role of some real importance for the first time in quite a while. The little fellow makes a bold bid for major honors, being in no small measure responsible for the satisfactory effect this produces. Marie Mosquini is the lady in the case and there is the stout comedian who has been seen in several of the Pollard comedies. The latter is an exceedingly wealthy character in the story, while Pollard is forced to content himself with a life of poverty. A cyclone which blows the home of the wealthy and niggardly brother on the land owned by Slob results in the latter’s winning the hand of the damsel and turning tables on the money-laden fellow. Pollard’s saving a piece of stale bread and several other stunts all register nicely and make this a good single reeler.

“Collectors of Craniums”—Chester—Educational

One of the Philippines Islands is the scene of this Chester travel offering which is another addition to the large collection of subjects of this sort now being released. Unlike the suggestion made by its title, this does not really show headhunters, or deal with people who resemble cannibals. Some of the villages of such a nature, it being pointed out in one of the captions that at time the residents of the island had possessed such tendencies. The scenes are the usual shots of tropical island dwellers, rather scantily attired and dark-skinned. An average travel picture.

“Am I Dreaming”—Universal

Carter De Haven is featured in this Universal single reeler which is lacking in both thematic and incidental merit. From beginning to end, it hits an ordinary pace. Had they made a slapstick offering out of it, they might have been able to get a few laughs, but the lack of humor resulting from knockabout comedy and poor plot do not produce the desired effect. Some effort has been made to keep this going by inserting titles which josh the story and while these help, they do not successfully disguise its faults. Had they used straight comedy titles, it would have been a complete wreck, but as it is, some patrons may laugh along with the captions.

“The idea of the valuable papers, sneaking “Bolshevik” and inheritance at the end do not make a really good framework for a successful comedy.

“My Lady’s Ankle”—Universal

Here is a one reel comedy which has a clever theme, good situations and a satisfactory cast. Undoubtedly, it could have been made into a worth while two reeler, but in keeping it down to single-reel length, they have nevertheless turned out a creditable little offering. It all concerns an artist and dancer who is his spouse. The two reside in Paris and fortune does not favor them until the winder of the brush paints his wife’s stockings so as to hide a hole. All Paris is delighted with the idea and painted stockings become a fad. Upon his success, however, the artist is placed in a trying predicament when numerous women come to his apartment to have their stockings painted. Here is a unique finish, when after the various tracing husbands had been locked in different rooms with women other than their wives, emerge and clap their rightful mates. More comedy could have been secured if they played the same scenes in the different rooms, but they skipped those scenes. It really should have been prolonged another reel for the material easily justified such a course.

“Beggars and Fakirs of India”—Educational

Although many spectators will regard some material included in this travel subject rather tiring, there is the fact that it has educational value. In addition, the fact that it deals with a set of people seldom seen upon the screen adds to its value as entertainment. Begging, as one of the titles points out, is regarded as a profession in India, where the natives use various means of deforming themselves to inspire pity and contempt in those who are more fortunately situated. One beggar, for example, is seen rolling along, it being explained that he had travelled half the way across India in that manner at the time he was photographed. Others torture themselves in different horrible ways, while some are too proud to work and take handouts from the people entitled to alms. The titles are interesting and this is a worth while offering of its sort. It is about 500 feet long and will be appended to another subject of similar length—“A Chinese Orphanage.”

“A Chinese Orphanage”—Educational

The manner in which a French Catholic Mission in China opens its doors to baby girls who annually are left to die in thousands, and cares for them is dealt with in this reel of 500 feet. It is a bit of considerable human interest and will probably appeal to the great majority of screen patrons. This will be joined to “Beggars and Fakirs of India,” another short length picture.

Another Chester Screenic—Educational

Several shots of rare beauty are included in “Climbing Cataracts,” the scenic bit which opens this and “Through Winding Walls” another subject closes. The first part is especially worthy of praise showing the manner in which salmon on their way up stream leap along and how one of the natives in the section catches them. In the latter section, the onlooker is carried along a river which flows between high walls of rock. It is a highly commendable reel with the most creditable material in the early section.

“A Pajama Marriage”—Special Pictures

Neely Edwards who was formerly featured in Hall Room Boy comedies is the most prominent member of the cast of this “Comelclassic” two reeler, which is comprised of about 1,500 feet of comedy and 500 of scenic material. Several of the performers who have been appearing for Christie recently are seen in these, Eddie Baker and Jim Corey being among them. Edwards who formerly sported a mustache is without it this time and does not seem to be quite as funny. The mansion includes several fairly clever bits toward the finish, but as to the theme and situations, few if any of them are new. The plain of having Edwards constantly intruding upon the jealous husband results in familiar incidents and the opening dressing-room portion, while nicely staged, is also quite conventional. Some spice is injected by having the various characters parade about in pajamas, which helps.

“The Heritage of the Red Man,” a colored scenic, tinted by the Handshiegl process is up to the mark, including several scenes of great beauty. The titles, lettered in Old English, add to its good appearance.

“A Scream in Society”—Universal

Vin Moore directed this knockabout comedy offering which has a few fairly clever bits in it, especially in the ball room scene, where the housekeeper who intrudes on a society affair finds herself dragging a table with some interesting liquids on it, about the floor. As she dances, an old fellow who has been imbibing follows her and the spectacle of her terpsichorean efforts with the table attached to her train is truly laughable. At the start, the bit showing how the honorable scrub-woman endeavors to clean up, while she deposits new dust from her shoes as she walks about is likely to provoke mirth. As for her use of the wolly poodle as a mop, that is another bright bit. As a rule, a trio of laughs should be enough to get a single reel over and in no denying all probability enable this to hold its own. If the other material had been snappier, it would have been a first rate offering. As it is, it is also satisfactory but not the riot it could have been made.
What motion pictures do you remember? The good ones. And how many good ones are there? Three that we remember distinctly. And the three in order of their merit—as we see it—first, 'The Miracle Man', second, 'Over The Hill', and third, 'Humoresque'. And yesterday we saw what may be fourth, 'The Song Of The Soul'. At The Capitol.

A JOHN W. STOWE PRODUCTION NORTHERN DISTRIBUTION
In the figures on the ticker tape he read his ruin; he read there the story of the woman who died of hunger when he had all the bread; he read the vengeance of her son who had ruined him.

As these two men battled for power two women battled for the love of the young and determined man who had devoted his life to avenging his mother. One woman was worthy; the other unworthy.

This great fight of finance and the love of women has been woven into one of the most powerful dramas ever created by Edgar Lewis and all who know the history of the screen know the power and ability of this master of dramatic productions.
Goldwyn Reorganization

Reorganization of Goldwyn has practically been completed. The new plans provide for the return of Samuel Goldwyn as president; F. J. Godsol, as chairman of the board of directors, and Messmore Kendall, as chairman of the executive committee.

Formal announcement of the reorganization will be made in a few days.

The reorganization provides Goldwyn with ample additional capital. It is possible that some changes will be made shortly in the personnel of the organization.

There were a number of conferences held on Friday and Saturday and further meetings are scheduled for today.

Under the reorganization plan, General T. Coleman Du Pont and his associates will play no important part in Goldwyn affairs.

James Exhibitors

...precludes, so far as this Inquiry is concerned, the creation of those neat little boxes that would compare favorably with those emanating from Los Angeles, where 75 per cent. of our sales are made.

The producer of the average British picture realizes that it is useless to compete with any subject whose base value is not more than £10,000, on a subject whose base value is not more than £10,000. Likewise, the rental is fully paid to the fact that he is not in a position to give more than this at a time in view of the niggardly prices paid by exhibitors for the hire of a film. Consequently, the producer is compelled to cut his clothings and limit his expenditure so he would barely purchase the scenario of an ordinary picture.

How can British producers expect to produce films for international consumption when they have not the where-withal with which to do it?

The average production in America costs anything up to $20,000, and in this country sells for £4,000. Under the circumstances, competition is well nigh impossible, and one cannot turn St. Thomas itself in a position that does not assure a fair return for its money. At the same time, we do not think that British exhibitors have been talked to properly on the possibilities of film production in this country. If they were, we think they would see that production at all would make things better, they would hesitate to invest a sum of money commensurate with the requirements of a picture.

A Great Britain I understand there are 4,000 picture theaters; in fact, there are only 12,000, whatever exaggeration may say to the contrary. Los Angeles works on an average of $75,000 per production, and is only 20 per cent of what it should be. Thus it will be seen that a purely statistical point the British director catering for a purely British market should expect twice as much in the matter of production.

To buy this truth is driven home to British financiers, the producer will find no difficulty in making pictures that should enjoy national distribution.

So what you will, the hands of the people are tied until the exhibitor makes his side prepared to pay a fair equitable sum for the hire of his film. I do not hesitate in saying that the proposition that is raised against the ranking of British exhibitors is an unenviable reproach upon a good name of the film industry. In the smallest town in the rest spot in the United States there are more generous terms to the distribution of picture-sized films than is the case in a popular district in this country.

The Film Renter, editorially commented on Och's observations, as follows:

...in the course of a conversation with the writer, Mr. Och expressed the opinion that the new move made by United Artists and First National to cut the death-knell of the independent system in this country. He backs up this statement with a definite argument. He contends that British exhibitors will vie with each other to obtain the productions of United Artists and First National, because, in his opinion, they are 'bigger and better' pictures about which we have heard so much recently, and because they feature the pick of the popular stars. In order to include these outstanding successes in his program, the British exhibitor would obviously have to shell many of the present bookings.

"The block booking system has been and always will be the greatest menace to the British film industry, and whatever method can be devised to cut its remunerating tentacles will be welcomed by every thinking member of the trade."

Phil. Houses Raise Rates

Philadelphia.—Several local houses have put into effect increased admission rates. Prominent among the theaters that have raised rates are the Stanley, Arcadia, Palace, Logan, Iris, Lafayette and others who have boosted their prices.

"Meanwhile most of the exhibitors are tied up with contracts that leave them a little discretionary in the selection of new ones, and until 1922. These contracts are made under the "block system," which provides that a series of pictures are to be bought at one time. It is a method of purchase and has become most universal. The result is that to one who is interested in the exhibitor contracts for a series that the producer would otherwise find difficult to unload.

"Kinsmen"—it's "kinema" over here, even when it is spelt with a 'c' it is usually pronounced with a 'k'—suffering from over-production. There are no motion picture houses in England, and they have the whole field of the American, British, French and Italian markets from which to choose. "Meanwhile alarm is being expressed over the British producing end of the business. To produce profitably pictures on the scale now demanded is impossible if the safety is confined to a country the size of England. The industry lives on its export values.

"But despite his commanding position in the worldwide industry, the American producer is in danger in England, Revoll on the part of exhibitors and producers would not be of importance; it is the public that dictates what productions will be accepted.

"One angle of the argument against goods imported from the United States that has recently been made much of is the slang used in connection with the phrase. The slang is understandable and it is enjoyed. Generally, however, especially in the provinces it is not understood and it is resented."

Ruth alleged that while he received a check for the balance due he believed it valueless and thought he ought to have all the money in hand before the defendants went on showing the film. Putting It Over

Someone or other once said there was nothing new under the sun, but Goldwyn is putting one over in conjuction with "Prisoners of Love," the very clever picture. Carefully designed ball-bonds, resembling the legal form, are being distributed. Inserted among the "discharge slip" directing the warden or keeper of the Goldwyn exchange to release "Prisoners of Love etc.

Wilmington, Del.—In cooperation with the presentation of "The Revenge of Tarzan," an art contest was held in each side of the lions' head receiving awards totaling $10. It was coupled with worth while announcements for the coming week, a special Saturday morning performance being offered, the drawings being presented in the lobby.

Joplin, Mo.—Monkeys and films do not always have much in common, but at the Hippodrome, a cage of them were employed as a means of attracting. All to each to "The Revenge of Tarzan." A large cut-out of a lion about to leap upon the unsuspecting dolphins of the diving-bowl, and a original art work planned by the manager were also used, the cage being placed on top of the lion. Herald, considerable advertising space in daily newspapers all helped along.

Buffalo.—A clever way of gaining friends for a house was tried by A. E. Huldsch, manager of the Victoria. On Columbus Day, he gave a special comedy matinee for children, knowing that since there was no school for them, the doors would be closed by the week. The day,! Capbruck, Arbuckle, Senon and Lloyd comedies were flashed upon the screen. Extra space in newspaper advertising space during the event which was a distinct success.

Seattle, Wash.—An artistic lobby display helped put Rex Beach's "The North Wind's Mistake" over at the Liberty Theatre. At the entrance were spiny and brilliant snow-laden landscapes. A man driving a dog-sled across the Alaskan hills was depicted above the door. Every sort of an article that would suggest Alaska to those entering—sweaters, for-lined coats, beaded fur caps, animals skins, etc. was placed outside the lobby, while to the right was a trunk covered with an Indian blanket. Inside, a specially designed in appropriate fashion paraded about and to add to the campaign, there was the usual billboard, program and newspaper advertising. Most of the articles in the display were borrowed so that it was not very expensive but it brought results.

Newspaper Opinions

Below will be found brief extracts from newspaper reviews of films at Broadway theaters this week.—

"Madame Peacock"—Metro Caplt

TIMES—"Madame Peacock" will not, therefore, give any one an impression of being modern. But it is far from being the extravagant Nazimova is frequently accused of. She does not even impersonate a real character must wish that she would.

AMERICAN—While there is nothing startlingly unique or distinguished about the story, some of the situations that for differentiation are remarkable.

WORLD—Nazimova, in Rita Weiman's "Madame Peacock," has not only given a convincing study, performing, as she does in all of her pictures, a double role. She is young, with success in better settings than this. H. S. FARR—Though Miss Nazimova in "Madame Peacock" is the film feature of the gala programme at the Capitol this week, around is the director's tenth feature, the first anniversary of the month's house, and is the opening of the season to the theatre. Gay and fanciful, it has a lot of acting that is a tatteful of flowers that is a fitting climax to a season of various entertainment. Besides pictures of stage life that charms the audience, the director of "Madame Peacock," Rita Weiman, has thrown on the stage its power to arouse the interest of the public's attention surely as Annette Kellermann's interesting slow motion study of dancing, also on the bill.

TRIBUNE—No comment.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR—"Madame Peacock," Nazimova's latest vehicle, has one scene that is almost irresistible. The manager has ventured the story to exploitation of Nazimova's personality. He has had little success in the screen. It is plain that the manager must have had no idea what the public was going to do with it. The public is very quick to see something.

WORLD—There is no reason why she should have played both parts. T. H. GLOVER—It isn't hard for anybody, whether or not Nazimova intended her audiences to see this portrait version of herself. No one is so clever, she succeeded, for the Capitol audience greeted her with most obvious cheers. Of course, all this has no relation to Rita Weiman's vivid and genuine story of stage life. It is a subject that has been quite well handled and the programme states that the story was accepted for the screen by Nazimova herself. Its true that the little Russian actress should place her adaptations in the hands of directors of some other acting and more serious, more romantic than Nazimova. As Young Gloria Cromwell, a stage star, has broken through the line, Nazimova has the advantage in a business which she must know. She is, therefore, a valuable assistant for such work. She has used her talent, and the public is willing to have it.

JOURNAL—No comment.

SUN—It is strong meat, not the enable Banana to show his understandings in making it suitable for public consumption.

WORLD—No comment.

TRIBUNE—The Great Redeemer.—Mr. Rivoli

TIMES—In some respects it is a typical picture. It might have been a deal better, but, also, it might have been much worse, for its subject lends itself to inspired treatment or cheap escapade the. The Great Redeemer," at any rate, is cheap, and in a few scenes it comes across the screen they are crude. The picture is good, though credit must go to Mr. Rivoli. It has a good beginning, but by the end the pictures tell scenes that is their own, or give up interest, the best scene being the one in which the prisoner arrives to hear a serenade. The way of dealing with another character and the stage is a matter of no more obvious distinction than the story.

Are They Really Going? (By wire to WID'S DAILY)
Los Angeles—The Times says that Douglas Fairbanks has sold his Beverly Hills home and that he and his wife, Mary Pickford, will leave for Europe shortly. This could not be confirmed because both Fairbanks and Miss Pickford are away on location.

WID'S DAILY has published from time to time reports emanating from the coast that the Fairbanks were going abroad to make a series of pictures. The United Artists, however, have stated repeatedly that no definite word has reached New York relative to the talked-of foreign trip.

Marcus Loew Denies Metro Reorganization—June Mathis Coming East

(8pecial to WID'S DAILY)
Los Angeles—According to the statement of Marcus Loew, there will be no reorganization or shake-up of the Metro studios, as predicted in an afternoon newspaper here.

"As for Bayard Veiller being let un," said Loew, "the fact of the matter is that his contract has just been renewed for another period, and might add that I know of no individual contract that I have ever made with greater pleasure."

The only announcement of change which Loew had to make was to the effect that following the completion of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," June Mathis will go to New York, where she will prepare scenarios for some of the big features which Metro contemplates making in the near future.

S-L is understood to be under contract with Metro to deliver a series of five pictures and it is expected that the remaining ones of the series will be those in which Miss Nilsson will appear with Baker as director. "Temple Dusk" will be the second.

London—Ernest W. Fredman, of Picture and Pleasures, Ltd., one of the most prominent of the English "fan" journals, has left here for New York. Mr. Fredman's reason for the trip is not known except that he left "on a very important mission." He will stop at the Astor.

Will Co-operate
Nat'l Ass'n, and M. P. T. O. Expected to Have Joint Committee to Fight Censorship

"Censorship is not the fight of the producer. Not the fight of the exhibitor, but the fight of the motion picture company, public and it is the duty of the different elements of our industry to fight side by side to educate the public to this fact," said Sidney Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. of America yesterday at the meeting of the censorship committee of the National Association held at the Claridge.

It is not unlikely that in the near future a committee representing the theater-owners will meet the committee on censorship of the National Association for the purpose of forming a national anti-censorship bureau with efficient co-operation of the two organizations.

A publicity campaign with the view of reaching the general public is to be prepared by the publicity committee which was introduced by Paul Lazarus, chairman of that committee. He is in New York and will be placed in operation in the immediate future.

President Brady and Jack Connolly were present as well as practically the whole committee.

London Letter
By W. A. Williamson
London, England—We went on location the other day with Bryant Washburn and party. The weather has been somewhat unkind to them but they have been working steadily and hope to complete "The Road to London" soon. The party are very homesick, but more than pleased with their reception here, and results so far obtained.

During the week they have been shooting around Maidenhead, most famous of English resorts, and have secured some magnificent backgrounds. Bryant Washburn has offered to take John Morgan his leading lady, back to America with him, but the arrangement is not yet settled.

A national tie-up has been effected by the Publicity Department of the NEA, in conjunction with the Ross Publishing Co., Woolworth and other chain-store organizations. The tie-up offers an opportunity of carrying in on a local basis publicity in connection with the presentation of "Dinky," in which Wesley Barry makes his debut as a star.

Simultaneous with the release of "Dinky," Woolworth and other stores will place on sale a little book on the life of Wesley Barry. Exhibitors playing this production are requested to consult with managers of local stores and arrange for window displays on this booklet using stands and lighthouse on part of the display.

In addition to the sale of these booklets to the public via stores, the publishers are prepared to supply exhibitors direct with quantity lots at a nominal cost. Arrangements for the publication of similar booklets on Marjorie Daw, Colleen Moore and Marshall Neilan stars have now been completed. These books will be ready for distribution shortly and may be used in connection with other Neilan-First National attractions in which these players appear.

Brunet Says

Paul Brunet of Pathe says: "There is no cause for alarm whatever so far as the motion picture is concerned. The public, however, as in all its other buying, is purchasing entertain- ment with discrimination. No longer can any picture draw a crowded house. It is the exhibitor who gives the best for the money, who is getting the patronage in return.

The next Kerrigan picture scheduled for Houdkinson release is "The Coast of Opportunity." "Partners of Fate," by Stephen Chalmers, has been purchased as the second vehicle for Louise Lowly.

Carol Holloway has been engaged for a role in the new Buck Jones project to follow "Just Pals," now in the making.

Gedney Farms was the scene of the first week's work on Vitagraph's "The Dress of Destiny," in which Vincent Coleman is playing the lead opposite Alice Calhoun, the new star.

As soon as Tom Mix finishes supervising the cutting and editing of "Prairie Trails," he will begin production under Lynn F. Reynolds on "Happy-Go-Lucky." As noted in WID'S DAILY, "The Painted Lily," an original story by Clara Beranger, serves as the first vehicle for Mac Murray under her new contract. Work has been started at the Long Island City studio of Famous.
At Broadway Theaters

Rivoli

Maurice Tournier’s spiritual drama, “The Great Redhead,” has a fast-moving melodrama to be presented at this house in some time, according to the front page feature mentioned. A Butler Kenton comedy, “One Week,” supplies the comedy and features plenty of nonsense material. The rest of the screen program consists of the Rivoli’s Pictorial and a Post-Scripture feature, “A Fancy Panties.” There are several highly commendable musical numbers on the program also, the orchestra rendering Liszt’s “Les Preludes” for the “National Symphony” under Victor Herbert’s “Air De Ballet.” Willy Stahl plays on the violin, “Dandadas” from Symphonie Espagnole, the piece being rendered with superb technique and a great deal of feeling. Mary Fabian soprano, and George J. Franne, tenor, together with a quartet of the well known ballad, “The Little Gray Home in the West,” while Fred Finner Swanmore plays upon the organ “Allegro in A.” It is a strong ball that holds attention from beginning to end.

Capitol

An elaborate ball is making anniversary week a genuine success at this house. Tchaikovsky’s “Overture of 1812” is rendered by the orchestra to start things and the Russian Cathedral Choir follows with a trio of songs. The Capitol’s program includes several novels, and Elise Lyon follows that number by her song, “Narumono in Madame Peacock” is the feature film, preceded by Wrenn’s “Timeless” juvenile “Boy’s” “In Search of the Scenes in a Theatre.” The biggest highlight of the evening is the Ballet of Flowers, danced while colored pictures are flashed upon a drop, while Maurice Kellerman is also seen in a slow motion study of her dancing.

Strand

“Dance of the Hours” from “La Giaconda” is the overture followed by the usual Strand Topical Review, and Katherine Stagg, violinist, who renders “Spanish Serenade” and “Vincent’s Popular Song.” Lionel Barrymore and the Devil’s Garden is a Whitehall Bennett production distributed by First National. Redfern’s Hollinshead, tenor, and Yvon “Buster” Keaton in a comic entitled “One Week” and recently by Metro seemed to please the audience.

Serious Situation
Stuart Blackton Comments on the Movement to Force Change of Block Booking System

A serious situation affecting American pictures has arisen in England. The trouble is spreading throughout the country, according to word received from London from Stuart Blackton.

The Commodore has made a thorough investigation of the situation, and is convinced that the block booking system is juggling much harm must result.

The veteran producer-director writes that, as it now exists, wrong in every way, and is in any way unfair to the American producer's permanent position in the English motion picture field as it is fair to the English exhibitors and their patrons.

"Discard at once the idea that this situation in the English film field is a feeling aroused is all to the part of the English exhibitor or the English people. The situation exists in spite of the difficulty in stemming them and also in spite of the fact that the film market of all European countries is open to American pictures."

The whole trouble is with the block booking system, as a result of which American films are held up and are old and out of date before they are shown in the English theaters. The exhibitors who so loudly protest the presence of pictures before the films are made, that these pictures are good and bad are bound to take them. An exhibitor wants to show a picture of his selection ahead of the one laid down by this system, is prevented from doing so. For example, "Passers-By" was thrown out of town by the distributors.

Allen Expected Back Shortly
The ex-Fox exhibitor from Toronto—J. J. Allen is expected back from Europe in about a month. He has been making deals in England that he feels will be of great importance.

Viv. De Mille Film for Criterion
Viv. De Mille's "Midsummer Night's Dream" is scheduled for a run at the Criterion when "Something to Talk About" his brother's latest sensation at the Plaza, played its last engagement.

Sermons on Films
Methodist Minister Uses Pictures as Basis for Sunday Night Talk

A New Idea
The Rev. Lincoln H. Caswell, minister of the Crawford Memorial Methodist Church, White Plains Ave. and 218th St., has a new idea on sermons.

Dr. Caswell takes important films and uses their stories as a basis for his sermons. For example last week he spoke on "Over the Hill" and persuaded Mary Carr who plays the mother in the picture, to talk to his congregation. This week he will talk on "Way Down East." and Lilian Gish has promised to visit the church. "Headin' Home" is also on the schedule. Babe Ruth has promised to follow the lead established by Miss Carr and Miss Gish.

Dr. Caswell says the idea is a great one and finds that it is working out in great shape.

Lucas in From Atlanta
Harry K. Lucas of the Lucas Supply Co., Atlanta, is in New York.

Eight a Year Now
Hugo Ballin Increases Output—Additional Product for Hodkinson, is Report

Hugo Ballin will increase his yearly production to eight pictures instead of four as originally planned when he formed his own company. Hugo Ballin Prod. Inc. While his name cannot be learned, yet, Ballin will work with an alternating director in order to produce the scheduled eight.

It is understood that the pictures will be distributed through Hodkinson, although at the latter offices it was stated yesterday that existing arrangements called for four Ballin productions.

M. P. T. O. Ball Postponed
The national motion picture pageant and ball to be held under the auspices of the M. P. T. O. of America which was to have been held next week, has been postponed until the middle of December.

Plan Get-Together
M. P. T. O. and N. A. M. P. I. Will Confer on Problems of Mutual Interest—Meet in December

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. of America, plans to summon to New York early in December all of the officers and members of the executive committee of his organization to meet with members of the National Association for the purpose of attempting to work out solutions to various problems that face exhibitors, producers and distributors in the industry. Among the questions which will be discussed jointly will be those of uniform contracts and advance deposits.

It is expected that the executive session will have a more perfect understanding between the manufacturer, distributor and exhibitor as to the business policies which will prevail in the future.

It is expected that Mr. Cohen will shortly name a committee to confer with the National Association on the censorship question.

Wilkinson in State Right Field
W. R. ("Billy") Wilkinson, formerly employed by Universal as branch manager, has been placed in charge of the Leavitt Bldg., where he will handle productions for the state right field.

Carewe to Direct Stewart's "The Tornado"
Edwin Carewe leaves for California on Saturday to get under way "The Tornado," by Jane Murfin, in which Anita Stewart will be starred. Louis B. Mayer also leaves for the coast to get fall production under way.

Some time ago Mayer acquired a Harold MacGrath story, "The Drums of Jeopardy," which ran serially in the "Saturday Evening Post." It is expected that one of the specialp Mayer has planned for next season. Another story has also been selected.

Record Run for "Over the Hill"
There is some talk in film circles that the Fox organization intends keeping "Over the Hill" on Broadway as long, and perhaps longer than the phenomenal run on "The Birth of a Nation." That is, if the Fox people can secure a theater for it.

What Does It Mean?
It was reported late yesterday that Charlie Chaplin and Samuel Goldwyn were holding a very important conference in front of Delmonico's about forty-three in the afternoon.

Putting It Over

Here's how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Seattle—Ralph Ruffner has been arousing great interest by his unusual presentation of features at the Pisces, where he is in management of which he assumed a few weeks ago for Jenzen and Von Herberg. During the showing of the film, "Madame X," organized to get the audience into serious mood of appreciation of mother love, he had a grey-haired woman, dressed as any present-day woman of her age would dress, standing under a magnificently colored light, singing "Annie Laurie" and "The Last Rose of Summer," while a colored scene was being thrown on the screen, which had been made from selections of the Blake Scene, "The Gold Mirror," which had been shown at the Liberty the preceding week.

During the showing of Fatty Arbuckle's "Married Man." Up" this week an entirely different atmosphere was gained by the singing of a male quartet before the opening of the feature. The Strand stage is very shallow, so there is little room for elaborate scene fixing. This quartet of young students from the University of Washington strolled on the stage humming and bringing their stage setting with them. In a few moments they turned the velvet drapery into a deep blue, moonlight night on a Western range, with a camp-fire glowing a bright red under its pile of sticks in the foreground. Gaitering around it they sang a number of favorite melodies of male quartets, ending with a song topping of the show. While they sang the fire went down,—that is, the electric glow was dimmed, and one of the boys fanned it back to life with his hat.

He said that Abrams told him he couldn't pay but told Schulberg that if he would make a note to the plaintiff for that sum Abrams would not disconnect, but was understood that Schulberg would not hold liable for payment. Schulberg says further that all transactions between him and Abrams can be passed on in the accounting suit he has brought against Abrams.

Death to the Vampire

The Associated Press reports from Omaha that elimination of pictures that contain stories of "vampires" and bandits was advocated before the annual convention of the American Humane Association by R. C. Craig, the manager of the Animal Rescue League of that city.

"The 'movies' give us sex problems in triangular and crooked shapes, with the 'vampire' outshining the true woman in popularity," he said.

"Censorship," he said, "should begin with the scenario and should forbid the filming of unhealthful stories. It is not fair to the movie trade to use the scissors after the expense of filming has been incurred."

Brisbane' Ideas

Arthur Brisbane, editor of the Evening Journal and Morning American, at the luncheon of the A. M. P. A. urged "notice-hunters"—a term used by the speaker to designate press agents, to abandon the present methods employed in obtaining "free" press stories in favor of paid advertising. If a picture was worth showing, it surely was worth advertising, Mr. Brisbane explained.

That the possibilities of the motion picture as an educational auxiliary in schools, churches and in places of amusement were potent and far-reaching in results was brought out during the latter part of Mr. Brisbane's discourse. In this respect he urged producers to devote a portion of their energies to the filming of autobiographies of great men.

Regarding the Tax

The following correspondence has been received:

In your issue of Oct. 13th, you mention the amount of tax which exhibitors are charged by the city, which is wholly in excess of what it possibly can be. I dare say there is not more than one exhibitor in 1,000 whose tax on admissions is 10c, as you state. Such cases are indeed rare and can only occur when the admission charge is 10c or more per child being admitted.

"Here is exactly the percentage of tax to admission charges:

Dependent upon length of service employees have from seven to 20 days' vacation a year and are allowed mileage expenses to residence. The Manor has some special rates for living at the Manor. Employees earning $90 a month are not charged for either meals or lodging, and also get a cash bonus of $25 for their vacations. The scale graduates upward from those earning $75 a month who pay 15 cents each meal and 10 cents for lodging, to those earning $250 a month, who pay 10 cents for meals and 30 cents for lodging, but whose bonus runs also to $150 for the vacation period.

The Manor is also open for members of the families of employees and E. V. Richards, genl. manager, says the idea is so good and has proven so practical that he intends enlarging the grounds and providing more room.

Extensive Booking

Chicago—Cecil DeMille's "Something to Think About" has been bookings as a Raab picture in a definite run, while Marion Davies in "The Restless Sex," which has just concluded a run there, moves the Orpheum for an indefinite engagement.

I do not mean this as a slam at your edition, but merely a paper ed-ited in the interest of the exhibitor ought not to publish such flattering misleading statements.

Then again the distributor has a right to demand more rentals where such a handsome return is received by the exhibitor. Think it over.

One of the biggest pictures of the season. One of the best pictures of many seasons. You are going to hear of "Kismet" for a long time to come. Don't forget that. So if you haven't it on your schedule better hurry up and get it. Because if you don't the other fellow will as sure as you're alive. And its full of a lot of real box office angles. It's a bet.

Skinner's work is so splendid, Gasnier has directed with such a sure fire understanding of his story material; and Robertson-Cole have been so prodigious in their expenditures to make this one of the big hits of the season that it requires considerable restraint not to be carried away with enthusiasm for the result.

Rich, colorful Badgad is the setting. And the production is filled to overflowing with stupendous sets, so gorgeous that it is a question if the real Badgad could touch it. Yet it is not overdone. Most notable of the sets is the one showing the bath in the harem where eventually Hajj, the Beggar drowns the villainous chief of police, who conspires to kill the Caliph and incidentally to ruin the daughter of Hajj. And this scene, coming almost at the end while grim, is sure to arouse interest as the bubbles of the dying man come to the surface of the pool, not once, but several times, the victorious, revengeful Hajj grinning triumphantly all the while he holds the villain beneath the water. In this same set the women of the harem disport themselves and while there isn't a closeup to worry the censors, it is possible it will have to come out from some of the more rigid of this class. Lack of space precludes going into detail of many of the rich sets, or detail of the story.

But you'll have to see it anyway to appreciate its real value. And it speaks for itself. Don't overlook it. Don't let the old hokum of "costume plays" bother you. Get it. Book it. Because "Kismet" is there.

In its present form the production can stand some cutting to advantage. Yet if you run it as it comes, while a little long, it will be well worth while.

If You Overlook This Kick Yourself
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You've a wealth of material to work with. First is the title which in itself is almost enough when coupled with the name of Otis Skinner, doubtless one of the greatest actors of the present day, and whose triumph in the stage play was notable. It is one of the biggest pieces of stage property ever transposed to the screen. In addition you can go the limit telling them that this is one of the most stupendous productions ever made. You can't over emphasize this. Tell them they're going to live for a day in ancient Badgad, and you'll be telling them the truth. Tell them they're going to see one of the biggest pictures of the year. You can use your superlatives right to the limit. For once a picture justifies it.
"It is a wonderful thing—a mother. Other folks can love you but only your mother understands. She works for you, looks after you, loves you, forgives you anything you may do, understands you. And then the only bad thing she does to you is to die and leave you.

"ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN", says The Exhibitors Herald, "is a success. 'ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN' is human through and through. 'ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN' is a better picture than either 'The Heart of Humanity' or 'The Right to Happiness', because it is so true to life."

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 6,600 feet

Lionel Barrymore's latest production for Whitman Bennett, released by First National is an adaptation of W. B. Maxwell's novel which found its way to the stage several years ago and lasted for not more than a score of performances. In its screen form it would not last very long were it not for the splendid work of Mr. Barrymore, whose portrayal is so fine that it's a pity his efforts were expended on such poor story material.

The story has been given a careful and more than deservingly good production. The direction is good but realism has been put on a bit too thick in more instances than one, notably the murder scene, the bier of the murdered man and in numerous sensuous closeups of the man and his wife and later the young girl who comes into his life. Girls and young women aren't going to like this.

There is no obvious relief throughout the entire run of the picture to the heavy atmosphere of the main theme except perhaps if audiences are willing to accept the performance of the star as a complete compensation for the various unpleasant bits that they have to sit through. And these very acts are founded on such really shallow causes that the results certainly do not convince as being justifiable. A wife might yield to another man to save his life, but hardly just to have him retain a job.

William Dale (Mr. Barrymore), is employed on the estate of Lord Barradine, in London. Mavis is an upper servant in the same house. After a rather prolonged romance the two are married and through the influence of Lord Barradine, Dale is made Postmaster of the Rodchurch district. In the performance of his duties as Postmaster, Dale gives vent to his extreme temper and in one instance throws a soldier out of the store.

For this act he is brought before his superiors and threatened with being removed from office. Mavis, realizing the hopelessness of her husband's case unless he is backed by some big man decides to appeal to Barradine who tells her to join him at a London hotel where she remains Saturday and Sunday. Through her sacrifice Dale is reinstated. Mavis joins her husband on Monday and his suspicion is aroused. He forces the truth from her and proceeds to Rodchurch where he kills Barradine and escapes without detection. He forgives his wife but even after the birth of his children several years later is haunted by his crime. When Norah, a young girl comes to live with them Dale conceives a passion for her. Ashamed of his life he sacrifices himself by rescuing children from a burning orphan asylum erected by Barradine in expiration of his licentious career.

Use Star's Name But Be Sure to Mention the Story Idea
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Probably a production of this sort will appeal to some members of your clientele. You might play up the author's name, also the fact that the star is given plenty of opportunity to register various emotions.
Recall to your audience his work in "The Copperhead" and "The Master Mind." You might mention the name of Doris Rankin and Mae McAvoy. Play up the title for exploitation purposes.

Promise them an unusual bit of acting and an unusually artistic production. Use the lines: "See what happened in 'The Devil's Garden.' Is position in life worth more than honor? See 'The Devil's Garden' for the answer." Or, "Can one big deed expiate a life of sin?" The production is strictly one for grown ups and you will do well to make this fact known if you show it.

INTERIORS Ordinary sets
DETAIL Too much where it isn't essential and not enough where it is necessary
CHARACTER OF STORY Historical review of persecution during Christian era
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION About 6,000 feet

"Fabiola," produced in Italy and presented in this country by Raphael Beretta, consists merely of incidents during the period of the Christian persecution in the Caeser regime. Outside of some frightfully gruesome depictions of the martyrs' deaths, the production barely convinces even from the standpoint of the historic angle.

The scenes have been poorly assembled and the production as a whole is so obviously episodic that the spectator is lost completely as far as making any connection between the various characters and their relations with each other. In the first place the names are so foreign as to confuse an American audience and the costumes all so much alike, that the picture is half over before they can be distinguished.

It is quite apparent that the purpose of the production is religious propaganda with the perseverance of the Christians as its moral, but even as such, the basis of its foundation is not plausible enough to gather any serious thought from those not familiar with the historic facts which it pretends to portray.

The direction is very poor for the most part. During the scenes showing the deaths of the various martyrs there were ample opportunities for splendid emotional work but the players were allowed to walk through even these highly dramatic moments in almost unconscious fashion. There is little or no variation to the scenes, the same sets and exteriors, shot from the same angle each time, are used again and again until it becomes boresome.

Detail throughout has been almost entirely neglected or misjudged, for where it is necessary it is forgotten and where it is not essential they lay it on thick. For instance, Cecilia, a blind girl, a martyr for her faith, is stoned to death and her body thrown in the river. At least three close-ups show the body in its bloody state, floating down stream. Another, a man, is made a target for arrows followed by more gruesome close-ups and a third shows Agnes, the virgin, prepared for her resting place in the catacombs.

The very small majority of good effects in "Fabiola" does not seem worth the effort of even re-editing and retitling the production which in its present state bears titles that read like a continuity in the rough. Its purpose as religious propaganda, despite the fact that it may be historically correct, is doubtful.

May Go for Religious Purposes But Not Otherwise

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In its present form the production certainly doesn't come under the heading of entertainment and it would not be advisable to try to pass it off as such. Its only possible chance is for church or religious purposes in which case it may get by, and it's a question at that whether the uncanny realism of persecution will find favor even with those using it for propaganda purposes.

Should "Fabiola" by any chance be played in a regular theater audience it may be well to mention "Quo Vadis" and "Cabiria," which you may have played and both bearing upon the theme of "Fabiola." But refrain from promises in your connection.

CHARACTER OF STORY .... Sea captains daughter becomes goddess among cannibals, falls in love with and rescued by a white man
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,020 feet

Back in the old days there was a specific audience for wild blood and thunder stuff in the Westerns. Some of these people are still around thirsting for that type of entertainment. And there are a lot of houses who are piling up the dimes catering to these tastes. If you happen to be running one of these you can play this one with safety. But otherwise go slow.

Doraldina, famed as a Hawaiian dancer in New York, and probably well known elsewhere in this country, is featured. She hasn’t much to do except pose and, when accepted as the goddess of the sea by the cannibals, dances weird hula dances for their edification. But Doraldina is only an incidental part of this and you needn’t worry about that. For if your crowd likes the old time action stuff they’l take this.

As the daughter of the captain of a Hell ship in the Pacific, where the mutinous crew finally take command, Doraldina throws herself into the waves to escape a lecherous mate. She arrives at the cannibal island just at the time the chief is telling his people that the Goddess of the Sea will protect them. Incidently there is an interesting shot of a human being turned on the spit for the cannibals dinner if the censors don’t cut it out for you. Doraldina is worshipped by the cannibals, and eventually discovers Jay Morley, an adventurous son of a millionaire, who is yachting in the vicinity with his fiancée and a party, and who has come to the island to hunt. He loses his way in the jungle and Doraldina takes care of him, promising the cannibals a new god in five days so as to save his life. Jay eventually discovers he loves Doraldina and there are a couple of kisses of the wild passion type, after which he remembers his fiancée and rushes away, eventually planting a white flag which guides the yacht to the island. In the end he discovers he really loves Doraldina, returns to the island for her after being rescued and it all ends with the idea that she and Jay will marry.

The Crowd That Liked the Old Time Thrillers May Accept This
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There’s very little to this for you unless your crowd is of the kind that will accept this type of production.
And if you know they will stand for it go ahead.
Otherwise forget it. It won’t do in the neighborhood houses as a rule, although some of the sections where foreigners live may find this to their liking. Foreign born folk like the weird unusual stuff and this has a lot of it—a lot that is almost too weird. There isn’t any particular class to the picture and you haven’t much to talk about except the star. Better forget the rest of it.

If you think your people know the star, or if she has any reputation in your town you can use your own judgement as to how to play her up. But lay off promises.

CHARACTER OF STORY ........... Traffic in drugs.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 6,000 feet.

This latest Benjamin B. Hampton production written by Upton Sinclair contains the kind of action and general atmosphere of excitement that appeals to a pretty large majority of picture patrons despite the fact that its theme will not find favor among a more refined or genteel audience. Its oriental environment with its story of opium, white slave traffic and the "men higher up," who know about it but are well paid for their silence all find their way into "The Money-Changers."

The actual story material is not entirely new to the screen but it furnishes a new thrill and together with some very fine acting, the production measures up and even surpasses to a certain extent, previous production of this character. The main reason for this, outside of the fact that the production end of it has been well taken care of, is the fine acting by practically the entire cast. Edward Peil as Ling Choo Fang gives a very creditable performance throughout the picture and especially in one sort of "Broken Blossoms" touch in which he idolizes a young white girl who is a white slave victim. Robert McKim is a real villainous creature and Roy Stewart contributes a good bit as an enterprising young reporter.

There are some instances of a broken continuity in the opening reels in which the scenes shift so rapidly from one angle of the story to the other that for a time it is confusing inasmuch as there are few titles to link the scenes together. However, this is not serious once they get started, it is easy enough to follow.

Hugh Gordon, in love with Lucy Hegan, who runs a Neighborhood House for the poor, is head of a large drug and chemical corporation and also unknown to Lucy, a ringleader of a powerful drug and white slave traffic in operation in the Chinese quarter. Allan Martin is a young reporter for the Record, a paper which is trying to find the "men higher up," in the illicit sale of drugs known to be going on. Allan's job is to find these men.

Allan meets Lucy Hegan and despite her engagement to Gordon, becomes interested in her and her welfare work. Later in the Palace of Celestial Joys, a Chinese restaurant and the headquarters of Gordon's illicit business, Allan meets Mary Holmes who lives with Gordon in an apartment in the rear of the restaurant. The reporter gets the girl to confess just what is going on and with this information and the aid of Munk Mullen, a reformed gangster and former tool of Gordon, the latter is caught "with the goods" and Allan goes back to Lucy.

Be Sure to Tell the Nature of the Story

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Money Changers" will find its biggest appeal in theaters other than first class but there are enough of these to find sufficient bookings for this production. Its white slave and drug theme will keep it out of houses catering to light and entertaining screen plays. And the rather heavy dose of Chinese atmosphere with its opium dens and white slave victims would not even be overlooked for the good acting contained in the piece.

As far as the actual production is concerned you can promise them plenty of thrills and a good climax. Tell them about the hatchet man whose heart softens for the unfortunate white girl. Use the names of McKim and Stewart if you want to mention some of the players. They are probably the best known to your audience.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have had much better vehicles than this for registering their dual efforts along comedy lines even since they have entered the feature comedy field. "Fixed by George" lacks real comedy situations upon which to base all the purpose of the complications which make up this feature. Things happen along without any good reason and the results aren't nearly as humorous as they might have been made had they been made to appear less obvious.

Once George steps into the ring in an attempt to straighten out the matrimonial affairs of his friend Dr. Poole, and his wife, the audience knows just what complications are going to follow and there are none of them very new. There is a touch of the "bedroom farce" idea about it with the various characters concerned flying about with the scene shifting from one room to the other in helter-skelter fashion.

The piece has not the strength of a feature and this comedy pair had better secure stronger material for their features, such as they had in "La La Lucille," if they want to continue in comedies of feature length. There are several things which are never explained and you are expected to take a lot for granted if you consider some of the events which transpire.

Dr. Poole's wife is jealous of one of her husband's patient's, Angelica Starr. George Dare's wife has left him in a huff because he refused to visit some of her relations, so to George Mrs. Poole tells her story and together they plan to get at the bottom of things. George invites the Doctor to a party at his aunt's country home, asking him to bring along a lady friend. The Doctor receives the invitation while making a visit to Angelica who insists that he take her.

It so happens that Angelica's brother is in love with a manicurist whom his father refuses to allow him to marry. In some way not explained to the audience the manicurist is aware of George's would-be party and she is at the home of the aunt (who is out of town) when George and Mrs. Poole get there to await the arrival of the Doctor and his patient.

Mrs. Poole and George, the Doctor and Angelica, and the manicurist are trying to explain things to each other when George's wife arrives on the scene and there follows some more explanations and then to finish up the mix-up, Angelica's father and her brother come in and after considerable chasing and fighting in which the "fixer" gets the worst of it, matters are straightened out agreeably to all concerned.

Use the Stars' Names, But Lay Low on the Story End of It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If this comedy pair have a good following among your patrons they will be satisfied with their work in "Fixed by George" even if the story itself won't send them into hysterics. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have certainly provided much more fun in many of their last productions than they have in this. But the story is not there in the first place so the making of a comedy out of it was more than a task.

For exploitation purposes use the lines: "Did you ever know a 'but-in-ski' If you're an enterprising young physician be sure you don't have one for a friend. See 'Fixed by George' and you'll know why."

CHARACTER OF STORY.... Man disowns his new born child because it is a girl instead of a boy

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 3,500 feet

"The Unfortunate Sex" featuring George Larkin and Frances Edmonde doesn’t contain any outstanding features as regards production of presentation, but generally speaking, contains good action and enough punch to get it over quite well as a state rights feature.

The story is not a particularly convincing or impressive one but dealing as it does for the most part with the underworld will find a place in a good many houses throughout the country, particularly those catering to the class that prefer thrills and action to artistry and technique.

George Larkin does some good fighting and Frances Edmonde is pleasing as a little girl of the Ghetto and later as a loung lady just out of school. The climax is worked up to in good fashion and quite a little excitement is furnished in a chase by the police after an offender. Has a typical audience ending with everything turning out happily for everybody.

Harrington, a prominent attorney, bribes his butler to take his infant child away because a daughter is born instead of a son. But Harrington’s family physician suspects that the father will get rid of the child because of his disappointment and after rescuing the baby from the butler, some thieves take the child from the doctor and so it finds a home with one of the crooks who is really straight at heart.

The little girl grows up and becomes a “newy.” One of Peggy’s customers is an attorney employed by Harrington. George Larkin as the young lawyer, is keenly interested in the little girl and saves her from a policeman when she aids one of her fellow “newsies” to get away from him.

Peggy offers to tell the police where they can find “Spike Kelley,” a notorious character, and one of her foster parent’s gang. The night of the raid in which “Spike” is to be captured, Peggy goes to the dive to get her father out in time but instead the crooks take her with them on a “job” but she escapes and eventually wins the reward for the crook’s capture. Eventually, Harrington learns that Peggy is his daughter and the hero affects a reconciliation between Harrington and his wife.

Work with the Title and Use Larkin’s Name

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a good state rights offering that you can play safely enough if you deal with this market for the pictures you show. The story and production itself won’t bear exaggerated promises but you can rely on plenty of action, the kind that satisfies those who prefer this kind of entertainment.

Play up the name of George Larkin. His name will recall his various daredevil stunts which brought him into the limelight. Also mention Miss Edmonde and her part as the “news girl.” The title may mislead inasmuch as it may be taken to impart a sex story, but lines such as the following will put them on the right track: “See what happened to the child who was born a girl when the father wished a boy.”
He was two men in one; to the world of high society and big business he was a shining light; to Chinatown and the underworld he was a daring, unscrupulous, remorseless leader of the less daring and less powerful but no less unscrupulous grafters and crooks.

He had two sweethearts, one in the "400" and the other in Chinatown. Neither knew of the other, and he saw no chance that they would ever meet.

But the devious windings of his trail as a Chinatown despot crossed his path as a captain of finance and a leader in society.

And then—!

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 5,800 feet

In May Allison's latest feature for Metro, she plays the part of a young and wealthy girl who has satis-
{}
{}
{}sified her own desires since infancy. The picture con-
{}
{}
{}sists almost entirely of episodes in this young girl's
{}
{}life, showing her carrying out her own designs with-
{}
{}out much obvious hindrance from the direction of her {}parents. The star gives a vivacious and spirited perfor-
{}
{}mance as the willful young lady and manages de-
{}
{}spite the lack of a well connected story and the need {}of considerable more real action, by her work, to hold the interest most of the time.

The production could be cut quite extensively and to advantage because there is not enough subject matter to carry it much over four reels and certainly not over five.

"Are All Men Alike" is an adaptation of Arthur Stringer's story "The Waffle Iron," which ran in Mc-Clure's Magazine and a line in the production quoted from the author indicates that he believes life is like a waffle iron which presses down on everybody, making them all alike, like waffles. The connection isn't clear but nevertheless is cleverly used at intervals during the run of the production showing the star in a huge waffle iron and according to the run of the story at the moment, it is either opening to let her out, or closing in upon her.

As a child Theodora Hayden (Miss Allison) learned to say "I will," and despite her nurse's objections, insisted upon going swimming in the garden pool.
Later at the age of fourteen she names herself "Teddy"
and does things in general pretty much as she herself wished them to be. She shows a keen distaste for kisses and for this reason has many arguments with Gerry West, a childhood sweetheart.

Gerry humors Teddy to the extent of taking her to a Greenwich Village cafe. Teddy becomes a willing victim and soon establishes herself permanently in the Village where the "freedom" of everything appeals to her strongly. Teddy meets her first obstacle in Ulfan, an artist, who dares to make love to her. Her second trouble comes when Ruth, a villager, sues her for alienation of her prizefighter sweetheart's affections. Then the prizefighter appropriates Teddy's car and bumps into a Ford and Teddy is sued again.

She finally appeals to Gerry to get her out of her difficulty which he does and claims Teddy as his reward. In the cast are John Elliott, Winifred Greenwood, Emanuel Turner, Ruth Stonehouse and Lester Cuneo.

Use May Allison's Name and Link Up Titles with Catchlines

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

While not a strong feature attraction, this latest May Allison production may find favor with audiences who prefer light, farcical pieces for their entertainment and if the star is popular you should not have trouble in putting it over. There are also some comedy bits and a few titles that get laughs.

For those who read and may want to see the picture version of stories they have read mention the author and the publication of the story in McClure's

Wanda Hawley's latest starring vehicle for Realart is an adaptation of Paul Lester's novel "Beverly's Balance." The piece is not strong in its subject matter and the production itself slumps noticeably in spots but picks up again and all told gathers enough interest and holds it well enough for immediate satisfaction. That is, it's not one of those pictures that leave a lasting impression but will be agreeably received for immediate "consumption."

There are comedy moments that register well, among them the instant where the much sought after actress asks her various admirers to meet her at a designated spot and a large group of them gather but instead of the fair lady appearing on the scene, her Indian maid-servant "keeps the date" by returning to the beaux, their floweral offerings.

Sylvia (Miss Hawley) and her aunt are the last of the line of famous descendents and when they are near the end of their wealth Sylvia decides to try her luck in San Francisco, where she tries to make her living. In the same city is Harrison Ford, her sweetheart who had left her sometime previous, also to make his way in the big city, before offering her his heart.

Also in San Francisco are Jack Horner and his wife who are in love with each other but despite his wealth his business (a string of "hash houses" inherited from his father), retards Mrs. Horner's social climbing so the couple amiably proceed to arrange a divorce. It so happens that Sylvia gives up her position in the chorus of a new show and accidentally meets Ford but thinking he has forgotten her she will have nothing to do with him.

She later finds an excuse to go to his office where she meets Mr. Horner, there seeking Ford's legal services (incidentally Horner is the young attorney's first client). Sylvia agrees to act as a co-respondent in the Horner divorce suit, the whole affair to be a very harmless arrangement. However, the lawyer refuses to allow Sylvia to go through with it and eventually there is a reunion between Horner and his wife, Sylvia and her lover.

This will make a suitable offering for passing entertainment especially in a house where unusual exploitation and advertising stunts are not necessary to get your theater filled. If you are obliged to announce your coming attractions with a line as to what the story is about you can say: "What furnishes ‘Food for Scandal’? In this case it’s a young girl posing as a co-respondent because she needed funds."

Play up the name of the star if you expect to show her future productions as a Realart player. Unless you cater to a transient crowd it might be well to get them interested in her and thus insure patronage when you announce her name the next time. Louise Lovely makes her first appearance as a star under the Fox banner in "The Little Grey Mouse," a story based on the eternal triangle theme which in spite of the fact that it isn't so very different from the hundred and one similar stories which have preceded it, manages to satisfy on its own merits. The production has been satisfactorily directed and there are some effective photographic bits that help it along, notably some hall room scenes that have been attractively staged.

Detail for the most part is well taken care of. There are one or two bits of business that might well have been gotten around in a less implausible manner. For instance, when the heroine loses her husband's love and later wins fame by her success as a story writer, it is natural to expect that she will accept the man who had loved her before her marriage, but instead of allowing this to follow in the natural course of events, it is brought about by the title-writer putting the suggestion as coming from a child.

The best acting is done by the star as the neglected wife and Rosemary Theby as a vamp. The male members of the cast are not as convincing in their portrayals as they might be. Philo McCullough plays the husband with Sam DeGrasse not over effective in the small part of the econd husband.

John Cumberland and Stephen Gray are partners in a law firm. Both are in love with Beverly Arnold, employed in the law office. She eventually marries Gray, who has won some fame as a short story writer. It is really Beverly who does the actual story-writing, but Gray takes the credit for it and they are not married very long before his success gets the better of him and his wife becomes secondary in his life's routine.

Gray interests himself in Hedda Kossiter, a sculptress, who calls Beverly "a little grey mouse" when she balks at drinking a cocktail and because of her demure personality. Beverly finally realizes that her husband is completely infatuated with Hedda, so she goes to the sculptress' apartment and begs her to give up her husband. The latter comes in during the interview and when Hedda demands that he choose between them, Beverly goes back to her home alone.

Beverly succeeds in overcoming the incident and later becomes well known as a writer under an assumed name. Accompanied by Cumberland she is seen by her former husband and, according to a title, "man-like, wanting what he can't have," he begs Beverly to take him back, but she informs him she is to marry Cumberland.

Announce Miss Lovely as the Latest Fox Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Little Grey Mouse" will give satisfaction as a good program attraction even though it is not new in theme. It has been given an adequate production and there are some good effects presented in the reception scenes. The title is a catchy one and can be used attractively with catchlines such as "'The Little Grey Mouse' was not the kind to be afraid of. On the contrary, she was the timid one."

Give the star most of the prominence in connection with the production and announce her as the latest Fox star. You might recall her work in several of the William Farnum pictures, among them "The Lone Star Ranger," "Wings of the Morning," "The Orphan," "The Joyous Troublemaker" and others.
This is the story of a man and three women: The mother who bore him, the woman God made for him, and the creature who conquered his soul.

"The Fatal Hour" is based on the London stage melodrama by Cecil Raleigh. The production fits into the average class or type of picture that satisfies for a one time showing. There are no really big moments to talk about except perhaps the stealing of the crown jewels from the tower and even this bit is not realistic enough to cause a sensation. The cast does not include any very well known screen personages unless Wilfred Lytell has already become popular. And it may be that Thomas W. Ross who plays a sort of villainous role may be known for his comedy work in the legitimate.

Will Satisfy for One Time Showing—Don’t Make Promises

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can play this on a regular one day schedule and get by with it. There is nothing particularly notable to talk about in the production or story except that you can announce it as an English melodrama and stage play written by Cecil Raleigh, if this will mean anything to your folks. You might say something about the theft of the crown jewels which you can link up with catchlines.

Wilfred Lytell may be known well enough to mention his name in the cast, otherwise there are probably no names that will be familiar to screen patrons. From press sheets furnished by the producer you will be able to use various ideas for exploitation purposes if necessary.
TENSENESS, heart appeal, thrills that bring you to the edge of your seat, laughs that come quick and clear as a thunderbolt from a blue sky are yours in "The One Best Pet."

It embraces more novelties than any two-reel picture you have ever shown; it is different from every Chester Comedy that has gone before, yet it embraces all the strong points that have amazed exhibitors everywhere with the audience-pulling power of these pictures.

It is more than a worthy successor to “Four Times Foiled,” “An Overall Hero,” “The Big Show,” and “A Tray Full of Trouble.”

(And, by-the-way, have you shown all of these?)

Chester Comedies are pictures without an apology—they are necessities for every theatre that claims to offer the best.

Some Short Reels

"One Week"—Metro

Laughs start coming at the very beginning of this Buster Keaton two-reeler and the pace is maintained until the very finish. Bits of slapstick comedy, many of them original and all of them giving value, are offered with astonishing rapidity and the offering must be classed as a certain hit. A portable house is the subject of most of the humor and the tricks done by the characters with the different parts all register in great style. There is a spicy touch in one scene, but that is inoffensive and perfectly clean. As to the business resulting from the manner in which the dwelling is manipulated, that is entirely out of the ordinary and certain to amuse even the most confirmed pessimist. The press agent who will say that this contains a laugh a foot will be coming close to the truth.

"A Doity Deed"—Goldwyn

Novelty, the greatest essential in any animated cartoon is lacking to a large extent in this Happy Hooligan reel. Some of the incidental business is fairly clever, but the theme and most of the situations if they may be called that, are hardly out of the ordinary. It all concerns Happy's efforts to bring home a bride in order that he may claim his father's wealth. After several futile efforts, he secures the consent of a widow who is trailed continually by several youngsters. Gains his brother, meanwhile brings home a wax model and secures the desired riches, beating Happy by some time. W. C. Nolan is credited with the direction.

"Nassau"—Ford—Goldwyn

Bimini, a tropical island, is where the City of Nassau is located. This Ford reel consists of scenes of that town and while the material is pleasing to the eye, it lacks the natural beauty to make it a scenic of merit and is not of sufficient interest to equal as a travel offering of value. The technical end of it, as far as photography and camera work are concerned, has been taken care of in fine fashion, but good tinting would have been of considerable help to some of the water stuff. As a whole it is not quite up to the usual Ford standard.

"The SImp"—Mermaid—Educational

Some really funny comedy business is of considerable value to this issue of the Mermaid series which generally holds up in reasonably good style. There are several novel gags included and the action throughout is fast. The manner in which Lloyd Hamilton pours water out of his shoe continually is the first big laugh, and thereafter they keep coming as a satisfactory rate. The scene in which the cat enters the "clock" is of merit and adds a touch that will score anywhere. Another bit that will provoke mirth is that in which the chief starts to appropriate some of the funds collected at the gospel meeting and by cassing "Ham" to remain unconscious, moves his hands in and out of the box in such a manner as to give the impression that the latter is responsible for what happens. There is considerable splashing and spilling of water.

"Twin Crooks"—Universal

From Buckingham, who is responsible for this two-reeler, has turned out a very satisfactory slapstick production, which is a comedy in the full sense of the word. Many will say that there can be nothing new in pictures of this sort, but novel twists can be given some of the old stuff so as to provoke mirth. There is one scene, for example, in which Charles Doresy swings a hammer over a post he is attempting to drive into the ground. Bud Jamieson stands on one side conversing with a young lady and absent-mindedly place his hand, elbow and then his hat on the post, but removes each of these as the hammer is about to descend. True, the idea has been used before in different form and is in fact employed in another part of this, but no one will deny that that section will make any audience laugh. Some of the chase and trailing scenes, nicely also been handled, is National's way, stirrily and looking very much alike causing mirth. The theme used through most of it is not new, but has been handled in splendid fashion, with some scenes on the top of the building with the street visible below supplying thrills.

"Her Secret Still"—Universal

Very little of the footage in this single reeler is really funny, both the plot and the manner in which it has been developed being of ordinary quality. Dorothy Walbert is the principal character and while she works earnestly, the material is not of the sort that can be expected to get over before fans who are at all discriminating. At the finish they have the leading comedienne wake up, explaining that the preceding stuff was a dream.

"Flap Jack"—Mutt and Jeff—Fox

For the benefit of their "customers" Mutt and Jeff are showing what they can do in the way of making pan cakes. This latest release is up to the average, if not a little better than the usual Mutt and Jeff release. The "long and the short of it" are the proprietors of a flap-jack factory and the reel consists of sketches showing the actual work of the "industry." Jeff rides a bicycle around the mixing bowl while Mutt sits on behind and dips a long spoon into the batter and they mix it as they ride. A steam roller is used to roll out the batter and the funniest bit is where Jeff conducts an orchestra with the cakes on the griddle playing the parts of musicians.

"Screen Snapshots," No. 10—C. B. C.

Issue number 10 of the Screen Snapshots series hits about the same average maintained thus far in the set. Like the others, it has several bits of footage devoted to prominent film personages and some material showing the details about part of the work. This time, they have some stuff concerning the erection of some of the mammoth sets and to wind it up, a scene in which a group of the Mack Sennett bathing girls appear. Ben Turpin inserts himself into the latter section while among the other important people are J. Warren Kerrigan, Mabel Normand, Jack Hoxie, Anne Little, Creighton Hale and Mary Hay. There is also a portion showing Ben Wilson securing some rain effects for a serial. Most of the fans will probably find this interesting enough. Something should be done to give these offerings more of the element of novelty.

"Screen Snapshots," No. 11—C. B. C.

Ruth Clifford and Jack Sherrill, who are co-starring in a serial now on the market, have the privilege of opening this issue of Screen Snapshots. The latter, who is also a director, is seen issuing the orders and then Dorothy Phillips, in the costume of a Hawaiian hula-hula dancer, slips into the limelight. How thrillers are filmed is dealt with in another portion, showing how a whole hillside is blasted and an automobile is tossed off a cliff to make the fanatics jump. Curly Stecker, animal trainer, is seen playing about with Joe Martin, Universal's intelligent orang outang, this portion being the most interesting in the production. Governor Cox, Democratic nominee, is seen meeting several of First National's stars and directors, Marshall Neilan, King Vidor, Katherine MacDonald, Bebe Love, Wesley Barry all stepping forward to grasp Cox's much-shaken hand. Towards the finish they josh the spectator, announcing that Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford are to be shown awaiting a coming baby. It is a "Baby Blimp" that they are expecting, and while the pun is rather far-fetched, it kids the fans cleverly.
"Hold Me Tight"—Fox-Sunshine

Until the climactic riot is reached, there is little in the way of the unusual in this Sunshine two-reeler. After having the characters execute several knockabout stunts which hold up in only fair style, they inject a cyclone which sweeps roofs of houses, automobiles, people and everything into the air. Here the mastery of the organization is again shown, for the effects are genuine comedy thrills and really save the air. The scene of the cyclone carrying along the home of the parson and two of the characters having the matrimonial knot tied is laughable and others also register well. Of course, some of this stuff has been seen in former issues of the series, but it is quite likely to get over again.

"Mules and Gob Talk"—Chester-Educational

Another animal production and one of the series of Chester Scenics. It is a well photographed and finely titled offering with goats, elk, deer, bisons, marmot and other quadrupeds. To close it, there is a unique shot of one of the deer wiggling its ears in a manner that will evoke "ahs." All of it has been presented in good style and the result on most spectators is practically certain to be the desired one. Generally, up to the mark.

"As Fancy Paints"—Post-Paramount

Comprised of a number of shots of rare natural beauty, this single reeler takes its place with the better scenes now on the market. From beginning to end, it is replete with bits of merit. Of course, the material offered has all been seen in other scenic productions, but they are as effective as ever, for they are of the type that never grow old, and are presented in fine fashion. There is one shot of the moonlight on the water that is splendid and several others are also highly commendable. Undoubtedly, this will impress almost any audience favorably and can be depended upon to hold its own on any bill.

"The Art of Diving"—Cimal-Educational

Annette Kellerman executes a number of dives for this single reeler, which shows her doing them both in actual and slow motion. The name of the principal will arouse interest and the dives are shown in fine fashion but the lighting is not always productive of effective results. Of course, Miss Kellerman does her work with her customary grace and beyond doubt devotees of water sport will find this both interesting and entertaining.

"Pipe the Penguin"—Chester-Educational

One of the best Chester reels turned out in a long time, for it combines attractive scenic bits with corking shots of the peculiar birds. The latter are shown on land and water—at close range and from a distance with splendid results. William Henry Wright furnished the titles, while Richard Holt photographed the piece which should prove popular if for no other reason than that birds and animals are invariably received with favor. And when they are presented well, as they are in this case, they more than hold interest. Several meritorious shots of land and water are offered at the beginning.

Pathe Review, No. 76

Some pretty colored views of the Rocky Mountains open this new Review followed by Ditmar's animal pictures, this time giving an intimate glimpse into the winter life of the hare. Some pretty shots of landscape gardening are presented in the way of a fairy story. "Oyster Hunting on Delaware Bay" shows how oysters are gathered and prepared for market. The "Dance of Burma" is presented by Grace Emerson as a conclusion to the reel.

"Mamma's Boy"—Vanity Fair Maids Comedy—Pathe

This one reel comedy is a pleasing short subject of its kind and while not riotously funny, affords sufficient amusement for its very short length. "Mamma's Boy" is sent to the country to rest but about a dozen pretty maids keep him pretty much on the jump until he turns cave-man nd trains them to wait on him.

"Behind the Scenes of a Circus"—Capitol-Mayer Travelaugh

Probably the best of the Mayer "Travelaugh" is this reel which as the title points out, makes use of circus life as a source of humor. As usual, it is comprised of cartoons by Mayer and photographed material cleverly faded. All of the characters seen in and about the circus are utilized in the fun-making and the result is very satisfactory. The clown, cowboy, bare-back rider and practically every other performer usually identified with the tent show comes in for his or her share of the limelight. Most of it is funny and the atmosphere splendid.

"The Cost of Carelessness"—Prizma

Forest-fire scenes make up this Prizma offering which includes several interesting and realistic bits. The coloring is quite up to the mark and the subject somewhat different from most of those that have come before. It deals with the damage that careless campers occasionally cause, and the claim made on the program of a Broadway house last week, to the effect that it showed in vivid detail the ravaging destruction a blaze of that sort could cause, is justified.

"A Fishy Story"—Universal

While this Century two reeler, released by Universal, possesses a few bits of meritorious comedy business towards the beginning, it takes a considerable slump after running for about two thirds of a reel. All of the characters take part in much splashing and a number of girls in the usual form showing uniforms face the spectator. A bit of a plot has been employed but that is practically smothered under by the mass of hokum. The spectacle of the cross-eyed butler having dust blown out of his ear, the scene where the count passes presents intended for the girl to the typical village police chief, the casting out of the anchor which starts to float, the life preserver portion and perhaps one or two others can be depended upon to provoke mirth. Otherwise, however, there is little that is really humorous and this does not reach the high standard that has been maintained in many of the recent releases of the series.

The smart Alecks in this business take up a lot of room. They occupy considerable space, which could be used to better advantage. And they have a definite fixed opinion on every subject involved in the industry.

They'll tell you for instance, that there isn't any room for production. That the big companies have gobbled up everything. That it's no use to tempt fate with big spectacular stuff. That it won't go. That you can't make money with comedies. Because the market is overloaded. That costume plays are dead issues. In the latter class they include everything that isn't the regulation Hero-in-a-Guttenberg-front and Sherio that doesn't wear a Lucile kimono that cost $187.50.

Some of these smart birds were perching in the Astor lobby a few nights ago. After the initial showing of "Kismet." They knew all about it. Wonderful picture. Yes. Great show. Yes. But—and here they started to pull their usual know-it-all these "here costume plays—well, you know what they are" stuff.

the know-it-all’s faded into the throng that were praising the Robertson-Cole production.

How Do They Get That Way?
He is a pretty good director. Name? What’s the difference. His middle name is Legion. He was working along at about $650 a week. Then he was given a mighty big story. It worked out to be a big success. Result: he wants $2,500 a week. And 10 per cent of the gross of his next superspecial. All of which caused a well known star to ask caustically: “How do they get that way?”

This Overproduction Problem
Months ago the holler started—fewer and better pictures. Just who started that ball a rolling has been forgotten. It makes no difference anyway. The first thing you know everybody was talking about fewer and better pictures. And for this season all of us were promised a lot up on production. Has it happened? Not that you can notice.

Overproduction seems to be the fact rather than those fewer pictures. Never mind about their being better. Maybe some of them are. But still there’s a lot of punk pictures being shown.

The boys who like to figure and mess up the tablecloths over at Mrs. Astor’s say (after sending 14 pieces of table linen to the laundry), that they see nearly 600 feature productions in sight for the 52 weeks starting Sept. 1. Just how they can be absorbed in the coming year is a problem. The men who figure close say it can’t be done.

Co-Operation
Allan Dwan wants co-operation. Says so anyway. Says the directors out in Hollywood are lonesome and need all the aid they can get not only as to story material, but in every other way.

Yes, yes. Sounds nice and pretty.
But ask a lot of producers. Ask a lot of stars. Ask a lot of men who have been on the payrolls. And see how many of these directors will even brook opposition. Much less thank you for suggestions.

Dwan was once a football player. He likes to scrap. Maybe that’s why he wants co-operation.

Later Day Miracle Men
Last year George Loane Tucker produced “The Miracle Man.” It has grossed a lot of money. Over a million paid and played. Maybe more. Of course it’s just a coincidence. No one would think of saying what happened had anything on it. But isn’t it funny? Somewhat strange? Yes? But there have been probably half a dozen that followed. All on the same general theme of faith and miracles. DeMille’s “Something to Think About,” Cabanne’s “The Stealers,” Tourneur’s “The Great Redeemer,” Otto’s “The Cheater”—for Metro and others.

Buys Many Films
With the purchase of five features, 12 two-reel comedies and a serial, the Commonwealth Film Corp., Sam Zim-Av president, finalized its removal from the Mecca Bldg. to 729-7th Ave.

The serial is “The Invisible Ray,” starring Jack Sherill and Ruth Clifford, produced by Frohman Amusements. The pictures are for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

Inez Faralla, sister of Dario L. Faralla, comptroller of Realart, who was formerly secretary to J. A. Derham, Canadian Representative for the Famous Players, has opened a public stenographer’s office at 489 7th Ave. and will aid in motion picture requirements.

Mr. Lasky's "Perfect Picture" Plan Commented On at Kuta Weisman Dinner—How It Will Work Out

L. Lasky's plan which calls for the co-ordination of the entire forces of Famous Players-Lasky, directors, authors, playwrights, new men, and leading women, into a huge stock company for the production of big special pictures, as briefly in yesterday's issue, was favorably commented upon at Kuta Weisman's enthralling number of exchange managers, which was lighted by the Society of American Dramatists and Composers. The details of the new plan were ex- "The Los Angeles' Quality Plan"—As Theodore DeMille and others favorably note "the best of all stars, have been booked only for L. New Film Contract

Playwrights' and Producers' Compact Now Effective

The playwrights' standard contract, recently adopted by the Producers' Managers' Association and the Dramatists' Guild of the Authors' League, became effective yesterday. The contract, which was formally ratified by the playwrights last week, has particular reference to motion picture rights, and provides that a producer must give 75 performances of a play, or present it for three weeks in New York or Chicago, before he acquires an interest in the film rights. Disputes will be submitted to an arbitration board consisting of two managers, two playwrights and a third member to be picked by these four. James Forbes and Augustus Thomas have been selected as the playwrights' members of the board, with Montague Glass and President of the Guild as delegates.

Hoffman Out

Leaves Famous Players—Future Plans Undecided, but Will Rest First

Milton Hoffman, who returned from Europe on Saturday, yesterday tendered his resignation at Famous Players. Hoffman states that he has had no conflict with Famous officials, but that he has been working hard this past year and simply wants to rest. He is going to the coast and will not be active until the first of January. His future plans are undecided. When asked as to the status of his five-year contract with Famous Players he said:

"Yes, it is true they had a contract, but they have agreed to waive it."

All of the Universal home office staff, a number of exchange managers from neighboring cities, a brass band, and five motor buses marked the return of Carl Laemmle to New York on Saturday from Europe.

Says American Pictures of Quality Need Have No Fear of Securing Bookings in England

Hiram Abrams of United Artists returned to New York on the Aquitania on Saturday. He stated that American pictures of quality need have no fear of securing bookings in England despite the block booking system in vogue there. He stated that English exhibitors were doing a tremendous business and that American pictures were being shown were from one to three years old.

Dennis O'Brien is expected back on one plane of the boats arriving late this week. He remained over in London to complete details of the United Artists contract for foreign distribution.

Carlton Back

Carlton has also returned to New York from London. He says English film conditions are very unsatisfactory. Carlton has no plans for picture making abroad.

Straw Votes

A straw vote taken at the Universal offices yesterday revealed the following:

For President: Harding, 146; Cox, 24; Debs, 17; all others trifling.

For Governor of New York State:

Smith, 109; Miller, 46; all others trifling.

For United States Senator—Wadsworth, 128; Walker, 45; all others trifling.

It is interesting to note the comparative votes between Harding and Smith.

Sezicki Enterprises—Harding, 26; Cox, 4; Smith, 27; Miller, 2; Malone, 1.

Metro, New York Exchange—Majority vote for Harding and Smith; no figures given.

Pathe—Cox, 13; Harding, 4; Debs, 2.

Famous Players' Publicity Dept.—Harding, 10; Cox, 9; WID'S DAILY—Harding 18; Cox, 12; Debs, 1; Smith, 24; Miller, 4.

Regarding "The Eternal Mother"

"The Eternal Mother," a Florence Reed picture formerly owned by United Picture Theaters, was never distributed by that organization, as noted in last Saturday's issue, although United had it on its release schedule. Pioneer has taken over the picture and wishes it known that the picture has never been exhibited before.

HARRIET AND THE PIPER

"Anita Stewart's beauty and cleverness have never been brought into play to better advantage than in 'Harriet and the Piper,' and her supporting cast has never been better either. The acting is supremely sincere and convincing. The story has been nicely woven together in such a fashion that a really cumulative effect leading to climax is gained."—Los Angeles Daily Times.

New Contracts between Producers and Actors Being Drawn—Talk of "Closed Shop"— "Grafting Agents" Hit

There was a lot of comment among producers and their representatives yesterday when they heard for what was apparently the first time that the Equity Assn., was preparing new contract, and that those producers, who didn't like it, might be forced to accept it.

The new contract which is expected to be in readiness in the next few days calls for a change of existing working conditions between actors and the producers of pictures. During a discussion of the proposed new contract at the Astor Sunday John Emerson, president of the Equity, said that one of the most serious grievances was double work. If a picture would ordinarily take four weeks to produce, some directors worked the actors and actresses day and night to finish it in two weeks, he declared.

"This sort of thing must be remedied," he declared, "and I believe I'll have very little trouble getting a head of the motion picture industry to sign the contract which could in itself make the men and women work only a certain number of hours in the week.

Another evil with which cameramen had to contend, said Mr. Emerson, was the "grafting agents" who charge employment for them. The number of these private agencies will have to stop, Mr. Emerson said, the first step taken by Equity to get them out of business was the re-

Loew Wins
His Stillman Theater in Cleveland Will Show First Nat'l Product First Run

(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Cleveland—Judge David H. Thomas has handed down a decision bringing to a close the case of the Stillman Investment Co. against Associated First Nat'l Pictures of Ohio. He declared that the Loew-Stillman interests are entitled to an injunction to prevent exhibition in the Metropolitan, Strand or any other theater in the state of films for which the Stillman company held a contract for first run.

The defense contended that it was imperative that new contracts be entered into at higher prices, because Charlie Chaplin, Charles Ray and the Talmadge sisters refused to appear in films under contracts which had been signed, but the court found that Loew's contracts with the old First Nat'l company had not been broken and were therefore still in effect.

Mack Sennett Denies Having Broken Charles Baumann Contract

(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—New York newspapers printed news items recently, announcing the suit brought in that city by Charles Baumann, charging Sennett, which involved in the Federal courts to recover the sum of $122,790, which he alleges is due him on a contract by which Mack Sennett secured his services for $500 per week and 5% of the profits accruing to Sennett through the use of films shows. Baumann alleges that Sennett broke the contract after it had run but half of its term when he discharges Baumann last November, a position as eastern representative of the Sennett interests.

Sennett repudiates the imputation that he has violated any of his agreements and asserts that Baumann was released of his New York duties for cause, as will be proven, asserts Sennett in the trial of the case in court.
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibit—put his show over. Send along your story. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

The Brooklyn Strand orchestra. Also René, conductor. Managing Director Edward L. Hyman and scene experts collaborated this week in creating and arranging an overture, utilizing Rossini's "William Tell" as a foundation.

The theme of the musical number was told by a large changing scenic set, that of a pastoral valley, which was revealed in various stages of nature's workings. First there was a presentation of the sleeping countryside with attendant meditative music. The tranquil mood was then shifted with the coming of storm clouds, great billows overlooking the valley and aurora and the approaching deluge. The mechanical work was perfect, and the lighting, exquisite. Then followed the breaking of the storm, with the resounding thunder booms, the flashing of lightning and the rain avalanche. With the dying of the storm and the softening of the accompanying orchestral music, the music returned and the overtures a go to the calm and the evergreens are shown glittering with diamond studded rain drops.

Boston—Balloons carrying passes to the Park Theater, where "The Riddle: Woman" was the attraction, created a stir in downtown Boston last week. From a number of the tallest buildings in the Hub these balloons were liberated. It was originally intended to release a thousand of them, but the Boston Record, which sponsored the stunt, had to give up the idea because the Police Department informed the newspaper office of the conditions attending the release of the balloons. The Boston Record used the air in its campaign on behalf of its "Riddle: Woman," search for whom was begun. A month later, month of hunting for her by Bostonians who have been baffled in every move. The Record tied up its "stunt" with the exhibition of the production.

Omaha—A real live lion was used by Manager R. A. Ballantyne of the Moon to exploit "The Revenge of Tarzan. Although the Moon had no music, the pianist and musicians were not working, the picture did a wonderful eight-day business.

Manager Ballantyne also decorated the lobby of the Moon with plaster-of-paris lions made for use at the Al-Sar-Ben, Omaha's municipal fun center. The lobby of the theater looked like a bit of African forest during the showing of the picture.

Musicians Back in Omaha

(Opecial to WID'S DAILY)

Omaha—After going without work since Sept. 1 and making picture theaters go without music for the same length of time, the musicians of Omaha have agreed to submit their grievances to arbitration and return to work. Approximately 50 musicians in Omaha quit work when their annual contract expired and when the managers declined to grant them the raise in salary that they asked.

Under their old contract the musicians received approximately $35 a week. They asked $56 under the new agreement, but the managers agreed to pay only from $48 to $50. The musicians refused to work unless their request was granted.

A peculiar feature of the situation was that during the time the houses were without music, and the "silent drama" was silent, even if it wasn't always good drama, there was no noticeable decrease in attendance.

Frances Edridge has begun work on her first vehicle for Superior Pictures, Inc., a two-reel comedy by Walter Irving, entitled "The Little Liar."

Another Independent

(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—It is reported here that Alfred Harding Chaplin, who owns one picture company, is about to move his company to New York. B. Mayer, will form his own company, backed by eastern financiers. Chaplin in a newspaper interview said that he does not plan to make more pictures as Mildred Harris Chaplin, who is married to Mildred Harris, is now being completed on the coast.

Some time ago Al Kaufman stated that he was going to do a Broadway show for "Man, Woman and Marriage." The show will be held up pending the premiere of the new Ambassador theater in Los Angeles around Jan. 1.

Slated for Broadway

At least four special productions are scheduled for special runs on Broadway as soon as suitable theaters can be obtained for them. Considerable difficulties, however, are being experienced on that score. The pictures are "The Woman in His House," a Louis B. Mayer-directed National production with Mildred Harris Chaplin as star; "Once to Every Woman," Universal-Jewel, with Dorothy Phillips; "Passion," the U. F. A. German-made production starring Pola Negri and distributed in this country by First National, and last, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," which is said to be Metro's most ambitious undertaking and which is now being completed on the coast.

Even mother love fails of its accustomed power in "The Forbidden Thing," Allan Dwan's first Associated Producers' picture, with an all-star cast including James Kirkwood, Helen Jerome Eddy and Marcia Manon.

30 French Films

Madame Germaine Dulac, wife of Albert Dulac, the French producer, is in New York from Paris. Madame Dulac has been directing in France for some time.

A contract has been closed with the Falkner-Tyrol Prod. Inc. for the distribution in this country of the Dulac productions. Present plans call for the release of 30 of these productions. It has not been decided by Falkner-Tyrol how the pictures will be handled in this country.

Wanger Going Abroad

Jesse L. Lasky has appointed Walter F. Wanger general manager of production, with control over all the company's production units in the East. Los Angeles, London and India. Wanger will leave next month for a trip to Hollywood. In the spring he will go to London and then visit the new studio in India.

New Lynch Deals

Still Lining Up Theaters in South-east—More Transactions Pending

Atlanta—S. A. Lynch continues to extend his theater holdings in the South-east. It is understood a deal has been closed for all the theaters in Newnan, Ga., town of about 5,000 population, about 30 miles southwest of Atlanta, and that negotiations have been practically closed for Opelika, Ala., and La Grange, Ga., for the theater for "Man, Woman and Marriage," on County, about 40 miles below Newnan.

It is understood that Fitzgerald, Ga., will be the next town to be annexed and that a deal is under way to take over the American theater in Cordele, Ga., and the American in Douglas, Ga. The latter towns are in the southern part of the state and have populations of about 5,000 each.

Lynch Buys in Fort Smith, Ark.

Fort Smith, Ark.—Southern Enterprises, the Lynch subsidiary, has acquired a theater here. It is understood that the theater will be converted to a movie."
Coast Brevities

Hollywood—Nate Watt, directing "Peck's Bad Boy," has selected his cast. Jackie Coogan will be featured in the bill. An arrangement with Goldwyn brought Molly Malone for the big sister role. Wheeler Oak- man will work opposite Miss Malone. Williams V. Mong will play the role of a comical grocer while George Pierce will enact the part of old man Peck. Mrs. Griffith will portray the role of Ma Peck and A. J. Menjou has been selected as the heavy. Chas. Hatton is cast for the fat boy.

Ora Carewe has signed with Metro to enact the leading feminine role in the all-star production of "What Is the Matter With Marriage?"

Marcus Loew, chairman of Metro's board of directors, who has been at the company's studios in Hollywood for the past week, has left for San Francisco where he will spend several days conferring with Ackerman and Harris.

Rudolph Valentine, who will be seen in an important role in Metro's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," will play opposite Viola Dana in her new Metro starring vehicle. "Sororinna" is working title of this, an original story by Dora Byrne. Al, J. Kelly and Geo. Probert are to co-direct.

Director Robert Bradbury of the Cyrus J. William Co., producing Santichi Western features for Pathe, has returned with his troupe from location at Red Rock Canyon.

Walter H. Alkire, president of the Alkire Picture Corp., is in town for a few days on a flying visit from Texas and for a conference with the company's production manager, P. H. White, regarding the coming activities of the company on ranch locations near Dallas for a big western feature.

Two hundred people will accompany Eric Von Stroheim when he leaves Universal City for Monterey next week. He will be on location for about three weeks, filming the Monte Carlo set built on the rocky cliffs which form the coast line at that point, said to cost over $100,000 to construct.

Robert Brunton has returned to the Brunton studio after nearly a month's business in New York.

How They Work

The New York Times says editors—England has a Board of Film Censors and its members recently elaborated its work by pronouncing the principle on which it is based. Of course they have had to grapple with the question of permitting or prohibiting the representation of sex on the screen, and in no other letter did they find it so difficult to draw a line as in this one. Many of the crime films offered regarded as distinctly reprehensible because surely demoralizing in influence, but all crime they did feel justified in barring. Finally it was decided to reject all films in the methods of shocking the good conscience and the scene in which the crime was committed instead of a merely incident material. Even these rules they did not feel strict enough to enforce against all so-called "costume crimes" because the spectateur will aspiré to repeat them. Thus, England, the cowboy drama and the mystery showing things done by bandits were held innocuous. As a moral discussion this will do some doubt among the rigorists, but its practical value is fairly obvious, and it shows that if intelligent people are not often displayed by censors anyway.

Hiraph Violations in Schenectady

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Schenectady, N. Y.—The law and police committee have been urged by acting Mayor David D. Routley to investigate the operation of the picture theaters to determine improper film productions are being shown.

According to Alderman A. W. Allister, who heads the committee, the commonouncil last week passed an ordinance to prevent the screening of material which is objectionable in the Sunday picture office for which the managers are obligated to provide a passenger car and the common council committee with a complete list of films to be shown on Sundays in advance of the exhibition.

Allister charged these provisions of the ordinance have not been complied with, and it is said that the alleged offenders are not general and that only a few are believed to be at fault.

New Idea Now Being Worked—No Competition With Theaters Planned
The Children's Matinee Asso. Inc., with offices at 1356 Sixth St., Nicholas Ave., has completed its organization and plans for the presentation of children matinees at least once a week.

The organization will use picture designated as proper ones for children to see which are selected by the National Board of Review and the National Juvenile M. P. League. It is stated that no competition with regular theaters is planned and that theaters that are to be rented for one day will be leased at a reasonable figure. Where it is impossible to secure theaters, halls and auditoriums will be used for the showings.

The plan calls for a junior and senior program, depending upon the age of the child.

An educational campaign is now under way to interest school principals and teachers in the idea and to secure speakers to present the plan to parents' organizations and welfare clubs.

The association says it has allied itself with all the following organizations: Playground Recreation Asso. of America, National M. P. League, National Kindergarten Asso., National Board of Review, Educational Alliance, Community Service, Humanitarian Club, Federation of Child Study, ESC Society, International Church Film Corp., Salvation Army, Children's Court, Jewish Big Brothers, Girls' Scout Asso., and Board of Education.

Abe Blank dropped in town Tuesday.
He mixed in with Clara Kimball Young, Harry Garson and Harry Reichenbach and a big party election night. Incidentally they went to the Sixty Club, a very exclusive resort where dress clothes are part of the order of the night. Blank was the only one in the party minus evening dress. So the party could not be scathed. Finally, to save the party from going elsewhere, Blank asked to be excused for a few moments, promising to return.

Twenty minutes later he did. He had on full evening dress. Where he got the clothes, the studs, the shirt, everything, was a mystery. He refused to explain.

Finally some of the crowd suggested going elsewhere—"making a night of it." Blank demurred. He said he couldn't stay out later than six o'clock. He had a friend, a waiter, he said, who had to report for duty at that hour.

Then the crowd was on to where he had secured the fine clothes.

hibitor in this manner. At the start he said he had quite a time to get the independent producer to under-other organizations in the field, but that he believed this had now been accomplished.

He then told an amusing story of killing a duck with a fishing line and was followed by Irving Bacheller, the author, who spoke feelingly of having a man like Mr. Hodgkinson in the picture business, which he declared was the greatest agency of good that the world has ever known.
Hugo Ballin touched upon the idea that there was too much of the physthe business who had that same ager with headquarters in Washthat organization.

Willis severed his connections will handle propositions from indepen-

The initial offering of Cran dall

Why the Silence?

Queries The Film Renter of London is going public (Special to WID'S DAILY)

London—A leading article in a recent issue of the Film Renter deals with Alliance Film Corp., and the silence maintained by its directors.

"For the past few weeks," says the Film Renter, "rumor has been rife regarding the present and future activities of the Alliance Film Corp., the most highly capitalized producing company in the United Kingdom. It would, therefore, be well if the board of directors took steps to issue some definite statement as to the exact position of this leviathan company. So far as the public is concerned, the plans of the Alliance are shrouded in mystery, and the fact that this company, with its million pound nominal capital, has not yet put a single film on the market has caused considerable dissatisfaction among its shareholders. We understand that at the last private meeting of the company a further demand of 5s. a share was made.

"Recently three prominent members of the board, i.e., Gerald Du Maurier, A. E. Raper, M. F., and W. Hutchinson, tendered their resignations, which we believe have not yet been accepted. We are open to correction on this point. At the present moment the company's £1 shares (of which 10s. has been fully subscribed) are quoted on the Stock Exchange at 6s. 3d."

The article then refers to the statement issued in New York by Walter Crotch and Gustavus R. Rogers in answer to rumors affecting the company. Then the article says:

"Neither Mr. Higham's generalities nor Mr. Rogers' declamations shed much light on the situation, and in the absence of any definite pronouncement from the present directorate, the Film Renter and Moving Picture News would like to ask those gentlemen the following questions:

"Is it a fact that at the company's last private meeting of shareholders there was considerable criticism of the policy of the corporation and that the directors were asked to withdraw from the meeting?

"Whether the shareholders present deprecated any further expenditure until such time as an Alliance production was ready for trade presentation?

"Whether the call for 5s. a share at this meeting was successful?

"Whether a committee of shareholders has been appointed to look into the affairs of the company?

"How much of the subscribed capital has already been expended, and what have been the average weekly overhead charges of the concern for the past year?

"When will the first British Alliance production be ready for showing, and will it be ensurred a world market?

"How much money has been advanced to the British Actors' Film Company?"

Loew Host Again

This Time He is Taking a Party to Ottawa—Ceremonies at State Theater Today

Marcus Loew has the fever badly. Every time he opens a new theater he simply must have a delegation of picture folk present to make the celebration a real one.

And so tomorrow night another party leaves via special car and all that for Ottawa where the Loew theater will be opened on Monday. The party will be gone until Thursday. Two Metro cameramen are going along to make a celluloid record of what transpires. Nels Granlund is in charge and he says that he will absolutely “knock ‘em dead.”

Those who are going are: Texas Guinan, Ann Luther, Betty Bond, Lynn Leslie, Lillian Walker, Grace Valentine, Margaret Beecher, Neya McMein, Beulah Livingston, Will Morrissey, Edward Earle, Matt Moore, Muriel Ostriche, Marguerite Marsh, Helene Davis, Mildred Rear.

However, they will be told not to do any such thing that admissions will never come down and that the exhibitor is only now coming into his own in the matter of making money on his investment.

Plans Paris Studio

For D. H. Prod.—Madame Dulac’s Company—Pictures With American Earmarks Planned

Madame Germaine Dulac, the French director who has her own company in Paris called D. H. Prod. plans to erect a studio in Paris in which she hopes to make pictures with all the earmarks of the American output. A site of about 30,000 square feet has been secured for the proposed plant.

Madame Dulac, who is now in this country, is making a tour of the studios around New York in order to acquaint herself with American producing methods. She is buying lighting equipment to take back with her to France. An arrangement has been made with the Alton Play Bureau for stories by American authors to be made in France and the Alton Play Bureau in turn will handle in this country works of French authors.

It will be recalled that Alton has secured exclusive rights to all the stories published in Pearson’s magazine from 1890 to 1911.

CLARK-CORNELIUS

MOTION PICTURES
One Seventeen West Forty-Sixth Street
New York City

October 30, 1920

Wid's Daily,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

On our latest production, "ADAM AND EVE," which we are distributing through state right exchanges, we ran an advertisement in your October 21st issue of Wid's and I thought it would interest you to know that we have received more inquiries from this one advertisement than we have received from any similar advertisement in the history of our organization.

Although this advertisement was placed only once in your paper we have received offers and inquiries from virtually every important territory in the United States.

This is indeed an unusual achievement for a production on the independent market.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely yours,

Secretary,
Clark Cornelius Corp.

An Unsolicited Letter—
Every Advertiser Should Read—
After All It's Results That Count
PUTTING IT OVER

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know you cleaned up.

Charge this to Mr. Burleson if you wish. It is highly possible that delay in the mails may be responsible for the fact that Paramount Week returns from Milford, Ind., are just coming in; but their receipt reveals a live-wire exhibitor who isn’t afraid to spend money to make it and who conducts his small house in a community of less than 1,000 along progressive lines.

The exhibitor in question is A. M. Leitch, proprietor of this Royal which seats 185. Milford has a population of 823. Owing to its diminutive size it was of necessity, omitted from the community whose titles were included in the Paramount Week newspaper advertising appropriation.

In view of this fact Leitch decided to go quite on his own. He has always been a Paramount booster and recognized the selling talk in advertising quality films and making his film public "shop" for the best. So, entirely on his own account he ran a full page Paramount Week advertisement in the local weekly, The Milford News. He announced his bookings for the coming week, more than that he wanted to put across his idea of quality pictures.

He used a brief outline of the stars appearing in motion pictures now, who previously could only have been seen on the speaking stage for $1.50 or $5.00. The Royal, while a 35 and 50 cent house, showed pictures and talents, the advertisement stated, could not be seen at the theaters with lower admission rates. Content to leave his rivals with this brief dismissal, Leitch then went on to explain the wisdom of spending in amusement just as in anything else.

West Lebanon, Ind.—An up-to-the-minute showman is Sam Erksine, owner of the Banner Theater. The Banner has a seating capacity of 298. Out of the total population of West Lebanon is 642. Erksine is constantly striving to build up his theater. One of the cleverest ideas he has is the way he presents one show a week. This show is run by Erksine himself.

U. B. O. Booking

Educational reports that its single reel special, "The Art of Diving," demonstrated by Annette Kellerman before the standard motion picture camera and by the Cineal slow motion process, has been booked through the entire United Booking office theaters in Greater New York, the Keith houses in New England, and the complete Orpheum circuit from Chicago through to the Pacific coast.

The New York bookings total 161 days, including a week at the Palace, he said to be the first time that the Palace has played a picture after it had already been shown on Broadway. "The Art of Diving" was shown at the Capitol on anniversary week.

All Excited in Atlanta

Atlanta—The committee composed of John Ezzell and Bill Wassman has returned from New York with the news that they secured for Southeastern Motion Pictures Exposition for the week of Dec. 6, a number of stars among which are Eugene O’Brien, Helen Gardner, Ruby DeRemer,泽na Keefe Muriel Ostire, Eddie Polio, and Lucile DuPre.

The Auditorium-Army has been secured for the occasion and is to be decorated in gala fashion.

and no admission fee is charged. And he stands them up. The merchants benefit by the arrangement for it brings the farmers in from the outlying counties and the farmer’s money is spent in large quantities for groceries, clothing, tools, hardware, and so forth, and Erksine benefits in turn for by this means a number of people are interested in the screen and become regular patrons of his theater. When this idea was originally tried out, Erksine ran his free show on Saturday, but he found that the farmers were too busy to attend and now he runs it every Tuesday night—and he plays to 600 people.

Brooklyn—Edward L. Hyman, of the Strand put on a unique prologue to herald the showing of Anita Stewart in "Harriet and the Piper." Just before the feature the Strand contains revealed a beautiful garden, an exact reproduction of the ball masque scene in the film proper. In this scene men and women in brilliant masquerade costume joined in mardi gras spirit. They were infusing all the passionate spirit of Bohemia into their dance movements, when there was a sudden flash of fire and the devil appeared to claim his pay from those who defied custom.

Wineland Adds to String

Picher, Okla.—J. D. Wineland who owns the Mystic Here, and theaters in Webb City, Mo., and Tar River, Okla., has taken over the Picher and Liberty theaters, operated by the Pittsburg Amusement Co.

Grand Buys "The Victim"

Sam Grand of the Boston Federated Exchange acquired the New England rights to "The Victim" from C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.

Prince of Wales Film

London — Capt. W. C. Barker is home again after a seven months’ tour with the Prince of Wales in his official capacity as cameraman attached to the staff.

The appalling absence of British films in the colonies was driven home to Barker very forcibly during his tour. He says he hardly came across a single British picture being shown. Everywhere he went American productions were predominant.

Barker hopes to condense the many thousands feet of film of the tour upon his return and a half hours’ entertainment.

CHARACTER OF STORY ... Musical comedy star gets into wrong apartment where he finds it difficult to get out

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 5,569 feet

For the past two or three years the bedroom farce has had a place on at least one New York stage for each season and perhaps “Twin Beds” started the ball rolling. Now First National has produced a picture based on the Margaret Mayo play with Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven in the leading roles. Of course the spoken lines are missed for they provided much of the comedy, even though they weren’t always without a world of meaning.

But despite the lack of dialogue First National has secured an amusing comedy offering with enough humorous situations to get it over and at the same time has kept the picture free from suggestiveness. This is certainly a point in its favor. The action takes place almost entirely in one room and even though it is a case of continuous “in and out” on the part of all the characters, still the director has managed to maintain adequate coherence.

For feature purposes the original story has been rather prolonged in the latter reels and if it weren’t for some really good laughs at intervals during the long sequence when Signor Monti tries unsuccessfully to extricate himself from a bedroom other than his own, “Twin Beds” would have come to an unhappy conclusion, but even if this business is just a bit tedious it isn’t going to matter much for Carter DeHaven through his genuinely appreciative understanding of comedy value, keeps the interest pretty well centered about himself and his actions. William Desmond, Mrs. DeHaven and Helen Raymond offer pleasing performances.

Signor Monti, a singer, famous but henpecked, takes more than a passing interest in Mrs. Hawkins, a neighbor, which fact is noted by Mrs. Monti and Mr. Hawkins. Soon the Monti’s move to an apartment on the Drive where the Signor will not see his Juliet. Mr. Hawkins thinking it advisable to get away from the Montis, also moves to an apartment on the Drive and of course quite accidentally, the two families are in the same house, with apartments on the seventh and eighth floors respectively.

After a very daring escape from captivity and his keeper (Mrs. Monti) the singer spends a riot of a night at cards and liquor and finally after considerable good comedy gets into Mrs. Hawkins apartment and spends the night in one of the twin beds. What follows can’t be described. It’s just a matter of watching Monti try to get out the next morning without being seen by Mr. Hawkins or friend wife.

Title All That’s Necessary for Box Office Returns
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You need have no fear of getting it over if you book it. You have a title already well enough advertised and talked about to work with. Just announce the screen adaptation of Margaret Mayo’s stage play “Twin Beds” and that should be sufficient. For those who may have their doubts as to the “purity” of the piece you can promise them a clean comedy offering and back it up.

It might also be well to announce the stars and say that it is their first feature production. Both do very well and may come to mean something at the box office. However, judging from the crowd that tried to get into the Strand as late as the last show on the opening day, you need just mention “Twin Beds.” Catchlines and exploitation stunts are simple enough if you want to make a splurge.

Jerome Storm has a keen understanding of comedy value and together with the star puts a real wallop into this angle of each one of his pictures. The titles are well worded and are humorous in themselves in more instances than one. There are several bits that make more than an ordinary impression, among them the moment where hero shows his bride-to-be through the bungalow he has built for her and she says it is “cute but she would hate to have to live in it;” the taffy-pull with the youngsters in which things are pretty much “messed up;” the quarantining of the bungalow so hero can keep his sweetheart with him, and many others.

Dave (Charles Ray) gives up all hope of a happy married life when Betty vows she will not live in the bungalow he has built for her and goes back to her former sweetheart. Hero returns to what should be his “home” and finds Sybil, the wife of his friend, and her three children. Sybil has had a row with her husband because he wouldn’t buy her a new hat so she plans to give him a scare by hiding herself and the children from him.

Dave tries to take care of the children who will help him forget his own troubles. That night the husband phones Dave that he is coming over but Dave has to hide the children who have become ill from eating too much candy, so he tells the friend he has measles and not to come. Betty’s father is a doctor and Dave calls him in to tend the children. Betty comes along with her father and Dave cooks up a scheme with the Doctor who favors Dave, to quarantine the house so he can keep Betty to take care of the children and at the same time have her near him.

Sybil’s husband arrives and when he discovers his wife and children in Dave’s home he thinks all kinds of things about his “friend” and there’s a big row in which poor Dave takes a lot of abuse but he finally regains Betty’s love and that’s the end.

Tell Them It’s Another Real One From This Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

First of all book this and then rave all you want to about it and the money coming in and the smiles going out should repay you if you get crushed in the rush for “An Old Fashioned Boy.” All you have to do is to announce the star’s name and tell them he and Jerome Storm have made another human picture for their entertainment.

Catchlines shouldn’t be necessary to get a full house but if you care to use them to give an idea of the story you could say “See what happens when ‘An Old Fashioned Boy’ wants to marry a new-fashioned girl.” Or, “You, prospective bridegroom: Don’t build the bungalow until she says ‘Yes.’ See an ‘Old Fashioned Boy’ and you’ll know why.”
More hazardous stunts, greater surprises, more delightful romance, more comedy than ever before

"Someone in the House" Metro, might have much better been called "The Dancer" or for that matter anything else, because the title means so little. Taking all in all Metro has turned out a very satisfactory program offering which, with a little touch at the finish would prove unusually worth while. It's one of those crook plays where Hero just loots pearls, diamonds and such from—as one of the titles puts it—those who can afford it. The open season for looting from the rich is therefore on. He is known to the police as "The Dancer" and in the end, while stealing a necklace worth a hundred thousand from a rich society girl he blunders. Yes; he falls in love with her.
When he realizes she loves him he returns the jewels and a title indicates that they are going to be very happy with The Dancer giving up burglary as a profession and becoming a regular honest to goodness straight as a die business man. Just why they thought the title was enough is hard to understand. It would have seemed a lot more like it should have been had The Dancer had heroine somewhere near his chest looking down into her limpid eyes. Just the same, seriously speaking, this title needs a shot to clear things up. It's somewhat unusual to end this sort of a picture with a title. Someone is going to figure there is more coming and won't want to leave.

Ince has handled most of the stuff with sure fire speed and the offering holds up remarkably well all along the line except for the weak spot at the finish—which, incidentally, can easily be fixed up. Metro features no one in and yet the cast is very good indeed.
Edward Connelly gives a finished performance as the "Deacon" a pawnbroker who disposes of the jewels
the Dancer steals, and Edward Johnson's detective Malone is true to life without unnecessary stunts.

Promise Them Something a Little Different in a Crook Play

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Metro has given you a well balanced cast and a fairly good story here and with a neighborhood house audience you can get away with this in very good shape. It is a sweet sort of thing with the inevitable love affair plainly distinct from the very minute the crook hero starts and meets her. Yet it is entertaining and at times exceedingly interesting. He turns a number of new tricks and you can dwell on these in your advertising and exploitation. It isn't a great big thing and you can't rave but it is much better than the average program release and you needn't hesitate to say so. It's a lot better, incidentally, than many of the recent program releases of this and other companies.

If you like catchlines use something like this: "Do you think you'd give up a $100,000 necklace just because you loved her? See how its done in 'Someone in the House' at this theater." Or 'He was a regular crook until she came along. See how she handled him—when the entire detective force couldn't 'Someone in the House' at the blank theater tells it all.'

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Young man accepts the guilt of his sister’s erring fiancé

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 4,751 feet

Working with a capable cast and original story, Jacques Jaccard has turned out a production that is excellent in atmosphere and holds attention in fine style. The offering has been directed in a manner that transfers the spectator to its South American locale and sustains interest at all times.

There is, unfortunately, a twist of prominence in the theme that may not meet with general approval. One of the principal characters, who in civilized territory is a gentleman, loses all sense of propriety when in the strange land and transfers his guilt in an affair with a native girl to the brother of his intended wife. Few patrons are likely to sympathize with the hero’s act in shouldering the blame instead of exposing his prospective brother-in-law. Jaccard explains this somewhat by stating in one of the early titles that he has based his story on the idea that morality is determined by the environment and location. Whether or not the average spectator will philosophize in this manner is another matter.

In every other respect, the production measures up to a high standard. Dagmar Godowsky gives a most creditable performance. Nick De Ruiz handles his character finely, Irene Blackwell does her share of the work well and Helen Lynch is pretty as the heroine. The star fits well into his role, while Edward Coxen and the others do all that is expected of them.

Frank Mayo goes to South America to overcome his dissipating tendencies, where he is associated with his sister’s fiancé and works in the employ of his sweetheart’s father. Coxen, who is to marry his sister, leads a life lacking in restraint. When the bride-to-be come South, circumstances point to Mayo as the man who has had a wild affair with a native girl and he shoulders the responsibility. Ultimately his beloved in convinced of his innocence, while Mayo who has gone back to the United States, absolved of all guilt reforms and everyone is happy.

Accent the Morality Question and It Should Pay

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Although you are given a satisfactory production, you have one handicap to contend with, that being the lack of sympathy one angle of the story receives. But for that you can promise your patrons a meritorious production. You should in all fairness use catchlines that will make them aware of that fact. Spring the question of morality and circumstance on them, linking your copy with the story so that they have a suggestion as to its character.

Frank Mayo, should be played up, this being one of his best vehicles in quite some time. Let them know also of Dagmar Godowsky’s fine work.

DETAIL ......................... Satisfactory
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Wealthy young fellow allows his house to be robbed for the sake of a "thrill"

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 5,290 feet

The well known stage play of "Officer 666" now being presented by Goldwyn with Tom Moore as the star makes first rate picture material and the production affords a good bit of entertainment and also gives Tom Moore a splendid opportunity to display his ability and pleasing personality.

Director Beaumont has managed to create an air of mystery in the opening reels which is thoroughly effective and keeps the audience in as much suspense as the star himself. This mystery business has been especially well handled. It never verges on to confusion, being logical all the time and still holding the suspense.

There is just one spot where things let up for a minute and the interest drags a bit in the sequence where the band of cops are trying to locate a thief. There is some good comedy business right here but prolonging the search stuff rather covers it up. The cast as a whole does very satisfactorily, especially Harry Dunkinson as the usual type of Irish officer. Jerome Patrick is the gentleman crook, while Raymond Hatton attempts to get over some comedy business rather unsuccessfully.

Travers Gladwin (Moore) returns from abroad unexpectedly and learns that crooks are planning to rob his house. Gladwin informs his friend Barnes that he intends allowing the robbery for the sake of the "thrill" he will derive from it. While the two are discussing the coming event two pretty girls call at the Gladwin home and ask to see Mr. Gladwin, showing quite plainly that it is not the real Gladwin they know by that name.

From what the girls say Traverse infers that the girls are "in" on the robbery deal. That night Gladwin bribes his friend "Officer 666" to lend him his uniform and in this disguise he meets the burglar, Alf Wilson by name and a connoisseur of oil paintings. It's Traverse's works of art that Alf is after. Wilson announces himself to the officer (Gladwin in disguise) as Traverse Gladwin, which fact is accepted by the officer to further his "thrill."

A general mix-up follows in which the girl again arrives on the scene to keep a date with "Mr. Gladwin" with whom she intends to elope. The real Gladwin falls for her himself and is so happy over it that he helps Wilson to escape the police and they have the usual clutch close-up for an ending.

Play Up the Title and You Can Promise a Good Picture
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can book "Officer 666" and be assured that you will be showing a pleasing piece of entertainment. The mystery business at the beginning gets it off to a good start and follows it up with some pretty good excitement and some comedy, most of which, however, is in the titles of which there are more than necessary.

The title is well known because of the success of the stage play, so you will do well to play it up. Show stills of the star in the policeman get-up. That will promise them a picture of Moore in a new line of endeavor. Catchlines could read: "Have you ever wanted a thrill bad enough to allow your house to be robbed? Gladwin thought it was worth it, for he won a prize. See 'Officer 666' for the prize."

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........... 5,483 feet

As far as the production itself is concerned, "A Beggar in Purple" isn’t open to criticism. The story has been handled in a thoroughly coherent way and presented smoothly and without any elaborating. As such Edgar Lewis’ latest effort will prove satisfactory to those using the “one time” method.

However, the story contains some very old situations and obvious twists that give the whole idea long before the actual events transpire. For instance you just know the minute the “good” girl makes her appearance that hero will marry her along toward the last flicker. There is just one punch in the picture that comes when hero finally “gets” his man and keeps him a prisoner in his house while he floods the market with his own stock and “breaks” his enemy.

It is a story of revenge, the cause for which is not well founded as far as the spectator knows. A child begs employment from a rich man in order that he may buy food for his dying mother. The mother dies and the child vows to “get” the rich man. Labor problems are introduced unnecessarily in the form of a contemplated strike in the paper mills of the hero. No very realistic scenes of the mills are shown, merely some exterior shots which look more like the entrance to a picture studio than a paper mill.

Eighteen years pass and the child is now John Hargrave, head of the Hargrave paper company. Roger Winton, head of a competitive paper company, is the man the boy had sworn to avenge. Hargrave and Roger Winton, Jr., are in love with the same woman, Irene Foster but Irene is after Hargrave’s money and Winton’s love. She finally accepts the former but shows her true self when Hargrave gives her an engagement ring and she makes a fuss over the ring instead of the giver.

Winton Sr. learns that Hargrave intends taking over another paper company and knowing that this will mean his ruin, Winton bribes an L. W. W. paper to start labor troubles. He secures possession of Hargrave’s reorganization plans and buys up the stock Hargrave discovers the plot in time to save himself and cause his opponent’s ruin.

Then Hargrave discovers that his sweetheart is dis-loyal. He is stricken blind but is made happy by the true love of his secretary and later when his sight is restored by an accident, they are married. In the cast are Charles Arling, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Betty Brice, Ruth King, Stanton Heck, and others.

Announce the Producer and Use Catchlines for Attracting Attention

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"A Beggar in Purple" will do for a one time showing and you will probably satisfy the majority of your audience with it. It contains the sort of story material that still goes over well with neighborhood audiences and has the sort of an ending that they like. You can announce it as an Edgar Lewis production. That may mean something to them.

Announce it as a story of love and intrigue, of a faithless sweetheart and the restoration of a man’s happiness by the love of a real woman. For catchlines say: "He waited eighteen years to get his man. A long time but in the end he accomplished his purpose." Or "What would you do for your mother? See what ‘A Beggar in Purple’ did.”
You know that there is nothing so beautifully compelling in Nature as mother-love. Even the word "mother" gives you a thrill. Imagine, then, a picture that is almost sublime in its reverent, forceful and dramatically appealing presentation of the mother-love theme! Here, indeed, is such a picture. It reaches depths of pathos and heights of human feeling seldom found on the screen; it will make you cry, then dry the tear with a smile; it will thrill you with its drama and hold you tight with its suspense. It's worth seeing if ever a picture was—and besides being entertained you'll be happier for having seen it. Come—that's all!
"Glad Girl" Type of Picture Greatly Aided by Comedy Vein

DIRECTOR ......................... Paul Powell

DIRECTION ...................... Satisfactory

STAR............... Gives pleasing performance and registers

SUPPORT ........ All fulfill requirements
EXTERIORS ........ Correct
INTERIORS .......... All that is necessary
DETAIL ........ Up to the average
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,084 feet

Mary Miles Minter's latest vehicle for Realart is an adaptation of Dana Burnet's story "Blindness," which incidentally would have been a much more appropriate title for the picture, or at least more directly pertaining to the story. The production as a whole is a typical "glad" type of entertainment with the poor blind girl spreading sunshine despite her affliction.

The star does very well in her "happy" role, but her attempt at dramatic acting in the latter reels when she seems to be bordering on insanity is hardly effective. Perhaps the acting honors of the picture should go to Burton Law, although his is not a stellar part. But his comedy business registers sure fire all the way through. He plays the part of a Hebrew proprietor who mixes in with a band of crooks in merely a "friendly" way. His real efforts at humor get over every time and at the Rialto there was a general atmosphere of approval each time he had a chance to do a bit.

And it's this effective line of humor running through the picture that lifts it out of a rather unsatisfying rut that it would have fallen into and which brings "Eyes of the Heart" up to the entertainment mark.

Laura (Miss Minter) has been blind since infancy and when her parents died she was adopted by three crooks who have always taken care of her and kept her ignorant of her true surroundings, telling her that the dirty alley below her window was a beautiful courtyard and her room a "palace of dreams," and so when Laura's sight is restored the shock of learning the actual state of affairs, the sight of her real home and the fact that her friends are crooks, bring about her disillusionment.

Just as Laura returns from the hospital, Mike, Whitey and Sall, Laura's benefactors, are sent to jail for a "job" they put through in order to secure the money which paid for Laura's operation. This leaves Laura alone until Sullivan, another crook and sort of "master mind" of the smaller fellows, takes the girl to his home with the intention of using her in his "business."

In a sort of trance Laura is putting over her first "job" for Sullivan by robbing a safe, but Mike and his pals have just been cleared of the charge against them and arrive in time to save Laura. Later the owner of the safe and incidentally their former landlord offers to give the crooks a ranch to which the scene shifts some time later with Mike making love to Laura.

Announce the Star, Author and the Original Title

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can announce Mary Miles Minter in her latest Realart picture, an adaptation of Dana Burnet's "Blindness." You can say it is a "Pollyanna" or "glad girl" type of picture for those who like to know the gist of the story and use the lines: "If you could not see but believed you lived in a 'palace of dreams' and then one day regained your sight and found your dream all shattered, how would you feel?"

If the star is popular in your house you can just announce her name. The title has no very great drawing power, so there is no need of playing it up. You can promise them a good bit of comedy through the performance of Burton Law and stills of him in his character part should attract some attention. You can feel assured of pleasing the majority with "Eyes of the Heart."

Wid's Daily,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

On our latest production, "ADAM AND EVE," which we are distributing through state right exchanges, we ran an advertisement in your October 21st issue of Wid's and I thought it would interest you to know that we have received more inquiries from this one advertisement than we have received from any similar advertisement in the history of our organization.

Although this advertisement was placed only once in your paper we have received offers and inquiries from virtually every important territory in the United States.

This is indeed an unusual achievement for a production on the independent market.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely yours,

[Signature]

Secretary,
Clark Cornelius Corp.

An Unsolicited Letter—

After All It's Results That Count
Familiar Incidents Handicap Well Staged Production

George Walsh in
"THE PLUNGER"
Fox

DIRECTOR ..................... Dell Henderson
AUTHOR ....................... Thomas F. Fallon
SCENARIO BY ................ Not credited
CAMERAMAN .................. Charles Gilson
AS A WHOLE....Fast moving drama with much conventional "movie stuff"

STORY........Built largely about incident that has been used on numerous occasions

DIRECTION.......Kept cast on the jump and injected element of realism

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Always clear
LIGHTINGS .......................... Good
CAMERA WORK........Excellent; moved about to good advantage

STAR....Does not participate in his usual acrobatics

PLAYERS.......Virginia Valli, Byron Douglas, Richard R. Neil, Irving Brooks and other all satisfactory

EXTERIORS......Splendid shots of elaborate estate, and shots of Wall Street

INTERIORS ...............Several excellent sets

DETAIL .......................Satisfactory

CHARACTER OF STORY......Usual—hero upsets villains plans

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

George Walsh's newest vehicle has been well staged and directed, but it is not essentially a story best suited to him. Of course, the light atmosphere which the director wanted to maintain at different times has been supplied by him, but his usual acrobatics and stunts are not evident.

Generally, the production has been timed well and it holds attention as a result. It suffers, however, because the incident which leads up to the subsequent happenings is one that has been used on several occasions and as a result, the denouement lacks novelty. Neil's shooting at one of the characters during a struggle in the dark, and his shifting of the blame to one of the combatants with the customary blackmail is quite familiar. Fortunately, they have surrounded this part of the plot with good atmosphere and done good work on the settings. The shots of the stock exchange and country home of the heroine, as well as other scenes have all been handled well.

Yates, manager for Houghton, a stock broker, forges an order of one of the clients which results in the latter's ruin. When Houghton is accused by the client of deliberately cheating him, a battle results and the latter is killed. Yates claims he saw Houghton do the killing and proceeds to blackmail him.

Schuyler, played by Walsh, buys Houghton's villa when the latter is pressed for funds, but the Houghtons continue to live there is spite of the former's occupation. His efforts to approach the aristocratic Alice Houghton are frustrated. Yates meanwhile, demands that she marry him, using his influence over her father to good advantage. All of Yates' efforts later, to abduct her, etc., are turned to nought by Schuyler. The villain manages to ruin Schuyler financially, but his part of the shooting is found out. Of course, he comes in for his beating before the clutch.
Concentrate Your Drive on the Walsh Enthusiasts
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

George Walsh in
"THE PLUNGER"
Fox

In exploiting this, better rely upon Walsh to draw them to your house, rather than upon the quality of the story. Aim your campaign directly at his followers and promise them an offering that hits a fast pace throughout—that it is a story of wild finance and find some way of telling them about the general nature of it.

If your audience is discriminating and well educated in the ways of screen authors, you had better peddle this lightly for they are sure to comment on the usual-ness of some of its twists.

You might, if you want to give it a good play, employ stills showing the stock exchange and hit at the financial angle of it.

Grey-Hampton-Hodkinson Combine Presents Another Success

"THE U. P. TRAIL"
Benj. B. Hampton—Hodkinson

DIRECTOR .................. Jack Conway
AUTHOR ...................... Zane Grey
SCENARIO BY ............... William H. Clifford CAMERAMAN ................ Harry Vallejo

AS A WHOLE—Actionful and fine acting make this hold all the time; first class production all told

STORY...... Typical Zane Grey story of the early west; fine western atmosphere maintained

DIRECTION.......Very good, especially handling players and sets

PHOTOGRAPHY ............. Fine
LIGHTINGS ................. Some splendid night scenes
CAMERA WORK ............. Good
PLAYERS.......A first rate cast with splendid performances from each EXTERIORS ............... Extremely realistic
INTERIORS .................. Usual sets
DETAIL ................... Well taken care of

CHARACTER OF STORY.....The west in the early 70's with romance and tragedy fighting for supremacy

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,500 feet

Benjamin B. Hampton has produced and the Hodkinson Corp. will release another Zane Grey production in the near future, and if you are at all familiar with this combination's past performances and the success of such productions as "The Westerners," "The Sagebrusher" and "Desert Gold," you can go right to "The U. P. Trail" assured of the same splendid results as their previous pictures must surely have brought.

The novel has been given a very spirited production with action galore and many really gripping moments that get over with a punch. A real western atmosphere replete particularly in small matters of detail is another feature and even if the shootin', of which there is a good deal, is a bit too prominent at times, it lends a true western aspect, the type lovers of this kind of story will expect.

Great care has been given the production end of it and some very fine results have been accomplished. There is one night scene showing the attack of the Indians upon a band of prospectors headed for the mining district. The actual fight has been shot from a hill some distance from the scene of the action and the lighting effects are especially fine. This is sort of a climax to one sequence of the story, but the final punch comes in the last reel when the heroine is being rescued from a man who pretends to be her father. These scenes have been very well handled, indeed.

Warne Neale, an expert civil engineer, is working on the first transcontinental railroad. One day while at work he finds Allie Lee, a young girl who has escaped with her life when her mother and the rest of a party with whom they were traveling to escape her mother's husband, were massacred by Indians. Through Warren's care the girl recovers from the shock and their friendship ripens into love.

Neale leaves Allie at a trapper's cabin when he goes to Benton, a nearby town, to get provisions. In Benton is Beauty Stanton, a woman who runs a dance hall and saloon in that town. Beauty has met Neale before and fallen in love with him, although she realizes he does not love her. Beauty learns that Neale is to marry Allie and is heartbroken. During Warren's absence Allie is kidnapped by the man who claims to be her father, but who really is not.

The news nearly kills Warren and during his illness which follows, Beauty nurses him back to health. A new saloon opens in Benton with Allie's supposed-to-be father the proprietor. Beauty learns that Allie is being held a prisoner in the building and through her efforts the lovers are united while she is fatally wounded, and later dies.

The Author's Name and Promises of Another Good One Will Do the Trick

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This should prove a real box office attraction. It follows as a worthy successor to the previous productions such as those mentioned heretofore. There are plenty of opportunities for exploitation and you should be able to make the names of the author and the producer bring you adequate returns, to say nothing of a cast consisting of such names as Roy Stewart, Kathryn Williams, Robert McKim, Marguerite De La Motte, Jos. J. Dowling and others.

Promise them another fine Zane Grey production and mention his other novels that have been picturized. You need not be afraid to make promises and if you talk enough about it you should be able to produce an extended run. Many exploitation stunts can be worked out in connection with the title and the story itself.

"TORCHY TURNS CUPID" from the Stories by SEWELL FORD
Starring
JOHNNY HINES

MORE than ten million people have read the seven "Torchy" books. Exhibitors everywhere have found that these comedies pick up business with each showing, that they have all of the pulling power of the serial, with the added advantage of winning new friends with each picture—each separate story, a film worth while.

They are typically American, brimful of spontaneous humor that gives your audience NEW laughs, that makes them leave the theatre f-eeling that they have had more than their share of the fun.

Better start with the first ones: "Torchy," "Torchy Come Through," "Torchy In High" and "Torchy's Millions."

They're made FOR FUN—AND FOR BOX OFFICE DOLLARS.

Some Short Reels

"Movie Fans"—Mack Sennett—Paramount

Type of production.......................... 2 reel comedy

"Movie Fans" is another of the Sennett fun-makers and perhaps its humorous possibilities are even greater in view of its direct bearing on the making of the "movies." Those who like the Sennett pictures will certainly be well pleased with the way he shows them around the studios in his latest comedy. All the Sennett players are given a chance to present their bit. The bathing girls are seen in some new costumes and a short diving scene is given over to them and some more of these familiar comedy characters are seen during the run. How two henpecked husbands appropriate their wives' Ford and journey to a studio where they get into all kinds of trouble provides a barrel of fun.

"How'll You Have Your Bath?"—Town & Country

Type of production.......................... I reel Sport Pictorial

The first of Jack Eaton's series of "Sport Pictorials" is on the Capitol program this week. The subject is pleasingly presented, has some good titles and has been well photographed. The opening shots show some East Side kiddies sporting about in a Fifth Avenue fountain which gradually fades into the "old swimming hole." Here the youngsters exhibit some fancy dives with the motion slowed up a trifle to show more plainly the actual movements. On the whole the reel makes a good short subject for any program.

"Fingers and Pockets"—Goldwyn

Type of Production ......................... 2 reel comedy

Most of this offering centers about the activities of a thief and honest young suitor at a ball. Ed Flanagan and George Edwards are featured in the piece and have undoubtedly been handicapped by material that is not up to desired standard. To begin with, there are several irrelevant incidents and the theme—the efforts of Flanagan to elope with the girl in the case, later his being mistaken for the master crook and other bits that comprise it—do not convince.

Some risque material in the production is not especially funny and will probably be ordered out by some censors. The offering generally is of ordinary quality, but can possibly be cut so as to get over. In its present form, there is not enough really continuous funny footage in it to enable it to get over with discriminating audiences. As for the material concerning the dropping of the pendant worn by a matronly lady into the front portion her dress, and Flanagan's refusal to get it—the titles and action written about the situation are not really funny. They are distinctly indecent, and can be eliminated to advantage.

Pathe Review, No. 77

Type of Production .......................... I reel magazine

French roads of ancient origin are seen in the opening portion of this review which holds up nicely throughout. Japanese newspaper workers are seen in the second section, which shows that the methods employed are quite modern. Some ducks, swans and geese appear in the following part, which is Dr. Ditmars' contribution. The manner in which different varieties of pavement are tested is shown in an industrial bit and the Hy Mayer Traversaga, "Such Is Sporting Life" closes. The offering is one of the best of these issues turned out recently and can hold its own almost anywhere.

"Sunshine"—Reelcraft

Type of production......................... 2 reel juvenile drama

Had this story by Frank S. Mattison been produced with any other than a cast of youngsters, it would not have resulted in a production to be taken seriously, but its simplicity makes it possible to adapt it readily to a company of juvenile performers. Matty Roubert is featured, and in the support are a few other youngsters of varying ability, the stout fellow giving an excellent performance with the leading lady doing well enough. It is an offering that brings back the Horatio Alger days, without the sensationalism—a sort of semi-serious kid picture which should go well especially in neighborhood houses.

"The Hooch Ball"—International—Goldwyn

Type of Production ...................... 1 reel animated cartoon

Most audiences will find this production very amusing and baseball fans especially will be pleased by it. It is one of the series of Judge Rummy cartoons, and shows that caricature character, together with the familiar Slick Hat Harry, at a game between Cleveland and New York. Each of the two volunteers to stop Babe Ruth and both meet with the same fate, Harry's downfall, is due to the fact that Rummy has doctor's the with some home-brew and when he endeavors to moisten it so as to throw a spit-ball, the liquor causes him to stagger with saddening results. There are shots of Ruth and Speaker included and the reel measures up to a satisfactory standard.

"Insulting the Sultan"—Pathé

Type of Production .......................... I reel comedy

For the first time in a considerable while Smub Pollard is seen sans mustache in one of his single reels. Whether or not it is a wise move to have him remove it is questionable. Certainly much of Pollard's individuality lies in the weed that dangles from his upper lip. Aside from the fact that Smub does not sport the mustache, there is really little to attract more than passing notice in the piece. The theme is negligible while the situations are of the commonplace slapstick variety. It is as a whole considerably below the usual standard maintained in these productions. Marie Mosquini is featured, while Sammy, the short colored darkey and stout comedian also appear.

"Farm Efficiency"—Fox

Type of production...................... I reel animated cartoon

Mutt and Jeff are seen in efforts to think up contrivances and plans whereby they may run their farm on an economic and efficient basis in this offering which, while not up to the standard of the better issues of the set gets over in fair shape. The device for getting the hen to lay eggs at the beginning is the biggest laugh in the piece.
Short Reels

"Edgar, the Explorer"—Goldwyn
Type of Production....................2 reel comedy
Mason N. Liston directed this Booth Tarkington two reeler which is an acceptable offering but does not maintain the standard of the best issues of the series. For over a reel they depict the manner in which Johnny Jones, who as usual, plays the lead, visualizes some African adventures of which he is reading. Some of the material is fairly humorous, but most of it is not funny enough to provoke genuine mirth. Most of the big laughs come at the finish, when Jones, together with Buddy Messenger and Lucile Ricksen, as well as other unnamed children, go through with some of the incidents of the story at play. That part of it together with the footage that follows, has been handled more well, and there is much there that will meet with approval. That this will get over is due mainly to the concluding portion.

"The Quaint Isle of Marken"—Educational
Type of production.....................1 reel travelogue
No more attractive feminity than that seen on this strange Dutch isle is to be found anywhere in the world. The girls and women, of all types and ages, garbed in their costumes which are the height of simplicity and prettiness, are seen throughout the reel which is replete with genuine local color and as entertaining as such an offering can possibly be. Some views of the harbor where numerous fishing vessels with myriad masts clustered together are offered, as well as views of some of the men. A shot that will get a laugh is one in which a self-conscious bride and groom, the latter in a costume that looks weird hurry by. The children in their white caps are picturesque, while the closing shots possess rare scenic beauty and create a splendid impression.

"Mad Hatters"—Chester—Educational
Type of production.....................1 reel travelogue
Hats as a rule differ with the locale and the tourist finds cranium coverings of various designs as he travels. There are, however, no head coverings stranger than those worn by the women of the Bataan Islands, not far from the Philippines and populated by people of similar characteristics. These consist of closely woven straw or some such substance, hanging low in the rear. This travel production also shows some of the men, the manner in which they perform some of their work and the school where the younger generation is taught modern ways and inoculated with the germ of civilization. Of more than passing interest is a device for pressing cane, the primitive and ingenious machine being shown nicely. The piece has been titled and photographed well and is quite up to the desired standard.

Bray Pictograph, No. 465—Goldwyn
Type of production.....................1 reel magazine
Simple exercises for developing the muscles of the back, sides, arms and chest are dealt with in the initial portion of this Bray production. Like most other such systems for attaining some approach to physical perfection, they will probably hold the attention of the spectator in fair style while he is in the theater, after which they will be forgotten. The Sting Ray, a denizen of the water and alluded to in the rhymed titles as the Clan Cracker, follows. Marguerite Gove is responsible for the bits of verse which are undoubtedly superior to most of the poetry offered on the silver sheet, although not as explicit as they might be. The "Out of the Inkwell Cartoon" at the culmination is more actual than cartoon, but reasonably humorous. Generally, an acceptable offering of its type.

"The Noisy Still"—Fox—Sunshine
Type of production.....................2 reel comedy
Several novel and very clever bits of comedy business have been built about a very scant plot, if it may be called such. Combined with some of the more usual tricks, without which few knockabout productions are complete, are numerous bits of unusual footage, almost all of which register nicely. The dropping of the mattress by the principal comedian, and his tumble on the hard pavement as the landlady removes the shock-absorber, the efforts of one of the performers to fish with a vacuum cleaner, the discovery of the flivver, the use of the giant roller and the manner in which it flattens one of the performers against the pavement all register nicely. On the other hand, the way the waiter reckons up a bill by examining the remnants of the meal on the person of the consumer and one or two other scenes are not essentially new. The original stuff in this, however, is of such a quality as to make up for the lack of a theme and enables it to score.

Clear by John Emerson—No Likelihood of Strike—New Contract Coming

That the Actors' Equity has no idea of calling a strike in the motion picture branch of the U.S. is a clear understanding between the actors and producers, to do away with the methods of striking operators, according to Emerson, president of Equity, that is desired from the new move, which was mentioned recently.

Mr. Emerson says that there are 900 actors and actresses enrolled in the picture branch of the Equity in New York. Later it is expected the growth will be augmented by a coast

his remarks to Equity were garbled

Arkansas in Line

The M. P. T. O. of Arkansas has been formed and the following off-and executive committee were named:

L. L. Lick, president, Ft. Smith;
E. Robertson, vice-president, Fouville; E. C. Hauber, secretary and Treasurer, Pine Bluff.

The executive committee is as follow:

D. E. Fenton, Harrison; L. L.
Jonesboro; W. L. Sanders, Fouville; E. C. Robertson, Payette;
L. E. H. Butler, Russellville; Syd-
L. Nutt, Hot Springs; V. J. Hay-ten, Hoyle Kirkpatrick, Ft. Mc-Murry.

HAPPY DAYS

These are happy days for Marcus Loew. And his associates. The way the floors are piling up in the new State theater and office building warrant the belief that the structure will be under root around the first of the year. Then M. L. will be happy. He will have his own house in the heart of things. And he owns his own producing company. So he isn’t worrying.
That is. Not over this end of the business. Maybe he has other worries. But they get no further than to Bernstein. Know Bernstein? No. He just holds on to the Loew case. And even Marcus has trouble making him give up. Regular though. Been with the Loew crowd since it was knee high to a grasshopper.
And loves M. L. That means something in this business. Loyalty! Lot of men in it that don’t know how to spell it.

Different Then

Back in the old days things weren’t so rosy. Not half so rosy as on Saturday when they laid the cornerstone at the State.
Nope. Not by a lot. Lots of lots. Dave Warfield had the wobbles. More than once. Would have talked M. L. out of the whole thing. But he couldn’t. He’s just an actor. Not an or-or. Not a lawyer. But M. L. stuck. Glue was his middle name.

Did Beaverbrook Speak for British Industry, Asks Kinematograph
Weekly

(Special to WID’S DAILY)

London—Kinematograph Weekly evidently takes exception to the remarks made by Lord Beaverbrook at the Zukor luncheon in New York recently.

"It is interesting to learn," says
Kine. "the in the opinion of Lord Beaverbrook, as expressed at the Ritz Carlton luncheon tendered him by Adolph Zukor, ‘Great Britain is not a rival of the United States for the supremacy of the motion picture industry, but encouraged by American achievement of the screen, the British producers have become friendly imitators."

The article says at another point:

"No doubt Americans, from Zukor down, are quite pleased to learn that Great Britain contemplates playing second fiddle to the end of the piece. But who gave Lord Beaverbrook authority to speak for the British producing industry (with which he has no revealed connection and of which he certainly possesses no pretensions to expert knowledge) in this vein, and what do British producers think of this, unflattering picture of their enterprise? Are they finding the ‘path through the jungle’ so beautifully clear as Lord Beaverbrook states, and are they really content to stand on the American’s heels in stead of cutting new paths for themselves? We do not think they are, though it may suit the book of Mesrs. Beaverbrook and Zukor who appear more and more to aim at the pose of a Siamese Twin film colossus, that they should do so. It is a fairly safe rule to assume that when financial experts of this type talk in general principles it is because they have a very close eye on definite individual — or joint—interests.

Berlin Paper in Three Languages

Its purpose is international in character and as described in its own columns:

"This paper is devoted to the recordings of the bridge which in former years connected Germany with the world, and the world with Germany."

working their people day and night in order to avoid the term of their engagement and cut down the cost of their picture. They apparently care nothing about the quality of their product, and seem utterly oblivious to the fact that (in addition to the injustice they are doing the actors) they are splitting their own work, for a tired actor does poor work, and looks haggard and worn on the screen.

"This abuse we certainly must correct, and I feel sure we shall have the assistance of the better producers in correcting it.

"I think I know personally all the heads of the first class producing companies in America, and almost without exception they are fair dealing, far-seeing and upright men, who have no more desire to do injustice to our people than we have to do injustice to them. I feel sure that these men would be perfectly willing to arrange a contract or agreement with us that a certain number of hours should constitute a day's or week's work, because they would be doing no more than they are doing now except that the agreement would be written down on paper. And having a definite agreement with these better producers, we could soon force the few slack drivers to come into line, and give our people proper working hours.

"Another abuse that we are aiming to eradicate is the gonging agent. We have no quarrel whatever with the legitimate agent who charges his legal 5 per cent and is satisfied with it.

Italian Combine?

(Special to WID'S DAILY)
London—The Film Reuter says things seem to be booming in the Italian film world just now, and that it learns on good authority that a new company has just been formed in Rome with a capital of five million lira for the purpose of improving the organization of the Italian film industry.

"Judging by the interest that the Roman banks are taking in the business at the present time, it would almost seem as if a combine is on foot," says this publication, "as we have hinted a short time ago, to capture the Italian trade. Dr. Pellinari, after his recent visit to his native country, was full of news in regard to this newest move by the financiers, and would appear that there is a fairly substantial substratum of truth in the rumors on foot. Judging by the report referred to above, Italian films have a big future before them, but it certainly will not assist their artistic progress or development if they persistance get too much into the hands of the moneyed classes."

Just when it looked the worst he smiled. That famous smile, once at a time, has made him a hero. Friends. And money. And the smile stuck with the glue. Result: over a hundred theaters. Some palaces. All making money. Lot of little ones. But they will go by the board. Sooner or later, too.

Are You Thinking, S. A.?

Then maybe something will happen down South. Loew's is strong down there. Thanks to Ed Schiller and some other dope. Big people. But under cover. And if S. A. Lynch doesn't watch out — You know the poem, "The goblins will get you if you don't watch out!" Well, S. A., here's the tip.

That busy old bee isn't in it with M. L. He has almost a string of real houses down South. Some shooting galleries, too. But big new ones are going up as fast as Gary will supply steel. If we can sit back and watch. And listen. All? No, not S. A. Lynch is the exception.

And in this business of stranger-than-that happenings, pin one somewhere.

The Hammer Brigade

Hammers were in demand yesterday a week ago. At the meeting of the Society of Dramatists and Composers. There were enough wallows planted on this poor old picture game to bash its bean. The speakers outlined each in saying rash and brutal things. And some funny ones. All about pictures. What were they. And what they weren't. And they weren't more than they were. Among those who joked a lot at fun was S. Jay Kauflman of the Globe. But the "I-rew-him-when" club boys promptly came back at S. J. They'd remember that he did once write a scenario for Snick. Called "Wanting for Murder!" Snuff!

During all the hammering none of the speakers seemed to appreciate that the presence of a few picture folk like Mac Murmur—and her Bob—and Alma Rubens and some others, called the usual courtesies. Not at all. Picture folk? Courtesies. My be. But not there. The dramatists had their innings. The divas were slammed-banged to a fare-you-well. And then some.

Sees Things Coming

Whose the smart man over on Fifth Avenue who sees things coming? Was it Jesse Lasky? Or was it the quiet little man who keeps in the background? A. Z. Runs things pretty well, that. Tall events, someone is smart. That's why the stars famous are being told a few things. Such as work together done big show. Let's have a big stock company idea. On lines that the play's the thing. Yes? Willie Shakespeare did it a long time ago. Maybe he was right.

But a lot of producers are figuring these days along the same lines. Not that there won't be stars. Lots of 'em. But big production is the big idea they have in mind. And the what? Not exactly secondary, but less important. Watch the growth.

Regarding Admissions

Bill Brandt's Chamber of Commerce wants admissions held down. Even if some of the members are feeling the tightening of their pockets. Want prices held right up. Yep. Nary a break.

All fine and dandy. But can it be done? There are rumors being heard. East. South. Middle West. Lots of places. Wise exhibitors who do not need a ton of brick to fall on to want to know what to do. Whose going to tell 'em?

Watch all ye editors get to this idea. Come on in. First one, first served. Meanwhile, take a look at what Taylor of Buffalo says. On the back page. It's worth reading.

DANNY.
Home Officeology
The following has been submitted by C. A. ("Buck") Taylor, general manager of Gardner Pictures Inc., of Buffalo.

Home Officeology

There was once
A Home Office
In New York,
That had 50 or 35 Branches,
And these Branches
Had to sell films
AT ANY I.C.T.
The cost began
To advance and advance
Until they had to Raise their prices
To the Dear Public
And then they Rais—
And then they
All raised again
And it seems to be
A raising habit.
The Dear Public
Might resent all These raises to see These really big Features.
And unless some Of the big Executives
Look into these rises
And do a Henry Ford
The little Exhibitor Might close up
And go to some hot Climate for the Winter.

Increase after increase in costs of these two branches has put the price of film to such a point that the smaller theater can hardly push his admission much higher and some careful study must be given this angle, especially the small theaters. It seems peculiar that the average company does not exterminate the "petty politics of friendship" that are employed in the business in putting inefficient men where executive brains are necessary. Unless this is eliminated "outside brains" will be invited and might make good. This is a study, after a two months' tour in small and big towns, small and big exchanges, and I see that this evil must be remedied before the cost of films to the exhibitors can be gauged on their realistic basis. There is nothing more than good common sense to be applied and the law of supply and demand will still govern the film business, irrespective of the opinions of many.

In conclusion, I would suggest that the big men of the industry make a close personal study of the small town exhibitors, otherwise in a year or two the revenue will dwindle in these places. Of course, the cry will go up that the exhibitor is making big money, maybe he is, but he is rare in small towns.

Just a personal opinion from an independent exchange man who has seen 11 years as salesman, manager, etc., of corporations.

Deposit Law

Trust Funds Taken Up by Ex-Senators—Seeking Organization Regarding Two Companies

Late Senator James L. Walker, essential for the Theater Owners' Number of Commerce of Greater New York, has been asked by that organization to take steps to see to the law regarding advance protection and to show the companies what needs to be done. Specifically, Walker is especially interested in regard to the two main organizations.

Some time ago, when Hallmark got into bankruptcy, it was said that ten deposits of New York exhibitors went along with it. This was in some of the members' information as to whether all companies were putting advance protection in trust funds as demanded by the new law of the state. Information disclosed, it is safe to say that companies were considering this a two-way matter.

When these were asked with reference to the statements received by the companies were unsatisfactory, one of the officials commented that the replies were subterfuges, the papers stating that the monies owed in advance were not deposits but payments against pictures racted for.

Statement Coming

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Philadelphia—"The Exhibitor," a regional publication, in its current issue reporting a luncheon given by Lew Bache, says that Bill Heenan will return to the First National Philadelphia exchange as manager, leaving the National Booking Co. of New York.

The report concludes: "At the offices of the Stanley Company, John J. McGurk, when questioned as to whether this moves indicates the abandonment of the formation of a National Booking Co., declared that no such decision would be reached before two weeks and that statement would be issued at that time."

"The Kid"

Chaplin's Five Reeler Will Go Out Through Organization Now Relinquishing His Specials

(From Long Distance 'Phone)

Chicago—Charlie Chaplin's first five reel comedy, "The Kid," will be released through First National. Contracts are expected to be signed here during the meeting of the Board of Directors which started yesterday.

The closing of this contract has nothing whatsoever to do with Chaplin's present contract with First National.

Chaplin came east several weeks ago and since then has been in conference with a number of producers and distributors including Marcus Loew and Samuel Goldwyn. There was some question whether or not Chaplin's contract with First National would permit him to release anywhere.

At the offices of First National Earl Hudson, assistant to J. D. Williams, said he knew nothing regarding "The Kid," and its release through that organization.

Nathan Burkan, Chaplin's attorney, admitted yesterday that he knew of the First National meeting in Chicago relative to "The Kid," but refused to commit himself as to whether or not Chaplin was the right organization.

If it is true," said Mr. Burkan, "exhibitors are to be congratulated, for they are to see a good picture."

Dear Editor,

I am writing to express my strong support for the production of the film "The Branding Iron" starring Jack Hoxie. As a long-time fan of Westerns, I believe that this movie has the potential to be a classic of the genre.

The story follows the adventures of a rancher named John (played by Jack Hoxie) as he navigates the challenges of running his ranch in the American West. The film is visually stunning, with breathtaking landscapes and thrilling action sequences. The performances by the cast, including Jack Hoxie, are top-notch, bringing depth and authenticity to their roles.

In particular, I am impressed by the way the film handles themes of courage, perseverance, and the bonds of loyalty, which are central to the Western genre. The cinematography and score are also exceptional, immersing the viewer in the world of the film.

I urge all Western enthusiasts and fans of Jack Hoxie to see "The Branding Iron" and support its release. This film is a true ode to the spirit of the American West and deserves the attention and appreciation it undoubtedly will receive.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]
When Is the Turn Coming?

That's the question on the lips of all business men. After discussing pros and cons of the whole situation with both bankers and business leaders, I would submit this as the majority analysis of the outlook: Severe unsettlement prevails today. Things probably will become worse until after the turn of the year. Already quite a number of concerns are receiving emergency treatment from banking interests. Others are to be let sink. The year-end failures are likely to be very numerous. Price declines are looked for in all lines which have not yet undergone thorough readjustment. On the other hand, raw materials and commodities which have already tumbled severely are expected to begin shortly to exhibit firmness. When retailers lower their prices to levels in harmony with the cost of raw materials, a spirited revival in buying is looked for. This recovery, it is figured, should begin to make its appearance very early in 1921.

In the Courts

Byoir & Hart, Inc., sued Raphael Beretta in the Supreme Court for $2,500 on the ground that Beretta bought the rights for France, Belgium and Holland to “Paul J. Rainey’s Heart of the Jungle” for five years and refused to take the films and pay the money when they were tendered. An attachment was granted by Justice Mullin against the defendant company, but the plaintiff came to an agreement later permitting the attachment to be discharged.

Simon Goodman and Sheriff Knot sued Famous Players Lasky Corp., in the Supreme Court yesterday for $800 alleged to have been owing by the defendant to James Cruse, as director at Hollywood, Cal., last June when Goodman sued Cruse here for $258 and got an attachment against any sums due him by the defendant. It is alleged that the defendant owed Cruse two weeks’ salary and the suit asks that the money be turned over to the Sheriff.

The Fox Vaudeville Co., has filed an answer in the Supreme Court to the suit of George Beranger for breach of contract. The answer drawn by Saul E. Rogers alleges that the defendant made two contracts with Beranger by which he was engaged as film director, and that he was discharged for cause on June 11 last. It is alleged that he persistently refused to render services to the best of his ability, refused to obey instructions and was “generally insubordinate and rebellious.” It is alleged that he failed to cooperate, caused chaotic conditions to arise in the defendant’s studios, and “acted generally as a disturbing influence in the business of the defendant.” It is charged that after commencing to direct “The Golden Seventeen,” and after engaging all the characters and the cast and starting the picture, Beranger refused to continue with the work, secreted the original scenario of the play, and refused to return it, “by reason of which the defendant was compelled to pay increased, unnecessary, wasteful and extravagant items and expenses.”

Here's An Idea

Natl Board of Review Official Suggests Way of Opposing Censorship

Orrin G. Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Review, comes forth with an idea on censorship and how it can be avoided.

"The only real issue lying behind the clamor for state censorship," says Mr. Cocks, "is that of taking care of the amusement of young people.

Every exhibitor recognizes that there is a real idea behind this group of people. It is worth while to convince parents that real thought is being devoted to this part of the public. It is simply stirring up trouble to set your teeth against any local ordinances which will regulate the attendance, at the theaters, of unaccompanied children. This attitude of fairness eliminates any group who may become active opponents.

"The idea here suggested is that the exchange men, and the exhibitors in the exchange centers and the larger cities of the various states, actually undertake the regular production of entertainments composed of selected scenes, like the Boston, Minneapolis, Detroit, Des Moines, Milwaukee, Atlanta, Denver and Dallas may learn something from the action taken in such cities as Omaha, Salt Lake City and Providence, allowing lines of friendly cooperation in young people's and family entertainments.

The recent action of the New England Mayors gathered in conference with the National Board of Review will reveal the opinions as well as the officials. Their resolutions show that they believe in the principle of special entertainments for young people and the family as well as their position toward state censorship."

In this connection, as noted recently, the Board of Review is approving the film selected by the Children's Matinee Assn., Inc., for their Children's matinée.

Deposits were asked for to safeguard the scheme, and a committee was formed to carry it through in Scotland. A copy of the scheme was forwarded to the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Asso., and the Kinematograph Reuter's Society, with a recommendation that they give it early consideration with a view to making it applicable to the whole of the United Kingdom.

Goldwyn's "Earthbound" opened the Royal Opera House, before a pretty distinguished audience. The picture was accorded a mixed reception. Some of the critics, casually attacked it, and a few praised. The applause at the fall of the curtain was very lukewarm. The film will not cause anything of a sensation here unless Goldwyn gets busy with some very lively exploitation.

F. B. O. gave a farewell dinner to Carl Laemmle. In a bright speech Laemmle made a sporting offer to the departures, promising to pay all expenses of an American trip for the two salesmen, and the wives thereof, who showed the best booking figures over a fixed period.

Last week-end a farewell was also given to Milton E. Hoffman, who was presented with a gold cigarette case by the famous Lasky British studio staff.

Adrian Johnson, late of Fox, who has been with Alliance here, severed his connection with that concern. He is going to Rome to take over the editorship of the American production section of the Unione Cinematografica Italiana. U. C. I., intend to get firmly established in the American market at an early date, according to Johnson.

Germany meanwhile is getting a strangefold on the Italian market. This has led to an appeal by German pictures, which find such favor in the eyes of the public that Italian producers are having bookings for exhibitions in favor of German stuff.

Exhibitors and newspaper men are up in arms against the mismanagement of trade shows here. Invitations to these shows are distributed broadcast, and if a popular film is to be shown, the theater will be packed out with boys and children to the exclusion of critics and viewers. Some companies always reserve their pictures for the critics; others let them take their chance, and a journalist or exhibitor arriving just before time will find standing room only notices out.

U. B. O. to Produce

Will Enter News Reel Field—Details of the Plan Not Yet Finally Determined

J. J. Murdock of the United Booking Offices is the authority for the statement that the U. B. O. plans to enter the news reel field and that a new subsidiary would be formed to take care of the new project. According to Murdock, details of the plan have not as yet been settled, but it was learned that the project, involving existing news reels and also the launching of new ones, is not planned to confuse the showings of the proposed films to the houses asked by the U. B. O., but to offer them for general distribution.

One news reel man when informed of the move yesterday said it was very interesting but that none of the news reels were making money on their own way with the only possible exception being New York. It was well known that this had an advantage because of the price at which it secured its raw stock.

It is said that Lynch is after more theaters in this section and that the Capital will start shortly. Oklahoma is to be faced by the anti-Sunday operation, and possibilities of censorship in the spring.

Mr. Friend Resigns from F. P. L. Subsidiaries, Too—What They Are

Arthur S. Friend's severance of ties with Famous Players-Lasky is intended designed to be a complete one. He has resigned as an officer of various Famous Players-Lasky subsidiaries as well as from the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. of New York and New Jersey.

Mr. Friend announced yesterday his retirement from these various affiliated companies and thus brought to a close the list of corporations in which Famous Players are interested. In these companies he holds the position of treasurer, with the exception of the John D. Williams Pro-\bs Co., of which he is president.

Mr. Friend represents the B. F. Holding Corp., which operates the New York, the New York Roof and the Criterion theaters; the Star Amusement Corp., which controls property in Indiana on which a theater is to be built; the Exceptional Reality Co., which owns Shea's Criterion Buffalo. He represents as treasurer the Famous Players-Missouri.

Two More Theaters

Portland, Ore.—Jensen and Von Herberg announce the completion of plans for two new theaters, one at Boise, Ida., to cost $250,000, and another at Great Falls, Mont., to cost $500,000. With their completion the Jensen firm will have one or more theaters in every important city in the Northwest.

A branch office of Associated First National to supply exhibitors in Southern and Eastern Oregon has been opened.

L. O. Lukan, northwest director for First National, will be in general charge. An appropriation of $20,000 has been made to cover salaries for the first year. Offices have been secured at Ninth and Burnside Sts. According to Lukan practically all the available franchises have been granted, and not more than three will be conferred in the territory covered by the new branch. Jensen and Von Herberg, it is said, refused an offer of $386,000 for the First National franchise rights in this territory last spring.

N. W. Strike Ends

Seattle—The strike of operators and musicians in the Jensen and Von Herberg theaters was settled on Tuesday. The new contract is to continue in effect for two years and the men go back to work on the old wage scale and old working conditions, except that the contract calls for a six-day week. Unibin men who refused to strike originally will be reinstated in the union.

The strike in the Northwest has been a long and bitter one. It is said to have been the direct cause for the failure of the Klikto theater in Butte, Mont., because of the boycott declared on the theater by the trade unions, in sympathy with the strikers.

Laemmle Talks

Finds European Conditions Such That American Producers Need Have No Fear

"If I went to Europe for a rest, I am coming back to the United States for a crisis, not a vacation," Sir Alexander Laemmle, president of Universal, just returning from a four-months' trip to England and the continent, before leaving Wednesday for the coast. "Europe has lost most of its zest for the traveler. There is no night life and there is nothing to do after the theater but go home."

"One of my purposes in going abroad was to see for myself what was the status of American films abroad. I made a very satisfactory arrangement for releasing Universal pictures in England, but owing to the system at present in vogue and the comparatively small number of theaters a film produced here has very little appeal. It was released in England for from 12 to 18 months. (Even British-made pictures are held back for this period.) The war slowed up building in England far more than it did in America. Very few theaters have been built since the war. If they had the number of theaters which they could comfortably use, there would be no piling up of films in England as there is at present."

"British-made pictures are not yet a really serious competition to our own. British producers have not acquired the knack of making pictures which they can honestly advertise under the fact that their pictures are so wonderful stories to the screen in the way that the American producers do. ith is quoted as follows, his remarks prefaced by the following: “D. W.
Griffith is bolder than any of the others to come out of New York.”

When I film a picture with a New England setting,” says Griffith in the Times article, “I want to film it in New England and have it right.
I want to show in a suburb of Los Angeles among palm trees and mesquite. If I need palm trees, it is only a two days run from here to the coast of Florida. Picture producers are eager for new settings, and there is a wealth of them within easy striking distance of Times Square. The territory around Los Angeles has been filmed to death. There is a little stream of water which is used so much that the producers have to stake off their claims on its banks to keep from photographing one another. Sometimes three companies are found shooting along its banks at once.

“Here in the East are all the properties and backgrounds, interior or exterior, that we require for luxurious settings—New York is the metropolitan and the home of wealth.
Also here is the home of many of the best actors, the best artisans, the best and the newest in theatrical production. In the future I can’t see any center more possible for the picture producer who seeks the best of everything to score artistic successes.”

“Victory Parade” at Strand

The Strand this week is showing “The Victory Parade” taken in Paris on July 14, 1919, by Prisma. The picture is in natural color and was shot on almost the same spot used by Leon Gaumont who made a picture with the same title. Gaumont’s picture is in three colors and requires special apparatus to project it. Pris-ma’s, however, can be shown through a standard machine. The pictures are entirely distinct, the only similarity being in title.

ant reason why British productions are not yet on a par with American ones is the fact that the British producer has been unwilling or unable to spend money on his productions. Great Britain has a wonderful variety of dancing and acting, and they lack the time and money to spend to turn them into first-class productions.

While some British films may have been more or less successful, they have not been able to match the success of American films. For example, a few years ago, several British films were produced but they did not really match the success of American films. Today, however, the British film industry has improved and the films produced are more successful. The reason for this is that the British film industry has been able to invest more money and time in the production of films, which has allowed them to produce better-quality films.

In conclusion, the British film industry has improved in recent years and has been able to produce films that are more successful than in the past. However, there is still room for improvement, and the industry can continue to grow and develop.

Over 13 Plays Tried in Supreme Court—Pat Casey Defendant

A suit brought in 1916 by the Hill Co., Beatrice M. and Ceci-ille, against Pat Casey, the Pro- vince Amusement Co. and the Bio- lon Co., for an accounting has been tried before Supreme Court Justice Hotchkiss, who has reserved his judgment and has given the attorneys a month, to work out the details of the settlement. Thereafter the Stuart Quimby directors' meetings would be held in the New York City, at the Winter Garden. The plaintiffs are general counsel for the corporation, which is controlled by the Stu- art Quimby Co., WID'S Louis, their men at the Bar, and their position is generally conceded to be a strong one.

Blackton Signs Lady Diana

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

London—Commodore J. Stuart Blackton has placed under contract Lady Diann Duff Cooper, formerly Lady Diana Manners. She will appear in four Blackton-made productions which will be made at the Famous Players-Lasky studios. Commodore Blackton sails for New York on Wednesday, returning to this country toward the end of December.

Lady Diana Manners is the titled English noblewoman with whom D. W. Griffith was negotiating some time ago. She has been termed the most beautiful woman in England. Her family made objections to her proposed appearance in pictures and it is their stand in the matter which is understood to have been the reason for the falling through of the plan.

What's to Be Done?

Important and interesting ideas on the outlook in view of existing business conditions from notables in the industry will be printed within the next few days.

The plaintiff alleged payments were made only as "Lord Chumley," $2,173; "St. Days," $2,100; "Strongheart," $2,100, and "Classmates," $2,400. The plaintiff alleged that more than $5,000 had been unaccounted for, that Casey assigned the right to the plays to the Protective Am- ment Co., which was controlled, the latter disposed of it to Bigna, "without the plaintiff's knowing in order to so manufacture the f as to withhold payments from plaintiff."

The defendants deny that an accounting is due and also deny that the films were made from all the picture. Testimony taken in behalf of plaintiff in California included examination of H. W. Schmidt, in charge of the General Film San Francisco exchange subseq to the agreement and had known of the filming of some of the picture. Los Angeles—The Times quotes Fairbanks as follows: "Of course we're not going to quit pictures. We expect to make one more picture each year, and we leave for Europe immediately, probably the first of February. I'm going to make 'The Three Musketeers' over there, and Miss Goldwyn has three titles, any one, perhaps two, of which she may decide to make. One of these, and perhaps the only one, will be 'Little Lord Fauntleroy,' to be filmed, of course, in England."

...starring the Talmadge sisters each has approximately one year more of operating under the new agreements the two stars will be identified solely with the exhibitor organization for a total of four more years. Exhibitor officials of Associates First National Pictures regard the renewal of the contract as an endorsement of the co-operative principles of the new classy plan.

This is the first big contract held by First National at the start of its co-operative plan and renewed after the big franchise had been established and put into operation nationally. This, according to officials of the organization, is significant in revealing the opinion of a producer as prominent as Mr. Schenck about future methods of producing and marketing special feature attractions.

Several other distributing units have made flattering offers to Schenck for the Talmadge productions.

McKay Guest of Honor

John W. McKay, general manager of Mayflower was the guest of honor at a little informal luncheon yesterday at the "Dutchman's" on 42nd St., in observance of his first year as the M. of Mayflower. singing the feasibility of applying to motion pictures projection the invention he has worked out and proved successful for the sending of still photographs by telegraph.

At the invitation of Harry Levey, Belin visited the studios with a view to seeing whether or not this idea could be applied to transmitting motion pictures by telegraph, so that a news event occurring in one city, is immediately flashed to another city by this apparatus, where it is developed and shown on the screen almost simultaneously with its making.

Belin declared that such an apparatus could be made. He said that it would be similar to that by which he transmits regular photographs, that the grooves would have to be much smaller than those needed for transmitting still photographs. They would, he said, have to be about one-twentieth of a millimeter in size. Belin declared that, since a film is only a succession of still photographs all that would be necessary when the size of the frame had been regulated, would be to shoot a succession of pictures over the apparatus.

Belin, who has been in America for six weeks, under the auspices of the N. Y. World, had intended returning to France the latter part of this week. He agreed, however, to make arrangements to remain here until early December, and devote his extended stay to adapting the principle of telephotography to cinema-photography.

Jerome Storm has engaged James Abbe to do special art work on the new Lillian Gish production for Prohman Amusement.

Latter to Distribute Six More Features Besides "Truant Husband"

—Other Plans

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Ray R. Rockett, president of the Rockett Film Corp., is back in Los Angeles from New York where he closed a distributive contract with the Hodkinson Corp. for "The Truant Husband" and an additional feature a month. Rockett has some ambitious plans for production under way. He plans to put on a series of five-reel westerns and also a series of short subjects dealing with life in America. This latter series is designed to show the ideals of American life and will be taken from incidents in early colonial times. Three will be in one and two reel form.

North Back from St. Louis

Tom North has returned from St. Louis where he worked on exploitation for "The Woman in His House," a Louis Mayer special with Mildred Harris Chaplin. This means an enlargement of Associated Producers' annual output as Sullivan will produce four pictures annually, beginning with Spring and Summer releases in 1921. Associated with Sullivan will be Laubert Hillyer, who has written most of and directed all of the William S. Hart productions since Hart left the Biograph last year. Sullivan personally will write his stories and continuities, and co-operate with Hillyer in direction.

At Broadway Theaters

Strand

If the Sunday crowds seeking to gain admission to the Strand to see the Robert Louis Stevenson super feature "Kismet" can be taken as a reflection, all records for this house will be broken this week. Manager Joe Frankett has succeeded Gladys Walton in the presentation of this feature with an elaborate prologue filled with oriental music and set off by a splendid Far Eastern atmosphere, including the camel, goat and donkey of Arabian Nights fame. The set is a street in Baghdad and is startling in its realism and lighting effects. First the crowds are seen winding their way here and then after which the oriental dancing number is staged. This is followed by Joseph Martin, who in the character of Hajji Mags, "The Love Song of Damascus." Due to the length of "Kismet," it was necessary to eliminate the usual conventional features of the bill. The score is an elaborate one and is only rendered.

Capitol

One of the most interesting bills of the season. After the overture "Capriccio Italiano" there is a charming ballet "Carnival" consisting of a dance by three performers to the accompaniment of two of the Schuman-Heink Carnival compositions. It is splendidly done, the lighting effects being particularly beautiful. Then comes Capitol News with some excellent Pathe production, the opening of the "Faut" followed by the feature "The Penalty." Organ solo continues.

Rialto and Rivoli

Unchanged except for the musical numbers from last week's presentation. The features have been switched from each house.

Cuts and Flashes

Joe Weil is now handling publicity for Baumer Films, Inc.

George Probert and Al J. Kelley are co-directing Viola Davis in "Sorrentina."

Myrte Stedman is one of three featured players in a new Hodkinson production, "The Tiger's Coat."

The new Buck Jones picture, "Just Pals," is completed at the Fox Hollywood studios.

Betty Francisco will have the leading feminine role in the second sequel, "Willie Prod, Partners of the Title."

London Chat

An American, well known in the industry, sends the following interesting letter to this publication: Conditions are very peculiar, over here at the present time, producers have been making pictures by dozens, and have not been able to sell them outside of the British Isles—result—all their money is tied up. Of course the booking system is to blame for this. Our friend Faulkner of the Mail is trying to break up this system for his box by starting a campaign against American pictures. I am sending you a few of his notices, he has been shooting them across every day for the past 3 weeks, it wouldn't be a bad idea to knock the block booking in the head, but I think he is going after the right way. Ninety per cent. of the American productions are bad, and all British pictures are good, that is his view. I haven't seen a good picture since I've been over here.

It's remarkable how quickly Americans turn British, as soon as they reach these shores. And this country is a God-send for a lot of American cameramen and near directors. There are more than a few interested in this country in any part of the world. In America they either turned the camera crank or put the numbers on the slate.

Bryant Washburn has just left for New York. He had wonderful luck, the weather was with him all the way. He took all of his exteriors at a time when the weather is rotten, but whenever he went out to shoot it was beautiful. In the future the Englishman will refer to his beautiful weather in September and prove it by Washburn's picture. E. A. Rolfe arrived a few days ago, don't know his plans.

With this letter came two clippings from the Faulkner column. The one here the caption is "Silly Films Sent Back to U. S.—Too Stupid, for Our Kinemas—Sausage Made." The other "Films, from U. S. Uncal Pictures of Life." Sheehan on Coast

Los Angeles—Winfield R. Sheehan is here.

Again a Studio?

A company known as the Ferndale Film Studios has purchased a tract of land at Brookhaven, Suffolk county, Long Island, and local inhabitants are of the opinion that a studio will be erected on the site.

John Semler is understood to be interested in a project for Rockville Center. It has also been reported that Robert Bortman would build on a site not very distant from that controlled by Semler. None of these projects has as yet crystallized.

In the Sunny South

Atlanta—A well known picture man says: "Legitimate (musical and dramatic) is shot to pieces. Vandervile and pictures are cehasing in—especially since the election is over. People are paying 25-30 and 50c for a good picture, Vandervile or a combination of the two and passing the $2 and $2.50 attractions up. "Money is tight—no loans on autos, real estate or much of anything. The silk shirt era is over."

The Independent Theater

The following letter has been received:

To: Wid's Daily:

"Referring to your article in Monday's issue calling your readers' attention to the need of an independent theater for producers who are unable to place their pictures on Broadway, I will call your attention to the article in the same issue covering the incorporation recently of the Better Picture Circuit. In one paragraph of this article in which the plans of the Circuit are briefly outlined, it is stated that the new theaters will be financed by the Better Picture Circuit wherever it is necessary to complete the circuit and these theaters turned over to exhibitors on a fair and equitable basis.

"We heartily agree with you that one of the most urgent needs is a Broadway showing for worthwhile productions, and we have included in our plan of immediate action the erection of a theater in the heart of the Broadway district for the launching of worthwhile productions and independent theaters in the district as the demand warrants it."

"Yours cooperatively,"

J. A. QUINN.

It Seems Strange

Figure this out for yourself: The New York American this week is sponsoring "No Accident Week." A fleet of 20 big motor trucks, each bearing the gigantic figure of a man rushing at breakneck speed and the warning 'What's Your Hurry' on each, is parading up and down 5th Ave. and Broadway every day, attracting considerable attention.

Wally Reid made an auto called "What's Your Hurry" for Paramount which played at the Rialto in Atlantic. But over on Fifth Ave. they sometimes juggle showings at the Rialto and Rivoli to keep a picture on Broadway for two weeks. Which made some of the crowd wonder why the Reid film wasn't brought back.

Do they say these are the days of advanced picture exploitation?

New Fox Plans

Theater for Los Angeles and 12 Specials Yearly, According to Sheehan Interview

Los Angeles—A local paper publishes an interesting interview with Winifred Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film. One announcement concerns the plans of the Fox organization with the building of a theater here in which Fox pictures will be shown with appropriate settings and music.

The expansion includes the making of 12 pictures a year, with all-new casts. The western studio is being improved with a new stage and other features, and at present there are seven companies and five comedy units at work. This number is to be increased, and Sheehan expects to sign up additional players and directors during his stay here, which is to extend over a month's time.

Sheehan is reported as saying he has signed Thomas Burke, author of "Limehouse Nights" tales, on a two-year contract, to write scenarios exclusively for Fox.

The success of "Over the Hill" in New York was commented on by Sheehan. He is further quoted as saying the Lyric Theater has been engaged for 26 weeks for the picture.

Will F. Davis Dies

Will F. Davis, the director, died suddenly on Tuesday night. He will be buried at the National Cemetery and Parlor, 14 E. 39th St., tomorrow.

Mooser Leaving

It was reported yesterday that George Mooser of Goldwyn Pictures had resigned, effective Monday, but had remained until a picture on which exteriors were being made in the East was completed.

It was impossible to connect with Mooser yesterday. For some time he has had an important position with Goldwyn in charge of scenario and production work in the East. His successor has not been decided upon.

Mooser, as is known, is production manager for Messmore Kendall, who is making a series with Vivian Martin.

Wallace Beery, villain of many a cinema success, fairly outdoes himself as the terrible Magua in "The Last of the Mohicans," made for Associated Producers by Maurice Tourneur from the Cooper novel known to every schoolboy in the land.—Adv.

SOME IDEAS

Here are some ideas as to what should be done to better conditions in the industry:

These opinions are from some of the leading executives, and are replies to the following communication:

Every industry in this country apparently is taking steps to readjust—return to a pre-war basis. Every industry excepting our own. Complaints are general that production is being retarded. Independent production is being cut down to practically nothing—according to coast information. Reports from various communities indicate that exhibitors are being hit and that business is far from what it should be.

What in your opinion should be done to meet and improve existing conditions?

Mastbaum’s Idea

The over-production in our business has ceased, and the manufacturers are now devoting their time to making only the best pictures. Our whole country is undergoing a change, due to the abnormal conditions, and very shortly that readjustment will have taken place. That readjustment, and the return to a normal production of pictures, will work for the good of the business. Prices, both as to cost of films and cost of admission, will return somewhat towards their previous levels, all of which will insure a speedy return of prosperity to the motion picture industry.

JULES E. MASTBAUM.

Chaplin Talks

Says He Will Not Retire—Leaves For Coast Monday to Finish 1st Nat'l Contract

Charlie Chaplin broke his long silence yesterday and issued a statement in which he announced his intention of starting work on a new picture as soon as he reaches the coast the end of next week.

Nathan ‘Farok, Chaplin’s attorney stated last night that Chaplin plans to start work immediately in order to wind up First National contract. Here is Chaplin’s statement:

The recent rumors that have been spread broadcast in this city and abroad regarding my retirement from my business and never henceafter to produce pictures are grossly unfounded. Any such statements written or spoken are without authenticity and without authority from me.

The fact of the matter is that I am leaving New York on Monday, Nov. 22 for California and immediately upon my arrival there, will begin work on a new picture.

Baxter Succeeds Wales

Loews—Leeds L. Baxter has succeeded Wellington Wales as business manager for the Marshall Neilan organization. He left the Fairbanks company to join Neilan.

New Low Level for F. P. Stock

Famous Players common on the stock exchange yesterday closed at 46, a new low level for that issue. Thirty-five hundred shares changed hands. The preferred closed at 71, a drop of seven points over the previous day’s quotations.

Loew’s, Inc., closed at 1814%, a decline of 1 1/4 over Tuesday’s close. The market was generally depressed.

Sixteen Franchise Holders at St. Louis Meeting—May Distribute Greene’s Pictures

(By wire, to WID’S DAILY)

St. Louis—Sixteen franchise holders of Federated Film Exchanges of America are in session at the Stater here. One of the matters under discussion is an increase in membership.

It is learned that among the features which in all likelihood Federated will distribute nationally will be "The Good Bad-Wife," "The Wild Fawn," and "The Servant in the House," which WALTER E. GREENE now controls.

Eliminate Poor Pictures

The only safe and sure way to meet and improve existing conditions, is to eliminate the cheap, inferior product. The producer must set his house in order so that he is not swayed by the current, is away from what he can do best, is not tempted by the quick and easy. The producer must be at his full capacity of producing pictures. He must believe in the pictures he produces, and the public must believe in them. Proctor Names Majority of Stoll's Representatives

Ralph Proctor, general manager of the Stoll Film Corp., returned yesterday from his trip to the West. Proctor's journey primarily was for the purpose of selecting or branch managers. Asked if he heard any complaints from exhibitors as to business, he said he had not, but added that as far as he had observed the attendance at theaters was excellent.

Koplar Answers

Assents Stock of E. F. Missouri Corp. is Worth 25 Cents on the Dollar

(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

St. Louis—Harry Koplar has filed his answer in the Circuit Court to the suit filed against him by Famous Players-Missouri Corp., which seeks to secure control of six theaters of the Koplar string. Koplar makes the assertion in his answer that the stock of the corporation is worth only 25 cents on the dollar.

The question of the stock's value is apparently a pivotal point in the entire controversy since the Famous Players' subsidiary wants Koplar to accept $50,000 in notes as part payment in the deal. The six theaters involved are the Gravos, Cherokee, Novelty, Royal, Juniata and one other. Koplar also demands immediate settlement on all his other theaters, including King's and the Fershing.

Curwood Gives Warning

James Oliver Curwood has warned that trading to be advisable that only four of his pictures are guaranteed by him, and have his endorsement as to their merit and standing. These four pictures are "Back to God's Country," "The River's End," "Nomads of the North" and "The Golden Snare" (now in the making). All of these stories are from Curwood's original novels under his own name. They are all being exploited by First National and are the only Curwood stories to be found on First National's program.

More Ideas

Executives give ideas on how to reach Pre-War Basis

Below will be found additional extensions of opinion by various executives in the industry as to what must be done to return the business to a pre-war basis. Additional opinions will be published in a subsequent issue.

"Don't Get Panicky"—Low

It's right. Don't get panicky. Here is no reason for it. Our business this year is way ahead of last year's business.

MARCUS LOEW.

Eliminate "Dirty Competition"

Where reports indicate certain relations of production by picture making-distributing companies, Associated Producers will not only make a full 30 pictures scheduled last year as output for the current year through having an eighth producer and probably a ninth and tenth producer added.

Unfortunately in spots the picture business is still yellow, and it is unpanicky and cowardly. Most of the disorders of the business are due to the producers and distributors, not to the exhibitors who now as well as in the past make profits enough to command patronage and lose money on inferior products. Big pictures are worth less rentals and poor pictures smaller rentals. Aggressive exhibitors supplied with good product are now not available for commerce, rentals, or show.

P. B. WARREN, Associate Producer.

No Curtailment With Christie

Speaking for comedies alone we are maintaining the same production schedule as for the past two years, while we are three months ahead in releases which we always try to maintain, that fact will not cause a curtailment of activities in this department, for despite the fact that our production schedule is the same as the previous year as salaries and wages which by far the largest share of our expenses have not increased and very few commodities that we have shown any appreciable rise in price.

C. H. CHRISTIE.

Regarding Famous

Stock and Its Decline Arthur S. Friend Has Something to Say

The decline on the Stock Exchange of Famous Players securities led to much comment in film circles and yesterday Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of that corporation when asked for a statement said: "There is nothing in the condition of the corporation to warrant the decline. Our affairs were never in better shape."

When informed that certain reports had been issued affecting the concern he said: "Yes, we have heard reports that we intended to pass over this and have also another report relative to the failure of our company to secure the productions of two well known stars—which is not true. Our banking affairs are in splendid shape, with a greater line of credit than heretofore. Our policy precludes re-leasing productions other than those made in our own studios. Incidentally we understand that these reports or some of them, have emanated from a former employee of Famous Players."

Yesterday the stock was quoted:

Common at 48½ and preferred, 71.

so they relinquish their rights. The play has been shewn every year except one since it was first staged, and in that year the withholding of the play was contested to. Mr. Klavw states that after Mr. Erlanger had engaged a cast for the play for this season and had started rehearsals he abandoned it and discharged the members of the company. Mr. Klavw said that negotiations are pending for the sale of the film and that if the play is not produced this year Klavw & Erlanger will not share in the proceeds of the sale. He asks that Mr. Erlanger be compelled to account for the loss if it occurs.

An effort was made yesterday to secure some additional information regarding the film rights to "Ben Hur" from John Larkin, attorney for Henry Wallace, relative of General Lee Wallace, author of the novel. Mr. Larkin, however, refused to talk about the matter.

David W. Griffith's name has been frequently mentioned in connection with a film version of "Ben Hur." At his offices yesterday it was said that since he first endeavors to secure the rights a year ago, nothing has been done. It is understood that Griffith dropped the matter when $50,000 was asked for the rights.

Howells Owns Foreign Rights

David P. Howells calls attention of the trade to the fact that he controls for the foreign market the following United Picture productions: "The Light of Western Stars," "The Man in the Open," "A Man's Fight," "Adele" and "Playthings of Passion."

W. G. William of Saffern, N. Y., recently brought the receiver's rights in these pictures.

Supremely Great

Acting in a Picture That Grips You

That's the Opinion of the Press Regarding Lionel Barrymore in "The Devil's Garden"—Whitman Bennett's Presentation of His Personally Supervised Production—Directed by

Kenneth Webb

STORY GRIPS YOU

"Lionel Barrymore's name stands for art. There probably is no other screen player who could portray with such human force the role that falls to Barrymore in 'The Devil's Garden.' Doris Rankin also has the instinct that makes for greatness. Her perception of the part makes it a living thing of tenderness and appeal. In a single picture there never has been greater acting than that of Mr. and Mrs. Barrymore in this production. From the earliest scenes the story grips you by its effectiveness. It is distinctly not to be overlooked."—Chicago Daily Journal.

SUPREMELY GREAT ACTING

"Able acting, something like supremely great acting, is done by Lionel Barrymore and his wife. The action lives and has breath because stirred and swept by love, passion, violence, universal human elements, the qualities that enter this masterpiece. Producer, director, photographer, the whole cast is to be congratulated."—Chicago Daily News.

GENIUS—INSPIRATION

"Score another for Lionel Barrymore. The Barrymore genius of honest, inspired acting, puts over 'The Devil's Garden.' Barrymore is a great actor. He can play any part and reach right out from the screen and take your mind right out of your body and go round on the silver sheet with it in his pocket. The star's remarkable performance makes the story a big thing. As Barrymore does it, the thing is poetry, epic poetry."

—Chicago Herald-Examiner.

STAMP OF THE MASTER

"The name of Lionel Barrymore carries both urge and assurance. You know the stamp of the master will be on the role he portrays. Only Mr. Barrymore could bring out the romance and pathos and undercurrent of gripping tragedy, which is what he does in this picture."—Chicago Daily Tribune.

Keeping Busy

Al Lichtman Denies He Has Joined Jensen and Von Herberg

"Al" Lichtman, director of sales for Famous, is busy these days denying reports that he has resigned. The best of these reported resignations appears this week in a Chicago trade publication, and is to the effect that Lichtman is going to join Jensen & Von Herberg in Chicago. Lichtman was busy yesterday wiring the editor a denial and also wiring Von Herberg to make the same request, "If the editor saw me talking to Von, he'd say today as to what should be done by the industry to reach a pre-war basis." Additional opinions will be published in Monday's issue.

"Unite," Said Griffith

General reports from all over the country indicate a trend toward readjustments in business of all kinds. There is no reason why the motion picture industry should be an exception to this. The sure way to meet existing conditions is to meet them. Where genuine co-operation could benefit the industry there should be co-ordinate action, but let us sincerely seek to do it in such a manner as to stand together in our mutual protection against outside interference.

Personally, I find the picture business in better average condition than many of their businesses. If readjustments and readjustments are in the air, let us not set at them upon a foundation of future distribution of the burdens and a proper share of the losses which will be a safe vision of earnings so that both producers and exhibitors can meet the new conditions and carry a reserve which is necessary to keep the industry in a healthy and growing state. Whether or not any branch of the industry attempts to do anything else than meet these new requirements is to start something which leads to ruination for all in this business. (Continued on Page 3)

Worthy

William Brandt of the Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce is worthy over the statement issued by Walter A. Schlack of the Downtown Chamber of Commerce, Schlack was quoted in WID'S DAILY as saying that there were "100 fire traps on the East Side." Brandt declares vehemently that Schlack doesn't know what he is talking about. "Why," says he, "there are only 30 houses on the East Side and some of them are very modern indeed."

Betty Blythe Coming East

Betty Blythe is coming east as soon as "The Queen of Sheba" is completed by J. Gordon Edwards for Fox. It will not prove surprising if she is later starred by Fox.

Moreno Going Abroad

Although the new company will manage the affairs of both subsidiaries, it is not planned to discontinue the brand names. For this reason, Swedish Biograph and Skandia Films will continue to be made. This is the company which of Nils Boveng is a director.

Cook Leaves Fox

William H. ("Bill") Cook, one of the old timers in the film game, is leaving the Fox organization to devote all of his time to free lance publicity. Cook was with Vitaphone as far back as 1912 when he was a member of the scenario staff under Commodore J. Stuart Blackton.

Toldeo, O.—H. C. "Doc" Horster, manager, directing of the Pantheon, backed by the combined influence and co-operation of three principal dailies here and the staffs of the Allhambra and Pantheon theaters is putting forth every effort to make the showing of "Earthbound" a successful one.

No hurrah or ballyhoo methods are being used in exploiting the picture but the widest publicity is being given in a dignified manner to the nature of the subject. The promotion at the Pantheon will be identical with that put on when the picture ran at the Astor theater, in New York.

Horster is laying great plans for the showing of "Kismet" which he has booked for an early showing. He is going in for unusual and out-of-the-ordinary exploitation stunts.

Dallas—This city was somewhat excited—it was only for a short time—but there was the presence at the Adolphus Hotel of David Wark Griffith.

Joe Luctett, United Artists manager didn't think Mr. Griffith would come to Dallas without his knowledge, so he turned from him to show him with the result that "Griffith" was lodged in the town jail—as a guest of the city.

It's funny but some of the local papers printed interviews with the famous producer and some of the absurd statements that appeared in cold type aroused suspicions in film circles.

The man is believed to be John P. Daley and love for a certain young lady is said to be the cause of his flop. He promised to star her in pictures and all that sort of thing.

Oh yes, the alleged Daley had some cards printed and they read "David WORK Griffith."

In the Courts

The Appellate Term of the Supreme Court has upheld a verdict for Mae Murray in the Municipal Court suit by John J. Livingston. He sued for $966 on the ground that he was engaged as Miss Murray's personal representative to obtain film engagements for her and that she received $14,666 from the Perret Pictures for "Twin Pawns" and paid him only $500, whereas he was entitled to $1,446. Miss Murray testified that she made no agreement with Livingston but that he asked 10% of his week's salary, $5,000, and she paid it.

The American Cinema Corp. has filed an answer in the Supreme Court in a suit by Gillespie, Meade & Co., to recover money paid by the plaintiff in stock in the defendant for alleged misrepresentations. The answer alleges that the stock sold belonged to Walter F. Niebuhr and Harry Glaser, the principal stockholders, and not to the defendant, but admits receiving $1,500 for 1,500 shares sold by Niebuhr.

the long run. The matter of prices naturally becomes an issue in any capitalistic system which can only be determined by a study of the times and is not in my province to undertake any prophecy of the next few months may or may not bring forth, but let us be united to meet whatever may come and make upon our common sense and our unifying faith in the great motion picture industry.

D. W. GRIFFITH.

No Cause for Alarm—Lichtman
There is very little cause for alarm in the motion picture business. While it is true that in certain communities there has been a falling off in attendance during the past few weeks, it has not reached a dangerous stage.

While other industries are re-adjusting their affairs so as to return to a pre-war basis, it is absolutely impossible for this industry to go back to a pre-war basis. Most other industries have been operating on an abnormal scale and many of them are profiteering. The motion picture industry as a whole has not been profiteering. Perhaps a few exhibitors have made abnormal profits.

The production picture producers and distributors have not made unusual profits during the war or since. It is true that the theaters have enjoyed unprecedented profits during the last three years and that they have been charging higher admissions than ever before, but they have also been giving the public more for their money.

To my mind, it would be next to impossible to reduce the admission prices and the film rental charges to the same basis as prevailed prior to the war.

The industry as a whole, must constantly improve in order to hold the interest of the public, which means that the industry must create better pictures and that if the public is not to be led astray it must keep up their standards of exhibition and build better theaters. This cannot be done without obtaining the proper money, not from the public.

If we are in for a few months of “hard times,” let us meet the situation by eliminating waste and cut production to a point where the market will not be over-crowded. Let each organization analyze their expenditures closely and eliminate all extravagances.

The chief, however, is to keep on constructing better pictures. Let every producer endeavor to make bigger and better pictures.

By all means, do not reduce the admission prices, as admission prices are just about right in proportion to the cost of production. Know how they are being eroded by the majority of exhibitors. If an exhibitor’s standard is right, let him sit tight.

The entertainment is a necessity and is in a class with food and clothing. Motion pictures are surely the entertainment of the masses. One thing is certain—producers cannot afford to retrace to any appreciable degree and improve their standard of quality which is so necessary.

Therefore, if any re-action is going to take place, some exhibitors will have to be cut out with a necessary margin. However, I do not look forward to any great depreciation. In fact, I am looking forward to a very prosperous season in the motion picture business.

AL LICHTMAN
General Manager, Dept. of Distribution, Famous Players.

Two Excellent Remedies
At the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theaters, we have had no sign that business is falling of. Nor have I heard the production by high-class producers has been decreased. Of course, when there is a tightness of money the small man who operates on little capital is bound to be halted; but I do not believe that the really important production has been halted in any way. There are good pictures on the market and the co-operating theaters are getting them.

There are only two remedies for bad business, if there are motion picture theaters that are suffering. The first is good pictures and a good incident program. The second is honest advertising.

HUGO RIESENFEILD.

High Class Production Needed
Believe present tendency toward pessimism in industry principally result of hysteria, the resultant reaction from inflated war conditions and also due to recent political transitions. Production is greater than ever not in quantity, however, but in quality. The change is due to the developed public taste that now demands the finest in photoplays. The exhibitor is conscious of this demand and his selection is, and will be, more accurate. And the producer who may survive the coming season will also be conscious of this demand and meet it.

High class production in any business will always find a big market.

ALLEN HOLUBAR.

Why Not?

How Broadway Theaters Are Handling Their Shows for Thanksgiving Week

Here is how the Broadway theaters are handling their Thanksgiving week programs:

Capitol
At the Capitol, S. L. Rothapfel has built the musical program around the tercentenary of the landing of the Pilgrims and the celebration of Thanksgiving Day. The program will open with a Thanksgiving overture which includes a dramatic tableau and a choral interludium. The overture will be played by the Capitol Grand Orchestra, and is conducted by Ernie Raper, arranged from the Jubel Overture by Weber; "Hail the Pilgrim Fathers," by Chadwick, and the National Hymn. The Capitol Ensemble, which will give a choral interlude during the overture, is in charge of William Axt. An elaborate tableau including the ensembles and the Capitol Ballet Corps will be staged to represent the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock, the setting for which has been designed by John Wingers. A second number is a ballet from "Prince Igor." This will be danced by the Capitol Ballet Corp. A folk dance to the music of Victor Herbert's Wooden Shoe Dance will be done as a prelude to a quaint picture of the Isle of Marker, situated just off the coast of Holland. The feature will be "The Great Lover."

Rivoli
"All Comedy Week" will be celebrated at the Rivoli, when Roscoe Arbuckle will appear in "The Life of the Party." Falstaff is also on the bill, appearing in "Falstaff's Dream," a production of the New York Philharmonic and Ensemble with Emanuel List, basso profundo, in the role of Falstaff; a chorus of nine, and a group of dancers.

"A Tray Full of Trouble," and "They Forgot the Town," a scene, and the Rivoli "Pictorial" are other scenes. Besides the Falstaff number, the music program includes "The Bat" overture by Johann Strauss played by the orchestra under the direction of Frederick Stahliberg and Joseph Littau, and a special Thanksgiving ballet.

Criterion
George Fitzmaurice's "Idols of Clay" begins its second week at the Criterion.

The supplemental program arranged by Hugo Riesenfeld as a frame for the feature film reflects the atmosphere of the South Seas. "Life in the South Sea Islands" is the principal scenic offering and "South Sea Idol" is the stage prologue which builds into the feature attraction. Tschaikowsky's "Chanson sans Paroles" will be played by the orchestra. The Hula-Hula Theater will be the cartoon screen comedy.

Rialto
William D. Taylor's "The Furnace" will be the principal attraction at the Rialto.

Siefert, Miami Valley President
(by wire to WID'S DAILY)

Dayton, O.—The Miami Valley Exhibitors' League has elected John K. Siebert, president of the Dayton Film Co., president of the board of directors.

Saunders on Trip
Clay Saunders, director of exploitation for Famous Players, has left for a trip through the Middle West where he will visit the exchanges at Pittsburg, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit. He will be gone a week.

Returning Next Week
Marion Davies and her company will return to New York next week, having finished exteriors on "Brig's Play" in California. Interiors will be done in the East.

Another Attack
(by wire to WID'S DAILY)

Philadelphia — When all other sources have turned a deaf ear to his pet project of a New York staging of the Armament of Henry Richard as secretary of Pennsylvania State Board of Censor in place of Dr. Ellis P. Oberholtzer, his new ally, Carl E. Grammer, Rector of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in an open letter to the press headlined: "Will Governor Sproul Explain?" demands an explanation of the denunciation.

The letter which is a rash of his recent allegation that the change was promoted by motion picture interests concludes with the statement: "We watch Oberholtzer has been called off and our treasures are in danger." The name of Rev. Dr. Clifford G. Twomby, rector of St. James Church, Lancaster appears after that of Dr. Grammer at the end of the statement.

A Sunshine comedy entitled "His Wife's Caller," and the Rialto Magazine will be other screen attractions. The music program will have selections from Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" as an orchestral overture. Antonio Rocca, tenor, will sing an aria from "La Cioconda" by Ponchielli and Grace Hoffman, soprano, will sing the "Shadow Song" from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah." John Priest will play Fletcher's "Toccata in C" on the grand organ.

The Strand
The Strand is also preparing a special Thanksgiving number. The feature "Dinny" will be surrounded by the usual short subjects and musical numbers.

Lon Chaney’s Work Lifts This One

“THE PENALTY”
Goldwyn

DIRECTOR ................. Wallace Worsley
AUTHOR ..................... Gouverneur Morris
SCENARIO BY............. Charles Kenyon and Phillip Lonergnon
CAMERAMAN ............... Don Short

AS A WHOLE........ Somewhat gruesome with disappointing finish

STORY........... At times gripping, but weakened at conclusion

DIRECTION........... Skilful at times; probably did best possible with material
PHOTOGRAPHY ............. Excellent
LIGHTINGS ................ Very good CAMERA WORK ............. Splendid

PLAYERS...... Lon Chaney gives one of screen’s greatest performances; Ethel Grey Terry not convincing

EXTERIORS ................. Very well handled
INTERIORS .................. Excellent
DETAIL........... Carefully worked out. One or two titles bring unintended laughs
CHARACTER OF STORY........ Melodramatic; somewhat gruesome and heavy and wonderful characterization by Chaney will probably satisfy any audience

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......... 6,730 feet

Hats off to Lon Chaney! As “Blizzard,” the deformed ruler of the Barbary Coast’s underworld, he gives one of the screen’s greatest performances. It will be remembered long after “The Penalty” as a production may be forgotten—not because of the ability that Chaney shows in appearing as a legless individual, which in itself is a stunt unusually clever, but because of his facial expressions and general handling of an exceedingly difficult characterization. When he appeared as “The Frog” in “The Miracle Man” and unwound himself from his distorted appearance it was talked about for a long time. But this is bound to be forgotten by the excellence of the characterization that he gives in “The Penalty.”

There isn’t a great deal to be said about the production other than Chaney’s marvelous work. The story, which tells of how a boy, crippled and maimed by an unnecessary operation of a young surgeon, and who becomes the ruler of the underworld in Frisco, with a set determination to revenge himself for the injury perpetrated upon him, while making at times a gripping melodramatic story, fails at the finish. It is a serious question whether, because of the story, anything else might have been done. It is a question whether in the effort to show how “Blizzard” (Lon Chaney) pays the penalty of death for his various misdeeds, could have been avoided without giving the usual clap-trap “movie” finish. But it is entirely unlikely that a girl of the intelligence of Rose (Ethel Grey Terry) could have loved such an individual and whether after an operation, removing a clot from the brain, a person could be so changed as to become a cause for good rather than evil, and this happens in the production.

However, up to almost the very conclusion the gripping melodramatic incidents hold securely and Chaney’s work is so unusually fine that it will probably hold the production for all that is necessary.

Those in support of Chaney are uniformly satisfying, especially worthy of note being the characterization of the drug fiend by James Mason.

Talk About Chaney and Another Big Goldwyn Feature
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Play upon Chaney—he not only deserves it, but his previous work in a number of productions, especially in “The Miracle Man,” warrant this, and there isn’t any question but that Chaney’s work will make “The Penalty” a success, even at points where the production as a whole may not be particularly liked because of its gruesome nature. You can point out that Chaney gives one of the greatest performances ever known to the screen, and if your clientele likes stunts, use lobby displays and photographs in your advertising. Show Chaney as “Blizzard,” the legless villain-hero of Gouverneur Morris’ famous story. Morris’ name is also a possible asset for capitalization and the fact that the story ran in The Saturday Evening Post should also be dwelt upon.

If you have run some of the other big Goldwyn releases this season you can point out that “The Penalty” is another of the same strong type. Also mention that Goldwyn produced “Earthbound” and “Madame X,” and make a talking point that “The Penalty” is just as strong and interesting.

For catchlines: “See how the penalty was met!” “What is the greatest penalty that could be paid?” “See how the ruler of San Francisco’s underworld paid at the —— Theater.” “Remember Lon Chaney in ‘The Miracle Man?’ See his wonderful performance in ‘The Penalty’ at the —— Theater.”

Gentlemen:

"The Forbidden Thing" has lived up to its remarkable with one showing, it did within 315.25 of the year's record. An unusual opening does not always guarantee an unusual

While exhibitors can get staples of such quality, they need not fear control of their programs by any integers at any time.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 5,600 feet

Daniel Carson Goodman, who wrote "Hagar Revelly," has written, directed and produced "Thoughtless Women." Goodman has never before directed and at times this is rather manifest. Yet the entire production gives promise of something worth while to come.
Goodman has made an effort to be natural and to tell and do things in a life-like way without fuss and has fairly well succeeded. It isn't one of the biggest pictures of the year, nor one of the best, but taking it all in all, it is worth while, if for no other reason than for the naturalness that prevades the entire production.

There are several sequences which show a refreshing touch—one where Alma's mother receives at tea a social character who weakens and runs at the appearance of the husband, and another where, in an effort to determine whether or not she is loved by her hero, Alma counts the buttons on her shoe. Discovering, according to the count of "he loves me, he loves me not," that he doesn't, she quickly rips off a button. It is very cleverly done. There are one or two shots, however, where the production shows cheapness, although these are insufficient to mar the attraction as a whole.

The title is liable to be misleading, because generally it will be regarded as a sex picture. As a matter of fact, it tells simply and directly the happenings in the life of a young girl who is married by the heir of a great fortune so that he may secure funds. He is hardly recognized by his family who try to "frame" her as a jewel thief. In the end, it all works out satsisfactory, the little girl marrying the millionaire who was intended as the husband of her former husband's sister.

In a number of scenes Goodman has thrown to the winds all of the usual clap-trap and cheap melodrama that enters into so many productions of this nature.
There is a sequence where, disgusted with life and all that it holds, the little heroine plans suicide, but the usual melodramatic features are quite conspicuous by their absence.

Alma Rubens appears as the little East Side girl, without much knowledge of the world, and handles the part rather well, and at times remarkably so. The remainder of the cast is not particularly important except for Lunsden Hare.

Title May Mislead But Undeniably Has Box Office Value

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You have a good commercial title in "Thoughtless Women." If you can use this cleverly you can make an interesting number of tie-ups which, with the use of catchlines, should work out very advantageously.

While the production has none of the usual features of the sex drama, you had better make no promises along this line. Still the belief will prevail, unless you choose to deny it, that this picture is along the lines of those which the title would indicate.

You can talk about Alma Rubens and her recent release "The World and His Wife," and also point out that she appeared in "Humoresque."

Catchlines attracting attention might be framed along this line: "How many 'Thoughtless Women' do you know?" "Have you ever realized what harm a thoughtless woman can do?" "See what a thoughtless woman does in the Blank Theater." "See what a thoughtless woman did to Alma Rubens at the Blank Theater.

EXTERIORS ................. Some seashore stuff splendid—one shot particularly

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ............ 5,934 feet

Just why Allan Dwan called his first Asso. Prod. release "The Forbidden Thing" is difficult to figure out. So many better titles would have fitted. And there isn't any reason for the title selected. Surely it hasn't anything to do with the story shown. But otherwise Dwan has sincerely tried to do something worth while, and has practically succeeded. They make it a "movie" by introducing melodrama by the shooting of hero's wife thus opening the way for the clutch at the finish when the hero discovers that his true love is really the wife he needed, and that God has rewarded him for proving this to himself. The wife might easily have been taken out of the picture in some other way. For the shooting incident made unreal what was otherwise a very real, lifelike production.

The story tells of Abel Blake (James Kirkwood), giving up his fiancée Joan (Helen Jerome Eddy), through the wiles of Glory Prada (Marcia Manon), an habituée of a waterfront saloon. Later Joan marries Dave (King Baggott) and when he dies she lets Abel take her son after his wife has eloped with a circus man. In the end she returns to see her son, finds Abel loves her and everything ends happily.

The story is presented as if an old mender of nets was telling the happenings to a young girl, and the shot of this particular point is one of the most beautiful things not only of this picture but of many. It is exquisite. But the telling of any picture in this form somewhat loses, and this one is not an exception to this. Yet Dwan has turned out an unusually fine production, with excellent photography, mastery of detail, and while the killing off of the wife may be unnecessary, the average audience will probably not find this materially objectionable.

The entire cast is excellent and well fitted. Kirkwood gives an unusually fine performance and Marcia Manon, although overacting at times, makes the girl of the saloon natural enough, although it is difficult to figure how a man of Abel's nature could have responded to such a type of woman. There are several kiddies who are excellent.

Stick to Dwan's Name—It's Your Safest Bet

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Play up Allan Dwan's name. Its the biggest asset you have. The title may have possibilities for exploitation, but your safest bet is sticking to Dwan. Mention some of his other successes "Soldiers of Fortune," "In the Heart of a Fool," "The Scoffer" and tell them this is the best thing he has yet done. Besides you have the names of James Kirkwood, Helen Jerome Eddy and King Baggott, who are well known and in certain communities well liked.

Catchline such as this may be used "What is Life's Forbidden Thing?" "The Forbidden Thing" a Faith that Would Not Die, a Love that Was All-Conquering."

INTERIORS ................. Splendid sets
DETAIL ..................... Very good
CHARACTER OF STORY...... Innocent South Sea Island girl follows sweetheart to London where he finds her in an opium den
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION....... 7,230 feet

It is obvious that Ouida Bergere has written a story that would suit the kind of production that George Fitzmaurice wanted to make for the outstanding feature and the real attraction of "Idols of Clay" is the actual production. The early reels in which the action takes place on a South Sea island are beautiful to look at, if nothing else and incidentally the best of the story takes place on the island.
The picture despite its inconsistency in the latter reels has a popular appeal and since there had to be some break to allow the introduction of high life and opium dens, perhaps it will be overlooked.
The photography is another feature of "Idols of Clay." The lightings are always artistic and the camera work well judged. Director Fitzmaurice has elaborated on each situation in an extravagant fashion but each time it serves a purpose. There will be those, however, who will heartily disapprove of his blasphemous use of the crucifix and Bible for the purpose of showing how utterly hateful of God the character is.
Realism and force can be obtained without resorting to such extremes.

Both Miss Murray and Mr. Powell give splendid performances. Miss Murray is seen in a rather daring dance which intimates considerable more than it actually portrays, and later in the Limehouse opium den she does her best work.

Dion Holme’s unfortunate love affair with Lady Cray finally lands him on a South Sea island where he meets Faith Merrill, who believes the liquid her father brews for the natives to be holy water. Through Faith’s influence, Dion begins to “come back” and eventually leaves for London. After the death of her father, Faith manages to reach London where she seeks Dion who has become a famous sculptor and has been knighted.

Lady Cray attempts a reconciliation with Dion who repulses her, but later agrees to allow her to educate Faith. Lady Cray plans her revenge through Faith by teaching her the various vices which she herself enjoys, especially dope. A gorgeous banquet is arranged upon Dion’s return from Greece to show him Faith’s progress. After a daring dance Dion, disgusted, leaves the house. Later, repentant, he returns for Faith, but in the meantime Lady Cray has killed herself. Finally Dion finds Faith in an opium den. The ending shows them happy once more on the South Sea isle.

Undoubtedly A Box Office Attraction

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Not much doubt about it but that "Idols of Clay" will prove a big box office attraction. The story is incidental to the lavish production accorded it and the various appealing bits which can be promised contain really popular appeal. It’s the kind of a picture they will want to see from what they hear about it.
The title is attractive and advertised in connection with the statuary shown in the picture, will invite even for its decidedly sensuous appeal.

Because of its money-making possibilities it would be well to book the picture and even if you cater to a little more than ordinarily sensitive clientele, its artistic values and extravagant production will probably excuse its sex appeal. Miss Murray should be given prominence and her past successes can be mentioned.
A carefully prepared press sheet secured from Paramount will give you additional ideas for exploitation. Announce it as another George Fitzmaurice production.

EXTERIORS....Some good lumber camp scenes at opening

INTERIORS ......... Greenwich Village restaurant mostly

DETAIL ............................. Fair

CHARACTER OF STORY...........Society girl who loses her fortune opens a restaurant in Greenwich Village in partnership with lumberjack

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 4,979 feet

This is the third of the D. N. Schwab productions starring David Butler and while “Smiling All the Way” offers a satisfying picture for the state rights market it is not as strong as either “Fickle Women” or “Girls Don’t Gamble,” its predecessors. This one lacks something that the other two possessed in large quantities and that is true-to-life characterizations. The bashful boy story, a fellow who has to have his proposal “speech” written out for him, of “Smiling All the Way,” doesn’t gather the admiration that the store clerk of “Don’t Girls Gamble” gained for his awkward, but sincere, courtship.

Some pretty lumber camp scenes offer a pleasing background for the opening of the story and the latter scenes in a Greenwich Village restaurant are quite acceptable. The direction for the most part is good but it seems that a good deal more could be made of the comedy moments. There are a few fairly good bits but some intended comedy in the way of the hero’s attempt at love-making doesn’t really get over. David Butler is pleasing and real except for a bit of overacting when he tries to appear bashful. He doesn’t convince at that.

Hannibal Pillsbury is the cook in the lumber camp owned by Andrew Cadman, who is in love with Alice Drydon, a wealthy girl. Hannibal is a first class flapper maker and when Cadman plays a joke on him, Hannibal comes back by serving flannel cakes to Cadman and his friends. Then Hannibal loses his job.

Sometime later when Alice loses her money, she goes to live with some girls in Greenwich Village, New York. In one of the village restaurants Alice meets Hannibal and together they buy out the restaurant and after a while when Alice and Hannibal are getting along very well financially, Hannibal attempts to propose to Alice but isn’t successful. Cadman again appears on the scene and invites Alice aboard his yacht where he intends to force his attentions.

But hero Hannibal learns of Cadman’s intentions and reaches the dock just after the boat pulls out. He swims to the yacht, climbs aboard and this time proposes to Alice in a very real fashion and is accepted. In the cast are Leatrice Joy, Francis Raymond, Parker McConnel, Rhea Haines, Helen Scott, Charles Smiley and Arthur Redder.

Greenwich Village Atmosphere Will Probably Attract Many

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you have played the two previous Schwab productions starring David Butler you can please them with this although it is not as good as his first two. It is a good state rights offering. The star may have some drawing power in which case make good use of his name.

You might mention that the picture is adapted from Henry Payson Dowst’s “Alice in Underland” in case some folks have read the story. For Catchlines use: “A lumberjack and a society girl as proprietors of a Greenwich Village restaurant in ‘Smiling All the Way.’” Or, “He could make pancakes but he couldn’t make love. See how Hannibal was cured of his bashfulness.”

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Pleasure-loving wife who goes on the stage while her twin sister plays her part as wife
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,000 feet

In "The Broadway Bubble" Corinne Griffith has perhaps the best opportunity she has had in many a day to display her versatility. In the dual role of twin sisters she gives splendidly contrasted performances and makes the two characters stand out as distinct. Demure and gentle as the sister from the countryside and adulent and blase as the woman craving a career, Miss Griffith practically carries the picture.

The production itself is quite the best depiction of theatrical life seen sometime and the direction throughout shows an effort to get away from the regular directorial routine. Among the good bits which may be mentioned is a scene showing the star conversing with a theatrical manager in his office. Through the window in back of her is seen a glimpse of Broadway with the Hotel Astor in full view.

Adrienne Landreth (Miss Griffith), a wealthy and admiration-loving wife cannot persuade her husband to allow her to go on the stage so the couple become estranged. Adrienne meets a theatrical producer at the home of a friend and accepts an engagement as star of a new show. Adrienne persuades her twin sister, Drina, (Miss Griffith), less fortunate in the world's goods than Adrienne and a gentle woman, to play the part of Mrs. Landreth in the hope that when her husband Geoffrey learns of her success he will forgive her and take her back.

Drina becomes Adrienne and affects the same coolness toward Geoffrey that he had been accustomed to from Adrienne. But at the same time Geoffrey notices a difference which Drina's gentle nature cannot conceal. Geoffrey hopes for a reconciliation with his wife, as he supposes. It happens that he takes Drina to the opening performance of Adrienne's show. He recognizes his wife and is baffled.

Adrienne, shocked by her husband's presence, falls from the top of a flight of stairs on the stage and is carried to her dressing room, where later she dies leaving Drina to future happiness with Geoffrey.

Play Up the Theme, Star and Dual Role Characters
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Corinne Griffith in
"THE BROADWAY BUBBLE"
- Vitagraph

"The Broadway Bubble” has all kinds of exploitation angles so you should have no difficulty in persuading them to come in and look at it. Play it up as a story of Broadway life with a realistic atmosphere of the “white way.” Talk about the lavish sets and the star’s gowns. Miss Griffith wears many gorgeous creations. This should be talked about to get the women interested.

Play up the dual role idea. This always attracts a certain crowd. The title itself has a drawing quality. Catchlines should also get them in. Say: “Her goal was a career. Was it worth the cost she paid for it?”

Or, “She gave up love and wealth for the lure of the footlights. See 'The Broadway Bubble' for the stage-struck cure.”

Cowboy Star Pleases In Role a Little Out of the Ordinary for Him

Buck Jones in
"JUST PALS"

Fox

DIRECTOR ......................... Jack Ford AUTHOR .......................... John McDermott SCENARIO BY ................. Paul Schofield
CAMERAMAN ................. George Schneiderman
AS A WHOLE.............. A bit slow at first but works up interest as it goes along increasing toward good climax

STORY.......Sort of "Huckleberry Finn" type with some good human interest business

DIRECTION.....First rate but might have made more of comedy opportunities

PHOTOGRAPHY .......................... Fair
LIGHTINGS ........................ Sometimes a bit hazy
CAMERA WORK .......................... Average
STAR ............................... Pleasing SUPPORT.....George Stone in boy tramp role very attractive; others all suit

EXTERIORS ............................. Real country town
INTERIORS ............................ All right
DETAIL ..............Humor in titles misses badly

CHARACTER OF STORY.......The town's prize lazy man who proves himself a hero

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,000 feet

There’s quite a surprise in store for those who see "Just Pals," for the opening reels don't hold forth much promise so far as keeping you interested. But once they get a good start the offering turns out to be a pleasing bit of entertainment along the type of "Huckleberry Finn" with the main attraction centering about a happy-go-lucky ne'er-do-well and his youthful protege.

The climax is a good one and makes up for the slow beginning. There is one thing which could have been made more of. That’s the “hick” comedy bits that could have been injected. Some of it is attempted through the character of the village constable but it seldom gets over except in one instance, when at prayer meetin’ the basket is placed in front of this w. k. official, he promptly proves his exemption from contribution by showing his badge. Some of the comedy “gags” in the titles are real chestnuts; for instance "He said you weren’t fit to live with pigs and I said you were."

Buck Jones is pleasing in the role of the town "bum," although his worst feature is laziness. George Stone, the youngster who plays the part of Buck's youthin pal, is a clever little actor with an expressive young face. All the others fulfill requirements adequately.

Bim, (Jones) gets acquainted with little Bill when the latter is thrown off a freight on which he is hitchin’ a ride. The two becomes pals and Bill is sent to school. Mary Bruce, the teacher had admired Bim's care of Bill and has insisted upon his going to school. Bim sends many admiring glances in Mary’s direction. But Mary has a sweetheart, Harvey, the villain of the story, and cashier of the local express office.

Harvey is short in his accounts and persuades Mary to lend him the school memorial found of which she has charge. When the school committee call for the money Mary cannot produce it, and Bim, having recovered the money from Harvey, saves Mary from being judged a thief by making it look as though he took it.

Bim tries to secure employment as a porter at the station but lacks a uniform. Little Bill is hurt trying to steal a uniform and an unscrupulous doctor and his wife, thinking Bill a rich boy who has been reported missing, keep him in their home. In the meantime Bim exposes a gang who rob the express office, becomes quite a hero in this way and also in rescuing the real missing rich boy. A check for $10,000 from the rich boy's father gives Bim and Bill a start in life.

Catchlines and Stills Can Be Used To Advantage

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a pleasing human interest story once it gets started and the rather slow beginning isn't going to matter much since the ending works up quite a pitch of excitement and finishes in a really satisfying way. If the Fox cowboy star is popular all you will have to do is to announce his name. You might say that he is seen in a role different from some of his previous pictures.

In "Just Pals" there's not much riding but some good fight stuff at the close gives the star a chance to get in some of his cowboy tactics. The Fox press sheet carries a good line: "A lively tale of a lazy man" which you can use. Or you can secure one of these sheets for further suggestions.

Some Fair Amusement in This Farce Comedy Offering

Blanche Sweet in
"HER UNWILLING HUSBAND"
Jesse D. Hampton Prod.—Pathe

DIRECTOR ......................... Paul Scardon
AUTHOR .......................... Kenneth B. Clarke
SCENARIO BY ...................... Not credited
CAMERAMAN ........................ Victor Milner
AS A WHOLE .............. Amuses to a certain extent but lacks sufficient real incident to keep up the interest STORY .................. Farce comedy runs along extravagant lines and takes some long shots at the "risque"
DIRECTION .......... Handles players well and has selected good setting but allows altogether too much "in and out" business
PHOTOGRAPHY ................. All right
LIGHTINGS ....................... Good
CAMERA WORK ................... Up to standard STAR ................... Pleasing and vivacious but nothing unusual is required of her SUPPORT ........... Albert Roscoe and Edwin Stevens adequate EXTERIORS .............. Not very many except some water shots
INTERIORS .................. Real
DETAIL ....................... Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY .... Actress introduces stranger as her "husband" to rejected suitor who still pursues her, and complications follow
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,000 feet

Five reels is much too much for the amount of incident contained in "Her Unwilling Husband." And when the heroine says to the hero at the close "Why didn't you tell me this in the first place?" the audience is apt to agree with her. For what takes place during the time that he didn't tell her isn’t sufficient to keep the spectator amused sufficiently.

The situation in the main is not new, that of the woman who suddenly announces her marriage to some unsuspecting male for reasons of her own, with the same male accepting the circumstances rather reluctantly until such time as he shall be given an explanation. It would have held much better indeed had the audience been as much in the dark as the "Unwilling Husband" himself.

The direction generally is very good and some comedy bits get over with genuine approval. The players are handled well and Miss Sweet does adequately in the role of the girl with Edwin Stevens and Albert Roscoe lending good support in the roles of the "husband" and lover respectively. Some business near the end relative to a scrap between some fisherman and the crew of the lover’s yacht hasn’t any good reason for being in the picture at all.

Homer Owen seeks shelter from a storm in a house occupied by Marvis Jerome, an actress, and formerly fiancée of Owen. When Owen unexpectedly appears on the scene, Marvis introduces John Jordon, a friend who has arrived for a visit with Marvis’ brother-in-law, the owner of the house, as her husband. Owen is at first shocked by the announcement of Marvis’ marriage but the actions of the "wife and husband" strike Homer as rather peculiar and he draws his own conclusions.

The remainder of the action consists of a series of hide-and-seek games with Marvis, Jordon and Owen the participants. Eventually Owen kidnaps Marvis and once aboard his yacht proves to Marvis that her reason for refusing to marry him is unfounded and there is a reunion with Jordon arriving in time to witness the clutch.

Catchlines Should Attract As Well As the Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The husband by-proxy idea with some fairly good comedy business incidental to the action may be sufficient to keep them interested. The title is a good one to work with and can be worked up effectively with catchlines such as "Is any man safe? Be careful when you suddenly decide to accept a standing invitation that you are not walking into a trap such as Jordon did when he became ‘Her Unwilling Husband.’"

Blanche Sweet’s name can be used to good advantage especially if she is at all prominent with your patrons. Unless you are catering to a sensitive clientele, you might refer to the more or less "bedroom" farce gist of the story hinting at its being a bit naughty at times. There will always be those who won’t turn down anything along these lines.

Some Short Reels

"Forbidden Brew"—Universal
Type of Production ........................................ 1 reel comedy
It takes a lot of footage for this reel to get going, and the best laugh is about half way along. The well known knocks at prohibition are over worked in titles and business. However, there are a few new ones, for instance, the furnishing of an individual brass rail with each boot legging sale. The last half is fast, with a chase leading in and out of several ladies' boudoirs. A fat little kidde furnishes several real laughs, but the stuff is not over average at any time. The prohibition comedy is worked to death, but still seems to find favor with a lot of audiences. Vin Moore directed.

"A Fireside Brewer"—Mack Sennett—Famous Players
Type of Production ........................................ 2 reel comedy
Some clever material at the beginning sends this offering off to a good start but after a while it slumps until it reaches a level distinctly below the usual Mack Sennett. In the portion which shows the efforts of one of the principal comedians to remove some of his beard, there are several laughs and some of the tricks with the flivver also provoke mirth, although all of them are not new. As for the beach stuff and other material, that is much below the standard usually adhered to in successful comedies. The production does not possess as much of a continuous theme as it should, the introduction of the bathing girls, who incidentally were not photographed to good advantage, is awkward and some of the footage is. On the other hand, it is not quite as riotous as the usual Sennett offering, and does include several portions that register quite well. As a whole, a fair film of its type.

"Pyrenean Perspective"—Burton Holmes—Famous Players
Type of Production ........................................ 1 reel scenic Numerous picturesque bits of footage showing, as the title leads one to expect, views of the Pyrenees, combine in making this a very satisfactory picture of its type. The photography throughout, is up to the mark, the tinting reasonably good and the tinting splendid. Given a good technical production, the natural material of the region in which this has been shot, registers in good fashion. It will fit in nicely.

"Another Paramount Magazine"—Famous Players
Type of Production ........................................ 1 reel magazine
Tom MacNamara edited another Paramount which starts with several well directed scenes showing some youngsters in a classroom. The manner in which the title-writer philosophe is unique and the photographed footage entertaining.
An idea, as ancient as the justly celebrated hills is employed in the second section which concerns a husband's continual comments on his wife's forgetfulness and the expected error on his part in leaving tickets to a show at home, which is rather obvious, and trite stuff. The concluding cartoon is funny enough and winds up well. Generally, an acceptably offering of its sort with the first and third parts reaching a high standard.

"Pretty Lady"—Fox Sunshine Comedy
Type of Production ........................................ reel comedy
This latest Sunshine Comedy featuring Slim Somerville contains the usual slap-stick stuff with chases galore and much
"in and out" business that continues so long it's liable to make you dizzy. Nevertheless there are some good comedy bits which will be sure to get laughs. There aren't so many new tricks but most of them are still new enough to amuse. One bit which probably hasn't been done before shows Slim driving a Ford careless-like. He bumps into the corner of the building but instead of the usual smash-up the flivver neatly divides itself in half, with one side going down one street, with the driver and the other half, going the other direction.
The bathing girls are introduced and as usual get over their part pleasingly—to the eye.

"The Dear Departed"—Pathe
Type of Production ........................................ 2 reel comedy
This finds Harry "Snub" Pollard hardly recognizable, he having abandoned his drooping mustache. He still retains his dusky little side partner, however. The vehicle is fairly fast, and has enough laughs to put it over. "Snub" seems to do better work without his facial adornment. The story is all about a young married man whose creditors are so insistent that he decides to end it all and let his wife collect the insurance. His attempts at suicide fail, so he frames up a little fake death scene with disastrous results when the coroner and his horse-doctor assistant arrive. Hal Roach sponsored it and Alf Goulding directed.

Pathe Review No. 79
Type of Production ........................................ 1 reel magazine
The current edition of the Pathe Review contains all interesting subjects, splendidly photographed. The first subject is "Fine Feathers in Brittany," colored pictures showing some Britany kiddies dressed up for Sunday. There are also some pretty shots of the country itself. Next is "The Land Whence Dollies Come," a sure winner for every little girl that sees it.
The making of the new fad "splash me" doll is presented followed by showing the process of making the more life-like dolls. Agnes Hunter is seen in the "Nature Dance of Rome." The Ditmar animal pictures show some close-ups of the anteater and the sloth.
Short Reels

"Fine Feathers"—Chester—Educational

Type of Production .................. 1 reel scenic and bird study

The first part of this Chester-Screenic is devoted to some not particularly interesting shots of, and information about the work of the New Jersey State Game Farm. The manner in which the quail and other birds are cared for until they are able to shift for themselves, and how they are then set free, is shown, and also the fate of a poacher on the farm, who falls into the hands of the game warden. The second half of the reel has been titled "They Forgot The Town," and is made up of some interesting and unusual shots in Southern Utah. The marvelous rock formations are well photographed. This portion of the reel is up to standard.

"In-Sultan Lions"—Universal

Type of Production .................. 2 reel comedy

A good supply of comedy business, some trained lions, quite elaborate settings, and a fairly coherent story, make this a better than average offering. The cast has no featured comedians, but every one manages to get several laughs. Some of the titles are good stuff, providing a number of punchlines. The story is about a sailor who falls in love with a girl on her way to Turkey. The sailor is shanghaied to the same country and rescues the girl from the clutches of the Sultan and a band of ferocious lions. There are a lot of mallets and slapstick, and of course a chase, but some of it is new. The ship scenes offer some unusual laughs, as do the young man's trouble with the lions. This will probably get over pretty well with most audiences on the strength of its difference from the usual 2 reeler.

"Golfing Jailbirds"—Universal

Type of Production .................. 1 reel comedy

There will probably be a humorous appeal to golfing members of your audiences in this reel, but there isn't much of general comedy merit. Such as there is, is furnished principally by an extremely youthful actor of about two years, who gives a performance that shows patience work on the part of the director. The girl promises to wed the one of her two ardent suitors who plays the best game of golf, and the contest brings out such features as dynamited golf balls, and golf balls that seem alive. There are a minimum of laughs in the picture.

"Lovely Maoriland"—Educational

Type of Production .................. 1 reel scenic

This Chester-Outing reel presents a really interesting journey through New Zealand, and surrounding islands. Generally speaking, this part of the world is not very well known, and it is a pleasant surprise to find it a land of huge mountains, glaciers and fjords rivaling Norway's. Some excellent shots of the glaciers of the country are the particular feature, while as a whole it is a first class picture of the type. The reel concludes with shots of several peculiar animals, native to the country. William Wright is again responsible for the titles.

"The Explorers"—Bruce—Educational

Type of Production .................. 1 reel scenic

The explorers in this Bruce scenic are two young men aboard a yacht, which cruises somewhere on the "coast." They finally come to some really beautiful country, and have taken some excellent shots of mirror like lakes, and unusually good mountain scenery. This reel also presents a glacier for inspection, and the views of the huge ice fields, which are as good as anything of the kind that has been seen, make it a very satisfactory film of the type. The views of the glacier itself take the form of a trip, from the point where it meets the water, back through the mountains to its source and include close-ups of peculiar ice formations, and the effect of the moving ice on the surrounding country.

"Mayer's Travelaughs"—Pathe

Type of Production .................. Two reels of many features

If you aren't booking Mayer's Travelaughs you had better check things up. It may be that unless your audience is of the right type this will be somewhat over their heads, but if you have a good, high class clientele, go into these and use some on your short reel bill.

They are being shown in New York exclusively at the Capitol and the cleverness, artistic finish, and general character of this offering is such that make it one of the big features at this house.

It shows among other interesting things how an artist can make unusual and somewhat humorous touches from cloud effects. These are particularly interesting and some of them very funny indeed. As a whole, very worth while and especially good for high grade audiences.

"Velvet Fingers"—Pathe

Type of Production .................. 15 episode serial

In this latest Pathe serial from the George B. Seitz studios, the actor-producer-director is co-starred with Marguerite Courtot, who was seen with Seitz in "Pirate Gold" and "Bound and Gagged." The story of "Velvet Fingers" is of the Raffles type, having for its hero a gentlemanly crook, of astonishing resourcefulness. In the opening episode he is discovered ingeniously holding up a group of society people, after which a noted student of criminology vows to capture the elusive "Velvet." The bold cracksmen successfully eludes the sleuth, committing several daring robberies, and taunting his pursuer with his failure. It then develops into a battle of wits between the thief and those determined upon his capture, followed by the criminology professor, his financee and a street urchin known as Mickey.

The cast includes besides the stars, Harry Semels, who is the professor, Thomas Carr as Mickey and others, all of whom are competent to put over this type of picture. The story is of a popular type, there are the usual number of thrills, and excitement and interest are well maintained. It should prove a very good drawing card in houses where serials go well.

Six A Year

This is Plan of Artists' and Authors' Attractions—Selling Stock

Artists' and Authors' Attractions, Inc., a Delaware corporation capitalized at $300,000, represented by 872,000 shares of its common stock of $100 par value and 4,000 shares of common stock of $1,000 par value, plans to make six productions each year of the scenario manufactured by the corporate organization. The plan, based on the idea of producing the common stock by the corporate organization, is to be presented to the stockholders as the principal item of concern.

In the company's prospectus, the reduction in cost for each picture is stated at $60,000, and the distribution of its annual profits of $100,000, net profits of $100,000, and its net profits of $100,000, are placed at $60,000. A trust fund of $75,000 is to be created, according to the prospectus.

What They Think

And the opinion that the motion picture industry as well as other industrial and educational industries is now in a state of disjunction, commensurate with the present demands of both exhibitors and the public. So far as I can determine, production is being curtailed only because the individual star program series plan is being resorted to by all the star special producers, which necessitate more time and money than the former program series where pictures must be made conform to such a schedule and release dates. Production at a loss is decreasingly the factor.

I have just completed a whole series of Associated Producers' directors pass the usual dividend. Gossip says they will. Members of the concern who should know say they won't. That dividend will be declared as usual. All right. Today's the day.

Exhibitors and Women's Civic Club to Discuss Children Problem

A conference will be held today at the Women's Civic Club, 22 Park Ave., between a committee of the M. P. Exhibitors' League of New York and the Committee on Recreation of the club.

President Sydney S. Cohen has appointed the following exhibitors as members of the committee:

The purpose of the conference is to discuss the children's question with the view of finding a constructive solution to the problem. Senator James L. Walker will preside.

It will be remembered that the New York League has always favored segregation for children attending picture theaters with a special matron in attendance, a plan which had the sanction of the late Mayor Gaynor.

and noise comes out. Another $12,000,000 or $15,000,000, one of the oldest companies involved. And the banking house of the best.

But some of the downtown crowd are pessimists galore on stuff. You should hear 'em. Indigo is bright alongside of it they say. Talk about over expansion and contracts for buildings made on a rising market. Inability of those concerns to carry through with this sort of a financial condition. You'd link everything was going gallery (new word—Curly Welch case note). But it isn't. And Wall Street knows it.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

Usual crowd at Astor. Two exhibitors, one producer, another who has four companies working. What’s to be done? Is one exhibitor: “We have to book the stars. They’re own. They mean something.” Says the producer: “Then independent producer can’t stay in business. That means we’d starve your best friend.” And the other exhibitor said: “We wish we had some way of figuring it all out.” Then they proceed to do it. Took an hour. Maybe more. At the finish it is still unsolved.

REGARDING FELIX

So Felix is going to leave Goldwyn. Not surprising con- sidering what has happened over there. Knows a lot of people, any exhibitors, too. Been on the hiring line a long time. Nobody ever had him lunching with Marcus Loew. That’s the answer? One guess. Maybe you’re right. But then lunches aren’t always work out. Saw L. J. lunching once with “Bill” ox. Then L. J. said he guessed he’d have to deny that he was taking a combine with William.

THAT LINE

Busy days last week at Robertson-Cole’s. Beyfus and Kirk- trick spent hours watching the mob piling in the Strand. To “Kismet.” Hard to get them to do anything else. Joyous glee. Naturally. Why not? They were watching their sock out knock ‘em out. Joe Plunkett almost as joyous, hashing big week. Everybody happy. A regular oasis in the desert of a gang of pessimists. But what will Beyfus and Kirk- trick do to watch the crowds at the Brooklyn Strand?

THAT “LAB” STORY

LUCKY HARRY

Harry Reichenbach always was lucky. Look at the “breaks” has had. But that’s nothing. He bought five tickets for a fledgling motor at the A. M. P. A. Won it. Started an auction for the car. Had never seen it. Didn’t want it. Got $350 from the auction. Said he hoped the car would stand up long enough to be delivered. Figured it all out. Said it would. How do you bet birds like that?

REGARDING THE MARKET

The market isn’t healthy, is it? Not so’s you can notice it. Exhibitors feel it, too. They’re looking for cheaper material than they’ve been using. Still looking too. And there’s a lot of foreign stuff coming in the market. Lot of it. Say the big fellows: “Well, it can’t stand up. We’ve had that foreign stuff before. Our American people don’t like it.” And thirty thousand words to the same effect. Possibly right, too. Maybe so. But if this foreign stuff happens to suit, and in this market of buyers looking for bargains there may be a surprise in store for somebody.

Incidentally a certain states right distributor was busier last week than he has been in months. Ordered a lot of prints. Says business is picking up. Better than for a long time.

Something to think about.

and effort of the average program release. This can only benefit the exhibitor and their box office resulting in much bigger profit.

I am confident over the general outlook and can see no reason why exhibitors should not enjoy the best of prosperity. I do advise, however, that all exhibitors be impressed with the necessity and good business of exhibiting their productions and presenting a successful picture as long as it holds up. This policy is the most urgent need of today. Granting that these special productions stand square upon their merits there is every logic in a united resolution which would immediately accomplish this, thus insuring greater profit for both the showman and the producers and also elevating the motion picture to a new standard far greater than that of the spoken stage.

Dividend Declared

F. P. L. Directors Vote for It—Net Profits for 9 Months $3,417,512.54

The board of directors of Famous Players-Lasky Corp. yesterday declared a regular quarterly dividend of $2 on the common stock, payable Dec. 15.

A financial statement covering the parent company's business for the nine months ending Sept. 28, 1920, was also issued yesterday. The report does not include the operations of wholly or partially owned subsidiary companies. It shows net operating profits for the period named of $4,714,382.24, after all expenses including allowance for film exhaustion and setting up a liberal reserve for contingency, accounted for net earnings of $5,427,950.94 for the first nine months of 1919 and shows an increase of $1,286,431.30 over the corresponding period of last year.

The report states that Famous Players-Lasky Corp. has a $10,000,000 investment in subsidiary companies.

Famous Players' common closed yesterday at $39.50, an increase of 5½ points over Saturday's close of $38.75 and the preferred at 80.

Samuels Keeps Criterion, Atlanta
(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Atlanta—Sig Samuels has given out details in connection with deal consummated by Criterion Theater Co., whereby their lease on the Criterion is renewed for 15 years.

The deal involves rentals amounting to $300,000, and is said to be one of the most important transactions in Atlanta's film history. Several efforts have been made by other interests to secure the Criterion lease and only on Friday negotiations were reopened by a large local enterprise for this location. It develops that the lease was actually closed on Oct. 1st, but no details were forthcoming until this afternoon. In his discussion of the new lease Samuels makes it clear that the same policy which made the Criterion a success will be pursued throughout the duration of the new lease. The Criterion will continue under the management of W. C. Patterson as will also the Metropolitan, the new theater now under construction and scheduled to open May 1.

The Metropolitan is the biggest individual theater controlled by the Samuels interests and will be operated along the same lines as the Criterion. By virtue of the fact that Samuels is a franchise holder in First National he is assured of the attractions released by that organization for the next 25 years. As soon as the Metropolitan is opened the Criterion Theater Co. will make an extensive improvement in the Criterion and increase the seating capacity to about 1,400. Forty thousand dollars has already been appropriated for this purpose.

Discuss Children's Problem

The N. Y. State Exhibitors' League and the Women's Civic Club held a conference yesterday regarding the problem of admitting children under 16 to picture theaters in New York. Sydney S. Cohen described the meeting as a "very satisfactory one."

Astoria Opens

Ward and Glynn's Astor theater, Astoria, L. I., opened last night. Most of the exchange managers and representatives of all the large distributing and producing companies were present as invited guests. Borough President Connolly of Queens made the opening address.

Storm Completes Staff

Jerome Storm has completed his production staff by the addition of James Abbe, portrait photographer. Other members of the organization are: Irving J. Martin, art director; Warren Frumke, assistant director; George Peters and Lou Blitzer, camera men; Andrew Reid, head electrician; Edward Quinn in charge of properties and Harold Brown as technical director.

Bob Kerr has been engaged by Hamilton-White Comedies to direct Jack White.

“Dinty”—First National

Strand

World—This is exceptional merit both in the acting and direction.

Herald—Thrills and juvenile comedy are well blended here though there are some improbabilities.

Times—There is irresistible fun in Marshall Neilan’s “Dinty.” How much of it there is for any spectator depends some upon what his powers of resistance are.

Post—Mrs. Marshall Neilan has a knack of turning broad humor into moment pictures.

American—Another of the zippy Marshall Neilan productions.

Daily News—Altogether I like “Dinty” very much. First for Wesley Barry and second for his funny boy pals and enemies.

 Tribune—Wesley Barry is especially delightful because he is so ugly.

Sun—The picture is filled with whimsical touches which make it very human.

Go and see “Dinty.”

Journal—A snappy story with decided heart-pull to it and plenty of humor. There is a smashing climax. The picture is decidedly worth seeing.

Telegram—“Dinty” is the sort of texture photoplay that makes an audience laugh and be thrilled.

Sun—Something delightful in screen entertainment.

Mail—Marshall Neilan’s picture and scenario can only be pleasant to grown-ups and the kids ought to go away feeling they have enjoyed themselves.

Evening World and Post made no comment.

“Life of the Party”—F. P. L.

Rivoli

World—There are other situations that cause many laughs.

Herald—The result is an expertly entertaining picture, with capital capers.

Times—Though too long to hold its own all the way, it furnishes many laughs, because “Pappy” Arbuckle is funny and always pleasant, and enough of Mr. Cobb’s story has been used to give the photoplay the proper swing and spirit.

Evening World and Telegram made no comment.

American—Five reels of fun.

The picture has been elaborately produced and splendidly photographed.

 Tribune—But “Life of the Party” on the screen is amusing even if it isn’t all at the like original.

Journal—Jolly entertainment.

Sun—Roscoe (Pappy) Arbuckle who succeeds in enlivening “The Life of the Party” in a most funny and amusing way.

Post—But that much of it is funny was not being humorously denied.

Mail—Arbuckle is just as good a lawyer as he is a screen savant.

The Great Lover”—Goldwyn

Capital

World—It is a picture well worth seeing.

Herald—Will be especially enjoyed.

What of Stars?

Interesting Ideas in View of Famous Players New Move

With the cutting of production on the part of Famous Players in sympathy with their idea of combining their stars and using them in big productions, many in the industry believe that this may prove a forerunner for other companies to follow, and the question of whether or not it will, has led to much discussion. There is hardly a question but that those will feature their new move.

There are many, including big and little exhibitors, who do not believe that the plan is practicable as a steady going, week after week. A prominent exhibitor said that the idea could not, and could not work. He pointed out that the star series was probably the life of the business of an average exhibitor other than those who operated big houses either on Broadway on the main street of any city. "The neighborhood client wants the star," he said. "In fact don't know that we could operate without them." He pointed out that while there were many old rate "stars" who had no right to the title that there were others of wide box office value, who, regardless of what Famous or any concern, would always be big box office attractions. "And that," he said, "is what makes the wheels go round and produce the revenue." He added that despite its special First Nasion was strong because of the Tallidge girls and Charley Ray, and regardless of whether one might feel towards the salesmanship of United Artists, that there would be no denial of the box office use of "Mary" and "Doug" and the fifth productions.

Bank Officials

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Newport, N. H.—Perley A. Johnson, cashier of the Citizens' National Bank; Carroll D. Johnson, his son and assistant cashier of the bank; and Miss Nellie M. Barton, a local real estate broker, have been arraigned in the criminal session of the county court of this town charging them with conspiracy to defraud.

The evidence was presented before the grand jury by County Solicitor Henry H. Higley. It consisted chiefly of allegations by Lyman C. Fisher and the concern of the recent transfer of the Coniston Theater, a local moving picture house, from Fisher's possession.

Fisher charges that the two Johnsons and Miss Barton came to his home one night while his wife was ill, and taking advantage of the mental stress which was upon him because of Mrs. Fisher's illness and his financial affairs, prevailed upon him to turn the control of the theater over to them.

The Fisher transaction will be remembered as figuring in the Black investigation by the M. P. T. O.

Alfred S. Black declared that the result of this case would show that conditions in New England were nothing like what had been represented, and that some more interesting developments with regard to New England conditions would develop.

Famous in Canada

About a week ago a letter was published from H. Ginsler of the Iola Theater, Toronto, who wanted to know why Famous was building a theater in Toronto in view of the statements made by Mr. Zukor, and claiming that he was a customer of Famous.

Henry L. Saulsbury of Famous, has just received the following letter from N. L. Nathanson of the Famous Players Canadian Corp., which, in reference to the Ginsler communication says:

"Mr. Eugene Zukor had already referred this letter to me and, as I have advised him, there is of course no ground whatever for Mr. Ginsler's complaint. You will quite understand that the American company should not be held responsible for the actions of the Canadian Company, as the policies of this company are left to the directors and are not governed by any policy which may have been adopted by the New York company.

"In this instance we regret the fact that we will be in competition with Mr. Ginsler, who has a very small theater seating less than 500 in this populous locality, but following his plans of the company, and in [Continued on Page 4]

It is in the interest of exhibitors to maintain this practice. If exhibitors are committed to longer runs, it will be to their advantage to do so. London Notes

The United Artists-Greenhill deal is still unfixed. Greenhill's option has been extended to January 1.

At an extraordinary meeting of the Alliance Film Corporation the other day, some figures regarding the company's finances were given by Mr. Walter de Freece. £278,000 has been paid up of the £456,123 shares capital subscribed for. Productions to date have cost £54,193. A vote of confidence in the existing Board was passed, in spite of stormy opposition from the chairman of the shareholders committee, who was not allowed to vote because he and the people he represented had not met the third call on the company's shares. Alliance is making "Carnival" with Matheson Lang in the stellar role, and the chairman announced that this will be specially exploited in the New Year. Doubtless more will be heard from dissatisfied shareholders in the near future.

J. Justice Harner, president of the Sunlight Arc, Corporation, is here and has done pretty good business.

Trend of the Times

Relative to the "star" question raised in yesterday's issue, the following has been received from J. D. Williams of Asso, First National:

In all amusement history there is no record that stars can be eliminated. There always will be a limited number of individual noses of genius, rare personality and exceptional ability which will win public favor to such an extent that command recognition as stars.

From the general trend of the industry now is toward the story as the item of first consideration. This is gradually eliminating some of the so-called stars who are not sufficiently able as actors or actresses to rise above the routine of strong dramatic situations and make their parts stand out as triumphs of artistic accomplishment. On the other hand, there are the few like Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Charlie Ray, Katherine MacDonald, Lionel Barrymore, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and others of extraordinary personal magnetism and ability developed to the point of genius who in performance rise above the heights of any story, no matter how great, and make their work of characterization a thing of art. To them the public gives its favor, and accordingly they deserve to become stars.

There are directors whose work is the standard for all others. There are scenario writers and authors who are the stars in their field of endeavor.

Today the story is the thing, but there never will be a time in the motion picture industry, when we will not have a few exceptionally capable actors and actresses who have the ability to make their work pre-dominate as individual characteristics that soar well beyond the heights of genius. As the strength of stories increases, the number will become fewer. For years legitimate theatrical producers have said "the play is the thing," but the rare ability of the performances given by a fortunate few will make the star a great factor, and this never will cease to be.

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Arthur S. Kane is quoted in the Times as follows:

"The real stars have survived the popularity of the special production, and are stronger in their hold on the public than ever. The personality picture has never lost an inch, where there has been a real personality in the picture."

Frank Messenger, with Universal for three years, has been made production manager for Pinnacle Prod.

Two with Burke
And Then Billie is Through With Famous Players

Billie Burke has two more pictures to make for Famous Players and then here present contract is through. At Famous it was impossible to learn what had been done about a renewal.

At the same time local reports had it that Florence Ziegfeld, Miss Burke's husband, was thinking about entering the film producing field on his own account, and that he would star Miss Burke in a series of pictures himself. It was further reported that Ziegfeld was looking over sites in Southern California with an idea of erecting a studio for Miss Burke.

At the hour of going to press it was impossible to secure any statement from Mr. Ziegfeld as to whether he had any foundation.

More Opinions
The man with a picture that is good occupies as good a position in the film industry today as anybody in it. There is no reason why worthy product need suffer.

Give me a picture that is worthy, one that will not meet with trouble at the hands of the censor board and I will guarantee to get out of it at least the producer's investment. It all depends on the subject and with it, the proper salesmanship. Let me repeat: good pictures will not suffer.

ERNEST SHIPMAN.

Over Production Must Cease
It is a fact that healthy competition is an incentive for success, and an exchange of views can only tend to the betterment of this business as a whole.

Where business in general in the industry is unsatisfactory, we are quite frank to state that we are satisfied with the progress we are making, and when considering the conditions which exist and how they have to be met, we are not at all pessimistic as to the future.

This business can be stabilized, and there is no question that it has a decidedly promising future, but it will play on a coterie basis and the same thought and care in investing money must apply in this business as in any large commercial undertaking.

The Robertson-Co!e feel that they are contributing materially to the readjustment of affairs, and it will be possible to conduct this business with a minimum in and at all times the cove-nering and operating and to build a high quality product which assures us of a staple and satisfactory return on our investment.

It is a generally accepted fact that there has been a decided over-production of mediocre product in the motion picture industry in all lines of production and we feel that the re-duction of independent productions will in a general measure tend to relieve the market of a serious condition which we feel has been causing an unsatisfactory condition throughout the industry.

We think that we can make much better products and hope to make the Motion Picture a better product.

We are quite confident that general conditions will improve in the coming months and the business will stabilize itself by lessening the quantity of productions and improving their quality.

Our survey of the theatrical field throughout the United States indicates to us that the theaters are not suffering through the exploitation of satisfactory production, but that the exhibitors have been somewhat confused, due to the high amount of material that is available, in selecting the proper subjects that will meet with the approval of their patronage.

The reason is that it is better to state that the Robertson-Co!e Company are not at all alarmed regarding the future, and they will pursue the policies that they have inaugurated.

A. S. KIRKPATRICK

The Texan Viewpoint

In Texas, the general "slump" is just beginning to feel, and the wise exhibitor in this state is, or should be, preparing to meet the general readjustment that seems to be imminent.

Due to continued increased costs of film rentals, and increased general overhead, in order to make any profit, it will be necessary to force to his patrons a reduction in their prices, from time to time, until, in my opinion, we have reached the deending line. Right here is the serious question—will we simply cut our price and lose business, or will we lose our business and price, and start lowering his admission prices now and our present overhead will be reduced. Third, and last, if a fellow gets panic-struck and starts lowering his admission prices now, he is simply placing himself in a position to either just about starve, or lose all that he has earned in the past.

We must keep our admission prices where we have them until our cost of doing business and film rentals are properly regulated.

Now here is my suggestion for a betterment of conditions at the present, and for the future:

First, I think that production should be cut down. We are getting more good pictures now than ever before, but there are still lots of poor ones, which are made mostly by small independent producers, who do not have the money nor skill to make good pictures. Let these producers quit, and in that way give the public a better picture.

Second, I think that theaters building should cease, except in localities where there is really need for a theater.

Spurred on by the enormous profits a few men have made in recent years, theaters are being built all over the land and there is not enough of them to go around. We have no money to make. Let us stop this, and, and only build theaters where there is really a need for them. In this way, we low film rentals generally, and place the Motion Picture on a higher plane.

In the Courts

Judgment has been filed in the Court for the Republic Laborers, against the Motion Picture Field Title Co. The plaintifed for a balance of $1,427 due for titles costing $7,365. The plaint contended that some of the titles were not done properly and required for $915.

The application of Winchell and Smith, who was sued with Victo-rine, John L. Golden, Metro and Pantages, is by Stuart Robson to set aside agreement for the disposal of contracts in rights of the play. "The New etta," to be produced in picture form, is by Stuart.

In the Supreme Court, Justice Mollan granted an injunction to strike out any allegation of the complaint, Mr. Smith said that many of the allegations in the complaint had no bearing on the subject matter of the suit and made gratuitously to injure his name.

In a letter to the Chicago Daily News, Dodge, of Dodge-Morrisville, Vt., Henry L. Black on Jan. 1, next, that "there is nothing further I can conscientiously do in this matter" and has dropped it. He points out in his letter that in his belief Mrs. Dodge used the wrong methods of trying to handle Mr. Black and that the atmosphere created by the M. P. LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . . . . . . 5,720 feet

Tourneur has done it again. “The Last of the Mohicans” has resulted in thrills galore. There are so many of them that it is going to be difficult to make your crowd believe that all of them appear in one production. Outstanding among them is the battle on a cliff, several thousand feet high, between the heroine and the villainous Magua, which results in the heroine, with her wrists slashed, tumbling off this tremendous height to the waters below. Right on this same cliff occurs the battle between Uncas, the hero and Magua. They fight their way over the rocks, apparently always in danger of being hurled off. Finally the fight ends with Magua, after being stabbed, being hurled into the whirling chasm where later his body passes into the waterfall, which is apparently over 1,000 feet high. When his body tumbles and turns in full view of your audiences, you are going to hear from them. And in the right way. This particular scene is bound to create a sensation.

Then there is a massacre. A real “honest-to-God” lot of killing. Some of your people may think that the sequence runs too long, but after all, it is the real feature of the Production. Just how many people Tourneur used in this is unknown, but there are just hordes of them. They put on a massacre that probably has never been equalled before the camera. There is shooting; knifing; tomahawking, and enough thrills to satisfy the most rabid melodrama lover ever born. They take infants out of the arms of mothers and tomahawk them right before you; they crack soldiers’ heads with the butt end of muskets without hesitation.

The story is set back in 1757, when the English were fighting the French with their Indian Allies, for the country around New York State. There is very little to it indeed, excepting the big details of the massacre, there being just enough introduction to show that Cora and Alice Munro are on their way to their father, Colonel Munro, who is besieged by the French and who later, together with the rest of the English garrison, are victims of a traitor and coward. How Uncas, the young chief of the Mohicans, his father and Hawkeye, try to save them from the Hurons, led by Magua, make up the rest of the story, which closes with the death of Cora and Uncas.

There is an unnecessary sequence at the finish, after the death of these two, when incidents relative to their burial are unduly prolonged, but otherwise the story moves rapidly enough to satisfy.

Wonderfully Spectacular Production—Should Get Them In

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Play this up. Talk about the thrills and tell of some of them, and you can use lobby displays to advantage, because the production is one that allows for this with great latitude. You can use a large number of interesting stills, obtainable from your exchange, and they are bound to prove of interest.

Talk about the picture as one of America’s greatest literary works, “The Last of the Mohicans,” by James Fenimore Cooper. There will be ample opportunity to put on special exploitation features, using the Boy Scouts of your community to advantage. Every child in school, or young person just out of school, should be logical supporters of the production, and their parents are bound to remember a book they read with tremendous interest many years ago.

This is straight melodrama, but it is full of the kind of incidents that should be successful as a screen play.

If you wish to talk of Tourneur, mention some of his latest productions, including “Treasure Island.”

George D. Baker has taken Richard Washburn Child’s story from the Hearst’s Magazine and has made a corking good picture along very unusual and interesting lines until the very finish. Then something went wrong and they plant an unnecessary murder and a lot of additional and unnecessary footage long after the story has actually been told and definitely closed. This tends to weaken what would otherwise be an unusually fine money-making production.

In the Child’s story Baker had a very unusual theme—the sacrifice a father makes to save his child from blackmailing mother. The father is a “lifer” and his daughter grows up in the belief she is an orphan. She knew nothing of the battle raging around her and in the end marries her rich lover without the slightest idea that her father has been killed by her mother, and that she almost was the victim of a sensational blackmailing episode. It is these tricks and turns of the story that allow for an unusually clever production. The manner in which the girl’s father, “Heliotrope Harry”—so called because of his constant use of that perfume—outwits the scheming mother, presents many excellent screen opportunities, all of which Baker has taken advantage of and used with a master hand. The manner in which the father makes his appeal to the warden and later to the governor and earns his freedom on the promise that he will not kill his wife, is a splendid sequence, and as a whole the corking way in which, through the use of heliotrope and the odor of heliotrope, the husband makes his presence known to his scheming wife, is excellently handled. When the father finally secures possession of the birth certificate after rifling his wife’s trunk, the daughter is assuredly saved from any possible scandal, and the story naturally dies.

But this wasn’t enough; they had to make a “movie” out of it, and so they have the husband trailing and annoying his wife until the end, in desperation, she tracks him to his room and kills him. The final shot is of the father’s buddy and ex-crook watching outside the church, while within the marriage of the young couple occurs. With this out “Heliotrope” should be a mighty interesting picture and good enough for any house. Allowed to remain in, it lowers the entire tone of a splendid production.

The cast is uniformly good with no one particularly outstanding, although Diana Allen, a former Ziegfield girl, looks sweet and pretty as the heroine, and Frederick Burton gives an excellent performance as the father. Julia Swayne Gordon somewhat overacts as the mother, and William B. Mack has one of his famous crook parts, as “Heliotrope Harry’s” buddy.

Hearst Publicity Will Help—Make No Promises

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can play this up as a Cosmopolitan production, linking it with “Humoresque” and “The Restless Sex,” but go slow on making promises. George D. Baker is also probably well known to your fans and his name can be used to advantage. You better forget the cast, because there isn’t a name there that means very much at the box office.

Go slow on your promises, except that you can talk of an especially well presented production. You will have the benefit of the usual publicity accorded a Cosmopolitan production, which is just another name for a Hearst picture, inasmuch as the Hearst Syndicate of newspapers, with a reading public of millions, is behind your picture. The fact that it ran in Hearst’s Magazine should also prove stimulating to a certain extent. The theme of the story is so unusual that you can use this to advantage, also.

For catchlines you can use: “See what heliotrope did to a blackmailing mother.” “See how heliotrope saved an innocent girl, at the blank Theater.”

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 5,500 feet

Sir Arthur Wing Pinero’s book “Iris” made an interesting story of English society and also as a stage play scored a certain success. Now in its screen form under the name of “A Slave of Vanity” it fails to make entertainment mostly because of a lack of real dramatic action. The direction for the most part and especially with regard to handling the players, is poor.

If it weren’t for the titles the spectator would be at almost a total loss to know what it was all about. The manner in which the various scenes are presented have little variance, practically each one opening with some player either coming in, shaking hands, standing around talking for a bit, then shaking hands and off again. This arriving, shaking and kissing hands and leave-taking becomes monotonous.

Miss Frederick makes the most of a very unsatisfactory role but very little can be said for the other players who act very mechanically, walking on and off the scene like so many wooden soldiers. Nigel Barrie as the hero is the most human but his acting moments are limited. The camera work is not the best, many of the scenes being shot from too great a distance merely for the sake of getting in the entire set.

Iris, a wealthy English aristocrat is in love with Laurence Trenwith, a poor man in comparison with another suitor, Mr. Maldanado. Iris, fearing that she could not live happily as a poor man’s wife accepts Maldanado, but later takes back her promise and goes to Italy with Trenwith. She is followed by “Maldo” as she calls the rich man.

Trenwith leaves for his uncle’s ranch, taking with him Iris’ promise that she will wait for him. But Iris reckons without fate. She loses her fortune and cir-rstances force her to accept Maldo’s financial aid.
She soon realizes his assistance is merely a trap and then attempts to support herself, but later accepts Maldo’s proposition. When Trenwith returns and learns what has happened he will have nothing to do with Iris.

But right on top of all this, Iris wakes up. She’s been dreaming and Trenwith is knocking on the door.
ready to take her to his uncle’s ranch where she will play “housewife among the pots and pans.”

Star Will Attract—Author May. Talk About the Production

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

* Miss Frederick’s name will count for a good deal so give it the most prominence. Secondly you can promise them a lavish production with many artistic sets and it would be well to mention Sir Arthur Wing Pinero’s name and the fact that “A Slave of Vanity” is an adaptation of “Iris.” There are a number who favor the works of this author.

If you think the idea of a surprise finish will attract you might hint along this line bearing in mind the dream finish. Or use the lines: “Would that we could all dream our future. See how Iris decided to marry the poor man through the influence of a dream.”
“She was ‘A Slave of Vanity’ and when her fortune was gone she sold her soul.”

"THE FURNACE"

DIRECTOR ......................... William D. Taylor
AUTHOR .......................... "Pan"
SCENARIO BY .................... Julia Crawford Ivers
CAMERAMAN ..................... James C. Van Trees

STORY ..............Contains nothing that hasn't been done before DIRECTION ............Elaborate as far as production is concerned but doesn't give story first attention
PHOTOGRAPHY ............. Good
LIGHTINGS .................. Clear

PLAYERS ...... Agnes Ayres pretty and acts with ease; Milton Sills and Theodore Roberts good as usual EXTERIORS ....... Many beautiful garden scenes INTERIORS .......... Usually lavish
DETAIL ................ Adequate
CHARACTER OF STORY ...Stage beauty who weds for money rather than love
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 6,882 feet

William D. Taylor's production "The Furnace" for Realart will probably be considered a good picture because of the production itself for there is little in the story to recommend it. In the first place because it's not new and the fact that it is billed as a something which "often occurs in real life" is not sufficient excuse for doing it in pictures in comparative frequency.

From the opening scenes in which a wedding is lavishly staged until the end elaborate sets and social functions hold the center of attention. Monte Carlo is reproduced with spectacular effect and most of the settings are extravagant in decoration. The author of this bit of "everyday life" is given as "Pan," whether or not this means anything, with Julia Crawford Ivers writing the scenario.

Agnes Ayers as the leading lady is always good to look-at, acts with ease and wears beautiful gowns, most of them evening creations. Milton Sills is a very honorable young man with Theodore Roberts contributing a good performance as an old grouch and incidentally providing the only comedy relief the offering possesses. The other members of the cast fulfill the requirements of their roles adequately.

Folly Vallance's marriage to Anthony Bond is a most elaborate affair. Their honeymoon takes them to Monte Carlo where they become acquainted with General Brent, his wife, and daughter Patricia. Later the Brenets and Bonds are neighbors in London. Keene Mordaunt, besides being an old friend of Anthony Bond's, is in love with Patricia Brent.

Keene has also previously been an admirer of Folly's although in the long run Anthony's money talked the loudest and at the time of the marriage Keene shook his head knowingly and muttered "poor fellow"—meaning Anthony. Folly soon tires of her marriage, claiming that Anthony spends all his time with his business, though the spectator can't agree with her since Anthony is usually seen hovering around while friend wife flirts with Counts and the like.

Eventually Folly decides to run away with Count Svensen but Keene decides otherwise and follows the couple to an inn where he takes Folly back to her home. Anthony has returned unexpectedly from out of town and finding Folly with Keene accuses Keene of being in love with Folly. But Folly realizes her mistake, tells her husband the truth and there is a reconciliation.

You Can Promise Them Something Good to Look At
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Because of the big way in which the production has been done "The Furnace" will most likely please the majority of audiences even if the story is not new to them. The title is not particularly pertinent except for the bit of simile offered as an introduction so unless you feel obliged to work with the title it would be better to go about it from a standpoint of production. Announce it as a William D. Taylor production for Realart. The author's name won't mean anything to them so confine names to the members of the cast. Mention Milton Sills, Theodore Robert and Agnes Ayres. For the benefit of the women tell them Miss Ayres wears some gorgeous gowns which they will want to see. Despite the fact that the picture is about two reels too long they will want to see the end of this society drama.

Motion picture patrons are often afraid of pictures featuring child actors, and are prone to expect an amateurish performance at best in such productions.
A mighty pleasant surprise is waiting for these in "Dinty," for the skillful work of Marshall Neilan, and the natural ability and appeal of Wesley Barry, have produced a fine piece of entertainment, and one of the best "boy" pictures shown. Wesley is just plain "boy" all the way through the picture, but he is a "boy" that is highly interesting.

The story of Dinty has a pathetic, human appeal, so deftly interwoven with humor, that it will be almost certain to please any audience that appreciates a good picture. Of the supporting players, Noah Beery gives perhaps the best performance as Wong
Tai, the wealthy opium smuggler, although Colleen Moore, Marjorie Daw, and in fact the whole cast handle their parts in a wholly satisfactory manner.

The story opens with the romance of Dinty's mother and father in Ireland. The father comes to San Francisco, prospers and sends for Dinty's mother and the wee lad, who discover upon their arrival that the husband and father has met a sudden death. Dinty forms the Newsboys' Trust and successfully competes again "Muggsy's" gang for business supremacy. The death of his mother leaves the boy stunned for a time but he recovers, determined to become the man his mother prayed he would be.

Side by side with Dinty's story, runs an underground Chinatown plot, in which Wong Tai, a wealthy opium smuggler, to be revenged upon Judge Whitley, who has sentenced his son to death, kidnaps the Judge's daughter and decrees her death. Dinty, through his associates in the "Trust" learns of the plot and makes a thrilling last moment rescue of the girl.
Of course there is a love story running through all this.

Wesley Barry's Past Work Gives You Ample Opportunity

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Dinty" offers an unusual feature in that it brings forth a boy star who can and does act. Wesley Barry has been seen before and his work has been enjoyed in several more or less important parts recently, and his first starring vehicle should excite considerable interest. Of course use Marshall Neilan's name in all your advertising.

Bring out the melodramatic features of the Chinatown plot. You can safely promise thrills and excitement on this score. Make it plain that it is far above anything they have ever seen with a child in the leadning part, emphasizing the remarkable characterization in the work of Wesley Barry.
What would you do you were just out of college, full of ambition, terribly in love—and broke?

You might do any one of a thousand things, it's ten to one you never hit on a scheme half so funny as the conviction that George Ade put into his famous play:

It's the cleanest, crispest, cleverest comedy of the year.

CHARACTER OF STORY ......Daughter of formerly wealthy mother enters marriage bargain to save her family from poverty, but later falls in love with her husband

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... About 5,000 feet

Careful direction and fine acting have made up for the rather time-worn situations which comprise the story of "The Daughter Pays," which is of the "Bought and Paid For" variety with the exception of an interesting character splendidly portrayed by Norman Trevor, whose acting lends no small amount of interest to the picture. Miss Hammerstein plays with ease and is always appealing.

The director has shown care in the handling of the players and the action is kept moving evenly, although the interest is inclined to slump once or twice where by-play is introduced. This has no serious effect, however. The offering provides adequate entertainment especially in view of the story those concerned had to work with.

The early reels particularly contain too many titles. There’s a scene and then a title—mostly conversation. Some of it could well be eliminated. The cameraman has not judged his distance well in many of the interior sets. The players are seen way in the background evidently acting, but until they finally decide to give a close-up the audience doesn’t know what is going on. The sets are not lavish enough to require getting the entire thing in focus. Elimination of these long shots would help.

Virginia Mynors does the housework while her widowed mother broods over the debts she cannot pay. The mother consents to Virginia visiting Miriam Roseborough, a wealthy friend with a marriageable brother. Mrs. Mynors hopes for a wealthy marriage for her daughter. Nothing however comes of the visit until Mrs. Mynors receives a visit from Osbert Gaunt, former wealthy suitor whom Mrs. Mynors had jilted to marry her husband. The lady is shocked to learn that Gaunt had seen her daughter and wants to marry her.

To save her family from poverty Virginia marries Gaunt only to have him tell her immediately after the ceremony that he believes her to be her mother’s duplicate, while in reality Virginia resembles her mother in name only. Gaunt’s plan is to take Virginia away from London and forbid her all luxury. Each act of her husband is met with quiet submissiveness by Virginia until her sister’s illness stirs her hatred for Gaunt and she defies him to prevent her leaving the house to go to her sister.

Virginia’s threatened illness works a change in Gaunt and he begins to weaken. But all advances are repulsed and it is not until he is near death in attempting to save a friend’s life, that Virginia realizes she is in love with her husband.

Use the Star’s Name and Attract With Catchlines

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Good acting and a well-directed picture is what you will offer them in "The Daughter Pays," Elaine Hammerstein’s latest Select offering. If you have played the star’s previous productions with success you should make her name the outstanding feature. Also mention Norman Trevor’s name in connection with his splendid performance. Even though he may not be known as a screen player, there will be those familiar with his stage career.

It would be well to name the author for those who have read the book. Catchlines could read: "Should ‘The Daughter Pays’ the price of an unhappy marriage to satisfy a selfish mother and to save her family from poverty?” Or, “She agreed to pay the purchase price even by sacrificing herself, but see how she made the bargain worth while.”
As photography it is the best, the most beautiful that moving pictures have ever shown—this picture, "The Last of the Mohicans." Maurice Tourneur never made such scenes before, and probably never will again. How he can ever beat them is something to guess about these long Winter evenings. The compositions he makes of Indians, clouds, mountains, trees, gun barrels, waterfalls, are masterpieces, and if this is not great art, then Rembrandt was a blacksmith. Tourneur can do things with sunlight that you cannot dream, and if he could paint emotion with the Hugo touch of Griffith he would be the greatest man in pictures. As it is, he is one of the mighty, and "The Last of the Mohicans" is his best. See it at the Pantheon now. Before you know it your soul will leave your broken-backed old carcass slumped in the seat and, climbing up onto the silver sheet, will go off back into the old young days of your youth hand in hand with Uncas and Hawkeye and the snaky Magua, who would never never bite the dust until Cooper had you up against the hind cover of the book. Not by new stunts of storytelling does Tourneur work wonders with your soul, for the story is the plain tale of the Leather Stocking classic; not by marvelous subtleties for they are short and merely fitting, but by this thing he has mastered, photography.

Against the dream cliffs and falling wreaths of water in Yellowstone, and again before painted curtains as in "Treasure Island," he puts his nude and gleaming savages through their paces, circling, swirling about the lovely Cora Muir, her "fair hair" sister, her hero Uncas, her canny crack shot Hawkeye, and her foul pursuer Magua.

Although there are good names in the cast, film personalities are kept out; no names are posted, no faces featured; everything subordinated to the illusion, to the come-back of your youthful thrills which Tourneur was hunting.

Magua, the fiend, is Wallace Beery; Uncas, the blameless, is Albert Roscoe; Cora is Barbara Bedford, a beauty who is new but a real actress, and Hawkeye is Harry Lorraine. They come and go, there are thrills when the hundreds of glistening braves massacre the women and children; when Chingachgook and Magua have their duel; when Uncas shoots a crippled Huron out of the tree tops; when Beery, Roscoe and Miss Bedford fight on the lip of the thousand-foot cliff. There are all the thrills you can stand, but, more than that, there is the unearthly beauty of the photography itself; an achievement that will be remembered, Mr. Tourneur!

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ............... 5,600 feet
"The Brute Master," by Charmian London, wife of the late Jack London, is very much after the fashion of the latter's "Sea Wolf" in theme and as far as the production itself, has been given a thoroughly realistic and splendidly acted presentation. The action aboard the vessel is undoubtedly the best in the picture. However, it's really too big in the opening reels for the latter climax is weak in comparison. And after the burning of the vessel in the opening, the interest drops in the switching of the action to a tropical island with the characters all assembled there to continue the story.

Charmian London's "Brute Master" has not the force of the "Sea Wolf" though Hobart Bosworth's performance contributes in no small way toward making the production a good audience picture. The last reel is a bit slow and the closing shot not convincing since it is hard to understand that a girl who has lived in fear of a man of the "Brute Master's" type could believe sincerely enough in his sudden regeneration to fall in love with him. However, this may make his awakening of conscience more complete and effective with some.

A rather strong sex appeal runs through the story and even borders on the extravagant at times but here again for the purpose of making a point more forceful, this may not offend. The photography is very fine and there are several splendid effects, notably the firing of the boat and the scenes attendant upon this sequence.

Madeline Grey, spending the winter in a tropical resort, is suddenly called home to San Francisco. Walter Maxwell, also a member of the winter colony, and Madeline secure passage on a schooner owned by Bucko McAllister, known as "The Brute Master" for his brutality. One day while in the skipper's cabin Madeline is approached by McAllister in a way that frightens her. When he attempts to force his unwelcome attentions, Madeline hands him a violin to play for her. This calms the "brute" and he leaves the girl. A very unconvincing touch, this.

One of the crew, enraged by a blow from the skipper, sets fire to the ship. All make their escape in life boats but McAllister, who is trapped on the burning vessel. Madeline and Maxwell, together with members of the crew reach an island and with the help of friendly natives get along well enough until McAllister appears on the scene and takes charge of things. However, in the long run, after Maxwell turns the natives against the skipper, and also loses his life for his trouble, McAllister shows his better nature and when he is left alone on the island Madeline decides to remain with him.

A Good Audience Picture to Base Your Promises Upon

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Despite its various implausibilities and the fact that there are one or two bad slumps in the action and times when the interest drags along for a bit, "The Brute Master," a rather pertinent title by the way, will undoubtedly prove a strong audience picture. The big scene, the ship afire, in the early reels will get them interested right at the start.

If you have played "The Sea Wolf," it might be well to mention the similarity in this and the fact that the wife of it's author is responsible for "The Brute Master." Catchlines linked up with the titles can be used as follows: "He was called 'The Brute Master,' but when he saw himself as others saw him." See for yourself the regeneration of Bucko McAllister, the tyrannical skipper."

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Wandering cowboy brings about settlement of striking miners and plotting superintendents
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,000

In the first place this can't compare with some of the stories provided for Harry Carey in the past and added to that "West is West" has been poorly directed and contains titles that only mess things up more than the real action when, had they been intelligently written to get over or clarify things a bit they would have fulfilled a big need of the picture.

There's a lot of plotting on the part of the manager of a mine and the business associate of the owner but just what it's all about is never made clear except that hero Harry does the trick that makes everything come out all right. A bit of the East is introduced in the form of a dance with all real New York looking types attending, the ladies and gentleman in evening dress. Incidentally they all run out to the mine in their dance clothes when they hear an explosion. A lot of unconvincing and highly complicated situations continue along the rest of the way with the hero bearing in mind a little girl he had saved from a "furnished room" episode when she had looked for work in a nearby town. Of course for a finishing touch Harry proposes to her.

The best thing about "West is West" is the locations and settings which provide the background for the story. Some fine shots of a mining town with close-ups both of the exteriors and interiors of the mines have been splendidly photographed and are the real thing.

Dick, the cowboy from nowhere, signs up to work for a mine in San Clemente not knowing that he is filling the place as a strike breaker. Dick decides to go through with the job especially when he sees the girl "who smiled at him" lives in the same town. He is hired by the superintendent and manager of the mine to blow up a certain tunnel and to make it appear that the strikers did the job.

However, Dick arranges things his own way and he pulls the trick to expose the plotters and makes a hero of himself. He is given a big job by the owner which he agrees to accept when the girl promises to marry him. In the cast are Charles Le Moyne, Joe Harris, Ted Brooks, Ed Latell, Otto Nelson, Jack Dill, Sue Mason, Mignonne, Arthur Millett and others.

Star's Admirers May Be Satisfied. Others Won't

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Unless the star is a favorite, and he probably is if you have shown some of his previous western pictures, you can probably get away with this one. If, on the other hand, you are depending on the story to get it over, you're liable to hear kicks on "West is West," mostly because they won't get it. It may be that Universal will insert some explanatory titles which would help a whole lot.

There is nothing to talk about but the name of the star unless you want to get them in with catchlines such as "Do you want someone to settle a strike? See how a wandering cowboy settled the situation very simply and made a hero of himself." Or, "Because a girl smiled at him, he wanted to go straight. Did he do it? See 'West is West.'"

Gentlemen: Attention: Mr. Zierler

I have just finished seeing Dolores Cassinelli in the "Hidden Light" for the third time, and I like it better and am more impressed with it every time I see it.

At our last exhibition we showed this feature to some of the most prominent exhibitors in the city, and they were so impressed with it that they asked us to be sure and let them know when we are going to show it again, as they would like to see it once more, and when you get "hard boiled" exhibitors to ask that - you've got some picture.

We have a winner in this picture and you can rest assured that we are not going to hide the "Hidden Light" under a bushel basket.

Sincerely yours,

GOLLOS ENTERPRISES.

Satisfactory Production But Star Deserves Better Story

"THE CITY SPARROW"
Paramount

DIRECTOR .................... Sam Wood
AUTHOR .................... Kate Jordan
SCENARIO BY ............... Clara Genevieve Kennedy
CAMERAMAN ................ Alfred Gilks
AS A WHOLE......Not unusual production but will make satisfactory program offering

STORY......Star deserves better opportunity than this although they have done well with it as it is

DIRECTION......Some good touches and some not so good

PHOTOGRAPHY ................ All right
LIGHTINGS .................. Night scenes not good
CAMERA WORK .......... Average
STAR......Makes much of role that offers little that's new

SUPPORT......Walter Hiers has small comedy part with Clyde Fillmore the hero

EXTERIORS ............... Pretty rural shots
INTERIORS ............... All right

DETAIL ....................... Fair

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Girl vaudeville artist marries farmer

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 4,618 feet

"The City Sparrow" can be summed up in a very few words, namely a satisfactory program picture. The production given the story is adequate and manages to make more of the story than might be expected inasmuch as there is very little in it that can be called new. The situations have all been used before and certainly the general idea has already formed the basis of more than one picture.

The star seems to be running out of luck when it comes to stories. They're all about of the same calibre, seldom giving her a chance to make any exceptional impression. The director has made a good deal out of one of those stories that in the spectator's mind reaches a climax several times and just as you expect things to be all over, something turns up to keep it going a while longer. Of course they finally reach a conclusion but you're kept waiting so long for it that it doesn't get over the way it should.

Walter Hiers provides a bit in the way of amusement but there isn't enough opportunity for him to do very much. Clyde Fillmore makes a good farmer hero.

Milly West in spite of the long time she has been dancing has never gotten above small time. She has repeatedly refused to marry Tim, a country fellow working as a demonstrator, and boarding in the same house with Milly. During one of her performances Milly falls and is injured. After her partial recovery Milly accepts an engagement in a cabaret but is not strong enough to work and has to give it up.

William Boyd, a farmer and neighbor of Tim's in his home town Springdale, comes to the city at the request of Tim's mother who has received a letter from her son saying he intended to kill himself because Milly refused to marry him. Of course Tim hadn't killed himself and William interests himself in Milly and finally offers to take her back to the country to regain her health.

Milly goes to live with the Springdale rector and his daughter. Eventually Boyd proposes to Milly and is accepted. Milly is very happy until she realizes Boyd's love for children and the fact that following her accident the doctor told her she could never be a mother. Milly thinks it best to go away and leaves a note of good-bye to to Boyd. He overtakes her at the station and after Milly explains her reason for going, Boyd is content to adopt a little orphan whom he has been taking care of.

Use the Star's Name and Lines that Will Get Them In

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Miss Clayton's name will be your main bet if you book "The City Sparrow." Play up the star and mention her previous productions which you may have played to satisfaction. There is very little in the story which you can afford to make promises on but you can probably attract a good size audience by catchlines and while the picture won't make an impression they will possibly be fairly well satisfied with it.

There will be a good many, however, who will begin to lose patience with the sort of stories being given to Miss Clayton. She deserves much better vehicles than those provided for her lately. Catchlines: "The City Sparrow' found a country nest. See Ethel Clayton as a vaudeville actress who found happiness in a country sweetheart and a cozy home."

Dear Mr. Hart:—

As your attorneys, we are pleased to advise you that in both the actions which we recently instituted in your behalf against the Peerless Film Service and against L. F. O'Donnell, to restrain the exhibition of your old pictures under false and misleading titles, the Superior Court of this County has this day granted a permanent injunction in accordance with the prayer of your complaint.

The decrees specifically prohibit the exhibition of your old pictures under any of the following false titles:

Nor can these pictures be exhibited under any titles, except the ones under which they were originally released, for the decree contains this additional provision:

“And it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said defendant and each of them, their agents, servants and employees, cease and desist from leasing, distributing, advertising or exhibiting, or causing to be leased, distributed, advertised or exhibited, any of the old motion picture films made or acted in by the plaintiff William S. Hart, under any titles other than the original and true titles.”

We feel confident that the issuance of these injunctions will put an end to this nefarious practice, but if any distributor or exhibitor, no matter who he may be, or where located, should commit or attempt to commit a similarly unlawful act, we shall proceed immediately, in accordance with your instructions, to file suit and shall demand both an injunction and damages.

Yours very truly,

Western With Real Shootin' Atmosphere But Sometimes Unconvincing

AS A WHOLE Western that has serial atmosphere makes a weak start; but has plenty of thrills once it's started

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Fair

CAMERA WORK .................. Average

STAR .................. Good type for role

SUPPORT .................. All right

EXTERIORS .................. Western scenes

INTERIORS .................. Adequate

DETAIL ........................ Satisfactory

CHARACTER OF STORY ........ Hero brings law and order into wild west town

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,000 feet

Possibly the fact that the author of "The Iron Rider" is Frank L. Packard, who wrote "The Miracle Man," is a point in favor of William Russell's newest Fox production. The opening reel is slow as far as getting the audience interested is concerned. Of course, it starts right off with a lot of shootin' but even this doesn't mean much until the story gets going, after which things happen along very much in serial fashion.

Implausibility plays a big part but will be overlooked for the thrills it furnishes. One masked man subdues a whole cafe full of fightin' westerns just by talking boldly to them. At the point of his gun they meekly step back and allow him to condemn one of their number to death for a murder he had committed and abide by his decision without further protest. This is unconvincing but serves as reason for the action that follows when the villain masks like the original masked rider (The Iron Rider) and closes up the village saloon on Sunday then proceeds to help himself to all the money lying around.

Larry Lannigan's father thirty years before had organized "The Iron Riders," consisting of the law-abiding citizens of Angel City, who took upon themselves the responsibility of bring law and order to the lawless town. However, Angel City is once more a bedlam. Larry takes the oath of the Iron Rider, never to use his office for personal gains.

His first act is to see that proper punishment is given to Jed, who has killed a man. However, Larry's identity is not known and Jim Mason and the sheriff hit upon a plan to impersonate the Iron Rider by closing up the saloon on Sunday and incidentally robbing it. When Larry's father, watching through the window, sees the Iron Rider stealing the money, he believes it to be his son of course, and enraged at his disregard of the oath, shoots.

The masked man (the sheriff) escapes. It happens that Larry is in love with the sheriff's daughter, so to save her he allows the citizens to take him as the thief. Eventually it turns out all right, Larry is proved innocent and Vola is rescued from the clutches of the villain.

"THE IRON RIDER"
Fox
Westerns of this type find happy homes in many theaters, especially those catering to younger audiences. It's the kind that the youngsters whistle for more and in "The Iron Rider," they'll get all the real western thrills they could want with shootin' galore.

The star’s name can be used extensively if he is liked by your patrons.

Plenty of exploitation ideas suggest themselves in the way of the title and the mystery surrounding the hooded-rider. You can mention that the story is by the author of "The Miracle Man" and also "The White Moll." You might also play it up as a story of father against son and promise them a "fight to the finish."

Society Crook Story. No New Twist But Adequate Production

Gladys Walton in
"RISKY BUSINESS" Universal

DIRECTOR .................... Harry B. Harris
AUTHORS .................... Douglas Doty and John Colton
SCENARIO BY .............. Douglas Doty and John Colton

Photography .................. All right

Character of Story...... Society crook reforms through girl's influence and trust

Length of Production .... About 5,000 feet

Lack of originality is probably "Risky Business" biggest fault. True enough, the director had poor story material to work with in the first place, a story composed of all familiar situations and with the ending obvious almost from the start. However, there has been no effort or attempt to cover up this obviousness on his part and the story is unfolded just as you expect it with no new twist or novel touch.

The society crook, the missing pearls and the pretty daughter of the crook's victim are the familiar characters who have to do with the "Risky Business." Gladys Walton as the ingenue is pleasing and her performance does much to relieve a very "movie" sort of story. Some bits are never explained. For instance, Mrs. Renwick receives a letter from a friend saying that a certain Captain Chantry will visit her. It turns out that Captain Chantry is "English Harry," society crook. Whether there was a real Captain Chantry due to arrive or whether the crook forged the note, is never disclosed.

The production end of it has been well enough taken care of. Some pretty exteriors of a country estate and adequate interior sets make appropriate backgrounds. The supporting cast including Lillian Lawrence, Maude Wayne and Lewis Willoughby do what is required of them well enough.

Mrs. Fanshaw Renwick entertains elaborately at her California home. Phillipa, (Miss Walton), is the youngest daughter and Ericca, the older, married daughter whose husband is away while she carries on a flirtation with a Mr. Ralli. Mrs. Renwick announces the arrival of Captain Chantry to her guests but is disappointed when he begs to be excused from attending her masked ball because of the effects of shell shock.

Phillipa falls for the "captain's" war stories and thinking him quite a hero begs him to take her to the ball. He agrees on condition that she tell no one. Phillipa, disguised, startles the guest by a dance during which the lights go out and later Mrs. Renwick misses her pearls. Chantry is apologizing for his necessary early departure when Ericca begs him to save Phillipa from Ralli. It seems that Ericca had intended carrying her flirtation a bit too far and Phillipa hearing of her intention to go aboard Ralli's yacht went in her sister's stead.

Chantry has fallen in love with Phillipa and so he risks capture by the police to save Phillipa. He does and then confesses to the two sisters that he is a thief and produces the pearls. But the Mrs. Renwick understands that the pearls are "found," while Chantry goes away promising to return for Phillipa when he can prove himself worthy.

Announce Another From Universal's New Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Miss Walton as Universal's latest star seems to have proven herself quite capable so far, so if you have shown any of her pictures you probably will satisfy them with this despite the story's lack of originality. The society crook idea is still popular in many neighborhood houses and for the sake of those who still favor this sort of material say: "Is stealing always a 'Risky Business'? And does it pay?" See Gladys Walton in her latest picture for Universal."

You can announce it as the story of a mischievous young sub-deb who falls in love with a crook. "If you're entertaining some notable be sure you have the real person or you'll be minus your pearl necklace. See 'Risky Business' and you'll know why."

Some Short Reels

"Constantinople"—Educational
Type of production.................... 1 reel scenic and aravelogue

This film, produced under the auspices of the American Red Cross, has several points of interest. Some very good panoramic views of the Turkish capital, with shots of the principal Mosques and other public buildings, comprise the first portion. The Sultan and his guard are shown leaving the palace and there are several informative shots of the work of the Red Crescent (the Turkish Red Cross) among the suffering refugees. The last half of the reel is unique. It shows an entire religious service of "Howling Dervishes," a subject doubtless photographed for the first time. How these people torture their eels, and their queer actions when worked up to a religious ecstasy is clearly and vividly shown. The lighting of this portion is necessarily poor, as it was taken in the actual room of worship, but it forms an intensely interesting and unusual bit of footage, and should prove an attraction distinctly different and above the average.

"A Doggone Wedding"—Fox—Sunshine
Type of production.................... 2 reel comedy

This one doesn't get off for a very good start, the first hundred feet being devoid of laughs. However, it livens up and produces a lot of fairly good comedy business after that. The first portion deals with the efforts of the dog catcher to make a grand haul, and the dogs provide most of the comedy. The second reel finds the dog catcher dreaming he is mistaken for a count, and is about to marry an heiress, when he is awakened. The comedians work hard, and there is just about enough stuff in the two reels to make an average offering. The outstanding fun feature is a scene showing a large sausage machine, producing marvelously animated sausages from a continuous stream of dogs entering the other end. The animals should make the film particularly enjoyable to children. It was directed by Harry Williams.

"Cleopatra"—Fox
Type of production.................... 1 reel animated cartoon

Mutt and Jeff are transported back to Egypt in the days of Cleopatra, where Mutt decides to win the queen by impersonating a new dancer. After he has given a lengthy exhibition, which Anthony, who is seated by Cleo, claims is terrible, Mutt discovers that Anthony is Jeff. He quickly gives him the usual beating. There are more than the usual number of laughs in the reel, which seems to be the best of the series for some time.

"The Stranger"—Universal
Type of production.................... 2 reel western

Ed. (Hoot) Gibson is featured in this. It is a stereotyped western, with stage robbery, and a hero who is quick on the draw. The action is fast after the first hundred feet and the story is of fair interest for this type of picture. Gibson has rather a pleasing personality, and the offering on the whole will probably do very well in houses where westerns are popular, when coupled with a longer feature. The familiarity of the type prohibits the use of such a picture in the larger houses unless the patrons are "wild and woolly" fans.

Pathe Review No. 80
Type of production.................... 1 reel magazine

The colored pictures of the Alps which open this reel have been well photographed and colored. The next subject is a thoroughly interesting discussion of wireless telegraphy with photographs and diagrams showing the inventions of James Harris and the various uses of wireless during the war. A Hy Mayer Travlaugh is called "Such is Life in Midwinter" with sleigh-riding its feature. Another colored feature shows the making of fans by the Japanese.

"Queens Up"—Pathé
Type of production.................... 1 reel comedy

The Vanity Fair Girls again make this number of the series by that name an acceptable reel. The girls are all very good to look at and make a spicy, although not the least suggestive offering of the reel, with an attractive display of their beauty offering. Eddie Boland is definitely the featured comedian, and while he works hard for laughs, does not always get them. The situations, which are amusing, could be better developed by more effective work on the part of Boland. It is well directed and well staged, and on the whole is up to the standard of the series thus far, making a better than average impression for a production of its kind. If you have not yet booked any of the Vanity Fair series, you will find them a pleasing novelty in one-reelers.

"Getting a Polish"—Chester—Educational
Type of production.................... 1 reel travelogue

The entire footage of this reel is devoted to scenes along the Riviera both in France and Italy. Some unphotographed spots have been selected in this much photographed region, and some fine views of the picturesque Mediterranean coast obtained. The latter portion gives some excellent shots of the bay and city of Naples, with Mt. Vesuvius in the distance. The Island of Capri, which was the playground of the Roman emperors, has been photographed, with views of several Roman ruins and some remarkable rock formations which exist in the surrounding waters. Most of the footage is interesting and on the whole the reel is fully up to standard. Titles by William Henry Wright.

"Swat the Landlord"—Chester—Educational
Type of production.................... 1 reel travelogue

A trip over the great waterways of China is presented in this offering. The mode of existence of several hundred thousand Chinese in small boats on these rivers is shown. There is a great deal of sappiness to most of the footage which gives repeated shots of the same type of houseboat. Somewhat more interesting is the latter portion, showing the management of a huge flock of ducks by one of the Chinese water dwellers. The reel cannot be held especially interesting as a whole, and offers no special feature to part with. The titles, purporting to be humorous, fall short in most cases.

"Wilderness Friends"—Educational
Type of production.................... 1 reel nature study

This reel, produced in co-operation with the Conservation Commission of New York State, presents a series of close-up studies of various wild things, birds and beasts to be found in the Northern climate. There are shots of the loon, moose, bear, mink, raccoon, and others. The material is not very interesting in any part, and some of it is boring. An amusing battle between a raccoon and a dog is about the only lively feature. It does not furnish enough entertainment to make a good filler. Below par,
Short Reels

“A Paradise for Birds”—Bray-Goldwyn
Type of production..........................1 reel scenic

This Bray Pictograph shows the region in and around the Columbia River Valley in Oregon. Some pleasing shots of cataracts and falls are shown at the beginning, and the reel then takes the form of a trip through the river valley to Lake Malheur. The islands of the lake are a government bird reserve, and some very good views of the birds, pelicans, herons and egrets, with their plumage are shown. Artistic tinting aids in making it an offering up to par. Will be satisfactory where such a filler is wanted.

“Snap Judgment”—Goldwyn
Type of production..........................1 reel animated cartoon

Judge Rummy gets in hot water in this one, when Silk Hat Harry “snap-shoots” him between two female store window dummies. Rummy’s court session becomes a series of discharges, when Harry presents each prisoner with a copy of the photograph. Rummy succeeds in hiding the pictures from his wife until Harry at length sends him an enlargement, when the Judge is chastised by his spouse. Several laughs in the reel, which is up to standard.

“Happy Hours”—Goldwyn
Type of production..........................1 reel sports magazine

A product of the Ford film laboratories, presenting a series of short shots of nearly every outdoor sport familiar to the American people. Some interesting shots of ski jumping, surf riding and polo comprise about all the entertainment, the balance of the footage being devoted to unknown football and baseball contests. As a whole does not offer anything of particular value, but might do as a short filler.

“The Thief”—Reelcraft
Type of production..........................1 reel comedy

Most of the footage of this is regulation slapstick of the ordinary sort. Billy Franey is featured, and he contrives to extract a few laughs from business that is much overworked. The scene is laid in a park, where Franey, a silk-hatted gentleman and a tramp become involved in the theft of a young lady’s purse, which a mysterious hand repeatedly steals from its owner, depositing it on the persons of the three. A bit of business at the finish, when the mysterious hand proves to be the director’s, who explains that he was merely helping the story, and a shot of the cameraman, help out an otherwise mediocre reel. It will probably get out in some of the smaller houses, but seems to be too old stuff for others.

“He Looks Like Him”—Reelcraft
Type of production..........................2 reels comedy

An unusual type of two reeler with its comedy based on the resemblance of two young men. They are so nearly alike that it looks almost like trick photography, with a result that will probably put it over with better than average success. There are some good comedy situations developed in the plot, which of course involves mistaken identity. The sub-titles kid the picture, sometimes in a clever way, which in this type of comedy goes pretty well, and furnish a little different kind of amusement. It moves along smoothly, has been well directed and well photographed. On the whole a good film of its type.

Screen Snapshots No. 13—C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.
Type of production..........................1 reel fan magazine

This number of the series presents some intimate glimpses into the “behind-the-scenes” life of a few favorites, which should provide good entertainment for the fans who relish a closer intimacy with their stars. Dustin Farnum is first seen, rehearsing a “heavy” part, and this is followed by a demonstration of double exposure photography. You next glimpse Viola Dana, arriving home from the studio, and welcomed by her mother. Richard Barthelmess, Jean Page and Joe Ryan are next shown, the last two on an interior set in the Vitagraph studio. A shot of the Universal City property shows the quantity of furniture, etc., therein. A humorous incident in the life of a film star is next enacted by Geraldine Farrar and Louis Tellegen. Director Reginald Barker is seen making an early morning demand for their presence at the studio. The two stars leave in the midst of their morning toilet, only to be halted by a traffic officer. The reel concludes with a single shot of the Goldwyn studio in California, a close-up study of D. W. Griffith, and a glimpse of his studio near New York City.

PRESENTED BY VICTOR KREMER
One man saw in the beautiful innocence of the girl only something to pursue and capture.

The other saw in her something to be guarded and cherished and yet he was a crook.

To be worthy of her he decided to be straight, and straight he was from that day on. Yet those who should have been the first to help him in his worthy resolve were the last to believe and aid, the representatives of the law.

A really splendid picture, full of suspense, action, and lots of humor, too.
Order Vacated

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has vacated an order of a Special Term granting a motion for the reformation of a partnership agreement. An appeal in the case of Arland W. Johnson v. The court determined that the agreement was not properly enforced, and vacated the previous decision.

About most everything. When the different department heads want to reach AZ they tackle Consheltman. Great idea. It gives him an insight into a lot of things. No one department especially. Just gives him a big league working idea.

About the first of the year things can be expected to happen. Then watch Consheltman. Stick this on your new year pad. Then go out and make a bet that Consheltman won't be AZ's point of contact. He'll be something else. Big job. For he's a big man.

Never heard of him in the picture business? No? But if you'd happen to be mixed up in the general business field you might have heard that he did some big things for the National Cash Register Co. Very big things. That's where Wall Street heard of him. That's why he's in Famous.

New Orleans—“Screencraft,” heralded as a motion picture trade paper for exhibitors of the south, recently made its appearance. The magazine will be a semi-monthly. It is edited by A. Jules Benedict.

Strict Observance in Albany

(Special to WID’S DAILY)

Albany, N. Y.—Theater managers will be held to strict compliance with the law which prohibits the admissi-on to theaters of children under 16 without parent or guardian. This action was taken after a conference between Chief of Police Hyatt, Judge Brady of the City Court and an official of the Humane Society. Society inspectors and the city police began an active crusade in watching the theaters, especially the picture theaters.

Ledoux Opens Winter Garden

Omaha—An indication of how optimistically exhibitors are looking upon the business situation is the action of Manager Wilfred Ledoux of the Empress, who has just opened a winter garden in the basement of his theater. It is a two-floor basement, with a balcony for those who desire refreshments, and a dance floor for dancers. The place is arranged and decorated as a rustic garden.

New Ideas

It seems to me that the motion picture industry is suffering from a general let-down of prosperous conditions. All other industries in the country are suffering alike. Possibly the causes are from over-production, high salaries, waste, inefficiency, and a seeming lack of knowledge as to the value of a dollar.

The motion picture theaters as well as the legitimate theaters and all classes of entertainment in the United States will have to materially reduce their prices at an early date and, of course, the cost of production will have to be reduced in similar fashion.

It is not at all unlikely that the motion picture theaters will pass through a period similar to that of the automobile manufacturers had to experience some years ago when their business was re-adjusted and re-organized.

P. S.—No one can tell how long the present slump will continue. In my humble opinion it will last longer than most people believe.

WILLIAM A. BRADY, President of the Nat'l Ass'n.

Needs Backbone—Less Wishbone

I am interested in all the running comment on the present conditions in our business, and I cannot help adding my small voice to the chorus. What this business needs is some backbone and less wishbone. A little more guts and a little less wind.

In Chicago last week, I tried to get into the Randolphi to see one of my pictures, and had to pass it up for the evening. I find that the boxoffice in the loop, which I estimate has about 275 seats, was going to do better than $8,000 for the week. This is not the record, because I understand they have done over $9,000.

I stopped off in Cleveland and saw that the Rialto was packing them to the doors; also the Stillman was doing a wonderful business on Thursday night.

When I got home last night, at the Brooklyn Strand, Eddie Hyman had them packed in that tremendous lobby at 9 o'clock, so tightly, that they broke the chains. I cannot talk about the rest of Chicago, but some of the theater men who attended the First National Convention from the West told me that there had been considerable unemployment in the Middle West and Far West, but things were opening up again, and the period of unemployment only meant that the people had more time to go to the picture theaters.

The inflation period brought out a lot of poor shows in the theatrical field, and people do not go to poor shows now any more than any other time, and hence the "wold cry," to which I do not subscribe and which I advise any producer, whose mind is close to his ears to get on the train and look the country over for himself.

Undoubtedly as Roger Babson says, we must go back to where we started and to every action due to inflation there is an equal and opposite reaction. But there is no reason to think we are coming back to our proper level in a fortnight.

It is my opinion that the readjustment is going to be rather slow, and without disturbance, and that the producer with a legitimate proposition has as good, if not a better chance to market his product today as he ever had.

C. C. BURR, Master Films.

Big Business for Big Pictures

In general business it is found that the quality product best maintains its market. This covers all lines of goods—shoes, automobiles, groceries, drygoods, etc.

In the legitimate theater it has been found that the established and acknowledged star can still fill theaters when the mushroom stars are all put out of business by decreasing box-office receipts.

That the public is not only still willing to pay real money to see really good pictures, but is even more willing, is amply demonstrated by the unprecedented success of such wonderful pictures as "Way Down East," "The Love of Nothing," "Pollyanna," "Humphrey," "The Mollycoddle," and "Earthbound.

The really good picture will continue to do a really good business. The mediocre picture is going to "get it in the neck."

Amusing Harding

New Orleans—The Saenger Amusement Co. had the honor of entertaining President-elect Harding during his trip to Panama aboard the "Ferdinand," with a choice assortment of First National releases, none of which had been shown in the South, and several of which hadn't been seen anywhere. Incidentally, the Saenger company grabbed off large gobs of publicity for itself, for First National and for the pictures which are later to be shown in Saenger houses in New Orleans and throughout the Saenger circuit.

Berlin Paper Explains Power and Scope of Largest German Organization

(Special to the Daily)

Berlin—The U. F. A. is the largest and most powerful organization in the German film world. An illuminating article which deals with the personnel of the organization and some of its plans is contained in the Film Express, the trade paper which is off the press. The article was published in English, follows:

"With the establishment of the Universal-Film Aktien-Gesellschaft (Ufa) which took place in December, 1917, the German film industry for the first time had been organized in a very big manner and in so far has received the possibility to compete with so far known world firms. When it was said that to the board of supervisory directors belong men as bank director Dr. E. G. Von Straus (Deutsche Bank), Dr. Robert Busch (Stuttgarter Bank), the director of the Tower (American Line), Prince von Donnersmark, director Jacob Goldschmidt (National Bank, Deutschland), director Herbert H. Gutermann (Dresdner Bank), director Johannes Kiehl (Deutsche Bank) Paul Nothelfer, director Gold, Film and Gloria Film and director Martin Denier Co, it should not be forgotten that the Ufa owns in Germany almost 100 theaters and has exerted an influence on a far greater number of theaters by its film renting organization. The leading men of the Ufa are the general manager Carl Brandt, board of supervisory directors, general manager Paul Davidson, director Grand, director Strauss, director Jacob, director S. D. S.

"A special department of the Ufa is the culture department whose aim is to conquer the position for the scientific and educational film which it can claim for education and study. The program of the Ufa is first of all to lift the film more in the sphere of art. That these efforts have not been without a success is proved by the voices from the neutral as well as from the former countries. The Ufa has all over strengthened and improved the respect of the German labor and of the German art with its work. Madame Dubarry has paved the way to the world's market for the German film industry as it is recognized by everybody and has even won a splendid victory in competition with the big American corporations. By employing the highest class artists, actors, directors, technical directors and artistic advisors the possibility is given to accomplish big things such as: 'Carmen', 'Napoleon', 'The Message of the World', 'Madame Dubarry', 'Rose Bernd', 'Monika Vogelsang,' and 'The Brothers Karamazov' etc.

WATCH THIS MAN!

HIS NAME'S ON THE DOOR

Lots of names. George King's, Ralph Proctor's, Oswald Stoll's. And some more. For the Stoll organization has finally gotten down to work 'em everywhere. On 46th St. In the heart of things. Haven't made much noise. Not that type. But the busy bee's you read about haven't a thing on that crowd. Proctor has been around the country. Getting men. Got 'em too, one particularly, Jack Von Tilzer. Was with Hy Mawons and First National. Everybody knows him. Now he's Proctor's right hand and assistant general manager. All set and organized. Everywhere. First release first of year.

So welcome. All of you. Here's to you, and may you stay a long time.

SOMETHING WORTH WHILE

George Davis showed them something. Know Davis? Putting over Curwood's "Isobel," Premier at Astor Ballroom. That's where he showed something. He put on a Prizma before the feature. Beautiful thing. Wonderfully tinted and colored. Showed snow and icicle stuff in a way never before seen. Took your breath. Gave a great atmosphere to the picture which is laid up in Canada. In the great Northwest.

A wonderful idea for all pictures. There is hardly one that couldn't stand just that sort of an introduction. Prizma should push the idea. It's mighty worth while. Brings the feature to you just in the right moment. They sort a nushed it by bringing in all the title cards before the feature was shown. Would have been a lot better just to have drifted into the feature from the Prizma.

But the main idea was there. Is there. All of you producers and exhibitors think it over.

DEAL OFF—MONEY TIGHT

That big deal commented on last Monday is off. For the time being at least. Bankers thinking a lot these days about putting 12 or 13 million in anything. Money too tight. Bankers wag heads seriously these days over anything. Try and borrow some if you don't receive it.

C. C. STARTS RIGHT

Know C. C.? Old Charley Pettijohn from out Hoosier way? New head of newly appointed legislative committee of NAMPI. He started things right last week. Called all ye trade editors in and asked what they thought of certain matters which his committee is taking up. First time in history of the National organization anybody ever thought of such a thing. All of the "I-told-you-so's" have had it that ye editors would disagree over everything. And get nowhere. They disagreed all right. But they got somewhere.

CASHING TIME NEAR

Lot of people getting ready to cash some easy money. Bets made last summer. That a certain producing-distributing organization would be off the map by the first of the year. Time's getting tight. Firm's still in business. Said to have had the best collections in a year last week. Too. That seven to five money sure was soft.

VALUES COUNT

Ernie Shipman says give him a good picture and he'll get it on the market. Yes. Yes. Well, Ernie, there are a lot of chaps who think they have good pictures and somehow or other they don't get on the market. What's the answer? Ever hear the story of what started the first horse race? Just a difference of opinion. Same with what constitutes a good picture. Who knows?

Famous Undecided on Future Sales
Plan-To Concentrate on Big Specials

Exhibitors all over the country have manifested considerable interest in the selling plans of Famous Players in view of the announced intention of producing all-star specials in which several of the present Paramount stars will jointly appear.

When Al Lichtman, director of sales, was asked yesterday how his organization would sell its product in the future, he said that plans were quite indefinite. He stated that there were about 50 pictures completed and ready for release and that the release schedule as far ahead as March has been announced and sold.

It was reported yesterday that if would not prove surprising if a number of the present Paramount stars would be switched to Realart in order to permit the Paramount program to be composed of the big specialties only. It is usual for the sales force to sell the product in three-month blocks, composed of 26 pictures. Bookings like this covering December, January and February are now being contracted for. The speculation over the future booking plans is for the period beginning March 1.

Candler Pictures, Inc., in the Candler Bldg., have been formed to engage in the lease right field. The first series will be reissues after which a series of 10 foreign-made pictures will be offered. These will be subjects made in Denmark and England. Harry A. Klein is president and Edward Salberg is his associate.

State Right Men Handling Triangle Reissues in New Company—Fleckles President

The state right men who were franchise holders in the Hamilton Film Co., formed to distribute the Triangle releases, after the Hallock bankruptcy, have organized a new company called the Film Distributors League, Inc., a New York corporation of which Maurice Fleckles, formerly of Screencraft is president.

The identity of those interested in the new organization is practically the same as those who were a part of the Hamilton Co.

Franklin K. Lane Retires from Americanization Activities—Conference Held

Col. Arthur Woods, former Police Commissioner of New York, is now in active charge of the Americanization work of the N. A. M. P. I. Franklin K. Lane, former Secretary of the Interior, who has been in charge until now, retires because of illness.

Col. Woods and editors of the trade press held a conference a few days ago at which time plans were discussed at great length for the furthering of the idea. One of the main topics of discussion was the question of securing an ample number of productions for distribution, at a cost which would allow their bookings by exhibitors at a figure not considered exorbitant.

R. A. Walsh has finished cutting and titling "Idols," which will be released through First National.

More for Lynch?
Deals Reported On for Theaters in Thomasville, Valdosta and Tifton, Ga.

(1c) (By wire to WLD'S DAILY)

Atlanta—It is reported here that the Lynch organization is still out after more theaters. The latest reports have it that deals are under way for theaters in Thomasville, Valdosta and Tifton, Ga.

The Lynch organization has been active of late and, as noted has acquired theater holdings in Douglas, La Grange, Newman, Americus, Cordele and Opelika, Ala.

An exchange man who is in close touch with the Southern situation estimates that the Lynch interests control about 70 per cent of the business in this territory at the present time. He places the acquisition of so many new theaters by Lynch to the slump in business experienced by the smaller exhibitor who is afraid to "stand the gaff" and therefore is willing to sell.

It was reported last week that Miss Clark has signed with First National but an effort to confirm this at First National at the time failed.

Plans Indefinite
Mildred Harris is at the Netherlands, having returned from the coast. She stated yesterday that she had no immediate plans for the future pending the release of her two remaining Mayer pictures, "Habit" and "Playthings of Desire."

It has been variously reported that Miss Harris would produce independently.

"Mother" to Be Ince Special
(Special to WID’S DAILY)
Los Angeles—A forthcoming Ince special for Associated Producers will be “Mother,” a story by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Newspaper Opinions
"Heliotrope"—F. P. L.
Rivoli
TRIBUNE—It is all so well done that you enjoy it even while you know that it never could possibly happen in real life.
AMERICAN—* * * A superbly impressive and unusual picture. * * *
HERALD—"Heliotrope" is the appeal to all who like fragrance and are on the screen.
TIMES—It is a melodrama which might have been a tragedy. It deals with methodically contrived situations when it might have dealt in character.
JOURNAL—* * * Heliotrope Harry stands forth as one of the most unusual yet one of the most logical characterizations which the screen has held in recent years.
TELEGRAM—An intensely dramatic film.
SUN—* * * A splendid adaptation of Richard Washburn Child’s story, "A Whiff of Heliotrope." The play still abounds in action, flavored with a naive sentiment which seems to mellow each thrill.
GLOBE—"Heliotrope" is another good plot gone wrong. It has, however, so subtle and elusive a plot that it is difficult to hold the director responsible for its inadequacy on the screen.
MAIL—"Heliotrope" is a red-blooded picture, and the direction of George D. Baker has the touch of genius.
POST—Obvious, you’ll say, but hardly more obvious than most of this film that might have been made a far more gripping thing than it is.
World, Daily News and Evening World made no comment.

"The Mark of Zorro"—United Artists
Capitol
TRIBUNE—The picture is entertaining and amusing but not in the least convincing.
WORLD—There are breathtaking hops and escapes from danger, splendidly acted moments of comedy and a pleasant little love story.
AMERICAN—There is plenty of action in the picture, much romance and a climax that satisfies admirers of the star.
HERALD—While this picture * * * has less of humor than usual with this star, it is more romantic in its phases.
TIMES—* * * There are moments in the motion picture which must delight anyone.
DAILY NEWS—But on the whole the story is interesting, the playing well done, and the film decidedly good entertainment.
TELEGRAM—A noteworthy film thriller.
SUN—* * * Fairbanks manages to have a good time and to communicate that feeling to the audience. * * *
GLOBE—There is less humor in the film than in most of his productions, but he hardly misses this in the fast and furious action.
MAIL—Screen fans can like a picture a whole lot, without applauding it, but yesterday they applauded it as if Dung were there bawling his thanks.
POST—* * * the story needed the very things that a well-directed, well-acted picture could contribute. Movietone admirers must boast of it and only the captious will say them nay.
Journal and Evening World made no comment.

"Dangerous Business"—1st National
Strand
WORLD—* * * Gave to her admirers what is generally believed to be the finest character of any career on the screen.
HERALD—Constable and the star, shares equal honors with a young leading man, Kenneth Harlan, a newcomer to the Talmadge casts, who displayed much ingenuity in his characterization.
JOURNAL—A leading man named Kenneth Harlan shares honors with the star.
TELEGRAM—A financially promising and unusual opportunity for Miss Talmadge to display her talents, and also those of the leading man.
SUN—* * * Another of those madeup roles which constables make other stars and her hawkish happy.
MAIL—It progresses along nicely, never delves into the psychology of the situation, abounds in good acting and pleasing sets.
TRIBUNE, Herald, Times, Evening World, Globe and Post made no comment.

Blue Laws Fight

Inc. Start With Big Get Together Meeting of Natl. Asso. and M. P. T. O. Dec. 14

Tuesday, Dec. 14 promises to be a red letter day in motion picture story. Through correspondence being written between Sydney S. Cohen of the M. P. T. O. and William A. rady, president of the Natl. Asso., that day a joint committee will meet to discuss a number of problems of importance. But the dominating thought of that meeting will probably be a discussion as to how best to meet and oppose the proposed Blue Law which the Lord's Day Alliance will try to put through Congress as a national law.

At this conference one of the important topics of discussion will be the question of uniform and equitable contracts and the advance deposit motion. The censorship problem, the music tax and other matters will come up for consideration.

 Held Over Indefinitely

Robertson-Cole reported yesterday that Tom Moore has held over "Kissie" now at his Rialto theater Washington for an indefinite run. The picture is playing its second week here.

What About Agnes Ayres?

A few months ago Al Kaufman announced that he would star Agnes in a series of productions. Nothing further has been said about it but Miss Ayres has been appearing in a number of Paramount and its affiliate pictures. Her last was in William Taylor's "The Furnace," a new daily.

J. Parker Read, Jr., whose reputation for lavish screen productions is enhanced every new picture, fairly outdoes himself in "Love," his second Associated Producers' production. Louise Glaum, the magnificent, is the star.—Adv.r

Allen Officials Going Abroad

(Special to WID's DAILY)

Toronto—J. B. Cronk, general manager of the English Theatre, has left for England in connection with the proposed Allen theatres in London. On account of the restrictions in city operations in England, the Allen cannot make any progress on their two theatres which are planned in the sites of the Empire theater and Queen's Hotel. In view of that the old Empire will be remodeled and opened until restrictions are lifted. It is to arrange for that. Cronk and Romancioli are going abroad.

J. J. Allen is still in England but is expected back by the first of the year.

Selznick Wins

Clara Young Must Pay $100,000 On Four Equities—Released Pictures—Appeal Talked Of

Judge Lefkowitz in the U. S. District Court handed down a decision yesterday afternoon in the Selznick vs. Clara Kimber Young-Equity Pictures litigation which has been hanging fire for some time past.

The court decided that Miss Young must pay to Selznick and the C. K. Y. Film Corp. $100,000 representing $25,000 on each of four pictures which Miss Young released through Equity Pictures. It was the contention of C. K. Y. that Miss Young agreed to pay this stipulated sum on each picture when arrangements were made for the severance of relations between the star and C. K. Y. The court has now sustained this claim.

An additional $25,000 will be paid to C. K. Y. when "Hush" the new Young production is released by Equity.

Joseph Schnitzer of Equity told WID's DAILY last night that the decision will be appealed at once.

More Opinions

In answer to your request for my opinion as to the necessary steps for the restoration of the motion picture business to a pre-war basis, permit me to say that your question centers around a very large order. If one takes your question seriously as I propose to do, I must start out with a summation of the present situation which can best be brought into focus by asking these questions:

Has the industry within itself men of the caliber to accomplish the difficult feat of readjusting the large business which is built with extravagant expenditures and heavy commitments, or will this process have to be applied by men of general business experience?

It is possible for men of business experience, who might have been dragged in through their financial interest in existing companies, to appreciate the unique features of the business; what we must show the man's angle. Can we get the men able to make successful cuts without varying some vital artery that might cause the patient to bleed to death?

This, it seems to me, are big points to consider in the pending crisis.

For my part, I have for the past three years been building an organization along lines that definitely anticipate all such conditions that are shaping and my plans are such as to take advantage of the situation for my producer and exhibitor clients.

There is no doubt that values must tumble, that admission prices must either fall or the public be given a recognizably improved standard of quality of pictures to justify the present prices.

Any crisis is welcome which would stop the reckless expenditure of money in incompletely planned producing projects now flooding the market with half-baked pictures, creating overproduction which permits so-called double feature programs. Feeding the public one unprofitable picture at a time is bad enough, but thoughtless exhibitors who give them two such unprofitable pictures simply because they are cheap are rapidly killing the goose that lays the golden eggs.

W. W. HODKINSON

Shut Off the Howlers

I do not believe there is any cause for alarm on the part of exhibitors and all because the return to normal conditions in other lines of business is a very orderly one and with a possible exception of a very few industries in certain local centers, the people are very generally employed, and with the class of great pictures that have been released this year exhibitors will continue to do business as they have in the past.

It is my opinion that this business has reached the stage where it can be easily affected by changing industrial conditions, because the prices of admission charged at the box offices of the rank and file theaters throughout America are within the reach of everybody's purse.

Please use all your efforts to shut

Course in Scenario Writing

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Philadelphia—Photoplay study and scenario writing as an industry will be inaugurated through the cooperation of the Stanley Co. of America, at Temple University, the latter part of the year.

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Co., is the foremost factor in the move. — An intensive survey of the situation has convinced him of the necessity of the development of photoplay stories along lines of technical study, and accordingly he has approached the subject Mr. Mastbaum said: "Authors, even well known ones, rarely prepare scenarios technically correct for screen use. There are hundreds of scenarios submitted to producers daily, which, containing excellent ideas, are never considered because they are the one thing of necessity for screen presentation. Hence the urgent need for a technical training to make these ideas suitable for pictures."

Harry D. Westcott, organizer of the Yale Drama Association, has studied the situation in California, where he received the full cooperation of all the large producing organizations. The Stanley Co., will support the course, and may endow a permanent chair in the subject at Temple.

Fire in Metro Offices

A positive print of "Polly With a Hat" became ignited in some way in the Metro projection room on the first floor of the Longacre Bldg., yesterday morning and caused a fire which resulted in a reported loss of about $15,000 in office furnishing and fixtures. The blaze caused considerable excitement in the Longacre neighborhood and was attended by pedes-trians for a time. All of the employes in the offices marched out in orderly manner and no one was hurt.

Carillo in Films

George Mooser, who recently resigned from Goldwyn, will apparently identify himself in his future activities with the players' and story end of the business. He has under his management Leo Carillo, Martha Hedman and Louis Benison and will manage the film affairs of those celebrities. Mooser continues, how-ev-er, as production manager for Messmore Kendall.

A tentative organization known as the Authors' Producing Ass'n is under consideration in which Bob Milton may be interested. Mooser stated yesterday that two men prominent in art circles would also probably be connected with the company, but because of their present affiliations did not wish to mention their names. It is very probable that Moor-ser will be identified, in addition to the above, with Robert Davis, who recently left the Frank Munsey organization to delve into the story field.

Hart claimed he was entitled to one-half of the profits for the quarter ending Oct., 1919, and fixed the amount due him at $201,654. When the case went to trial, however, expert accountants reduced this amount as a result of credits and balances to the amount finally decided upon by Judge Work.

"The Safety Sign"

"Insurance Of All Kinds" “Don’t Lower Prices”

I believe that the motion picture theaters have under-sold their entertainment until the last year. If you will compare the entertainment that is furnished in the large theaters throughout the country, like the Rialto, Rivoli, Capitol, Strand, Grauman’s at Los Angeles, and the Newman in Kansas City, and many others, with the price of admission that is charged at these theaters, with the entertainment that is sold in the vaudeville houses and the musical comedies and dramatic shows, we are giving just as fine an entertainment and in a great many instances better for about one third or even less than the price of admission.

First, we open a new third floor which is without a doubt the finest house in this part of the country. We employ a 35-piece orchestra and we have decided that no air would be found in a motion picture theater. For instance, we have at one of the theaters a so-called fresh air plant which cost over $50,000 to install. We have a permanent stage with two maid in attendance, and it is equipped with all the latest devices and every opportunity is given to the patrons to enjoy the entertainment in the theater. We charge 3c, 4c, 5c and 6c for the tax at nights.

We cannot continue our theater of the best shows, but we have at the new theater a vast new building and entertainment that I am sure you will enjoy. The answer to this is to make bigger and better pictures, and leave the price of admission where it is. There is not a day that we do not talk to some of our patrons about the price of admission, and I strongly believe that they would much rather prefer to go to this theater than to any of the road shows, that we feel we give higher class entertainment, and disregard the price of admission, but we can find elsewhere.

Then, in order for me to maintain the prices, I must have producers making bigger productions with real interest, and do away with so many inferior pictures.

The trouble I am finding with production is now that everyone has a picture of a little merit with it, and the producers are trying to get the best productions that they can make, but they are not putting enough money into making the pictures. The question is, can we have better pictures with the little merit in them.

This glass is sprayed with a solution of glycerine and water.

In the Courts

A default judgment for $2,524 was filed in the Supreme Court against Associated Publishing Co., in a suit of the Actors’ Laboratory to recover for services in furnishing films and photographs on the defendant’s order in June, 1917. The suit was not defended.

The Reckrclft Pictures filed an answer in the Supreme Court yesterday in a suit of the Roubert Pictures to recover a sum alleged to be due for the sale of negatives and prints of the film plays, “Summer Days,” “The Old Swimmin’ Hole,” and “Bold, Bad Pirate,” featuring Matty Roubert. The defendant alleges that as part consideration for the sale of the films the plaintiff agreed to manufacture seven two-reel films of Mat- ty Roubert directed by William L. Roubert, and gave the defendant an option on twelve additional films, for $9,000. The balance ($5,000) was to be paid in cash, $3,000 on a note due Dec. 15, and $3,000 on four notes for $750 each. The plaintiff refused to execute the contract, the defendant alleges, and a claim for $10,000 damages is made for publicity and other expenses incidental to exploiting the films.

A default judgment for $345 in the Supreme Court was filed against James Cruse, in a suit of Simon Goodman to recover for advertising photographs furnished. The papers were serviced on Cruse at Hollywood, Cal., where he was a director for Famous Players.

St. Louis Houses Changing Hands

St. Louis—It was learned yesterday that the Famous Players Missouri Corp. has virtually closed a deal for the purchase of Loew’s Garrick, Chestnut St. near Sixth. It is said that the transfer will take place about Dec. 15. The Garrick, which seats 1,500, has been showing pic- tures in conjunction with vaudeville.

Manager William Goldman of Fa- mous Players announces that effective Christmas week the Pershing, Delmar Blvd., west of Hamilton Ave., will play light opera. Moving pictures will be entirely discontinued. It is also reported that King’s theatre, Knighshighway near Delmar Blvd., will be converted into a vaude- ville house, showing Loew vaude- ville. However, Goldman declines to verify this report.

The Loew offices had heard nothing about the report yesterday.

Bored—and Why

(London) — “It is the sameness of films which bores me,” says Robert Hichens. “Away with the swasticks, high kicking, silk-sockingled legs, cocktails, champagne and cigars. There is too much ‘fake’ in the films. Let us have more imagination, more simplicity, more truth. Let us have slices of life.”

Governor Robertson of Oklahoma declared his state was well taken care of. Governor Sproet of Pennsylvania said there would be no falling down in observance of laws in his state.

ANNOUNCING

The Big Five

A combination that will positively revolutionize the Picture Business in 1921.

An affiliation of Capital with Star and Directorial talent now being assembled under experienced Management.

Bigger and more powerful than any existing organization.

Detailed announcement when the time is ripe.

THE BIG FIVE PRODUCTIONS

(New being incorporated)
New Angles

I have talked to exhibitors from California to Yonkers and they are all of one mind. They believe that they have been carrying the burden of a tremendous and unnecessary overhead in production. They believe they have been carrying the burden of too much financing, of too much promotion, and of too little actual production. They also believe they have been paying for a lack of co-operation between the box office and the studio, and they are ready to welcome into the field of production those men who have had long and successful experience in the theater, in the actual selling of pictures to the public.

The day of the covered carpet tack promoter is over. The day when the Home Office will send thousands of dollars 3,000 miles trusting to lucky results is over. The man who ultimately pays, the exhibitor, can't stand this pressure, and the Home Offices know it. That is why I have become, an independent producer after many years at the theater door.

In order that my first talk on the building of the California Theater was the protection of my investment, I know, as hundreds of exhibitors encourage me often I bought it as a special at the expense of the rest of my program. I know that independently made and independently purchased pictures should be the highest profit. My books prove that.

HARRY LEONHARDT.

Keep Prices Right

We need to exercise good judgment in not placing the prices beyond the ability of the public to pay, whereby the attendance of motion picture shows will be considered an unreasonable expense.

Under these circumstances we do not expect any material depreciation in either our business or our profits. In the word of the courts, the exhibitors must be human beings and not attempt to operate or to exercise any privileges by any assumed "God-given rights."

WEIR McELROY.

Have Confidence—Johnston

The greatest necessity in the motion picture business today is to have confidence in the business itself, among those in it, and to put the business on a business basis.

For ourselves, we cannot see the reason for cutting down of production or distribution of independent pictures. We are going forward on a bigger scale than ever and our 1921 plans for film expansion or 225% over the current year. We find that real independent productions are finding a ready market.

For the exhibitor, believe in a better class of program, catering to the people who have never particularly interested themselves in motion pictures. It is better to believe that one of the greatest essentials for the exhibitor is a much higher type of advertising. It is necessary to get away entirely from the sensational. The day of blood and thunder, sex, twenty and thirty type of advertising is past and the sooner one exhibitor recognizes this the better it will be for the motion picture industry. Another factor that is needed is real showmanship in selecting and exhibiting motion pictures. Today the exhibitor is receiving a class of pictures which permit of the application of real showmanship.

We firmly believe that 1921 will be the biggest year in the history of the independent distributor and exhibitor of motion pictures.

W. RAY JOHNSTON, Vice- President & General Manager, Arrow Film Corp.

Reduce All Along the Line

I am satisfied that the country is rapidly readjusting itself, but I am firm in the opinion that it will be a very long time before its returns to the pre-war basis. In fact, I believe it will be fully ten years before prices, in general, will reach the low levels that prevailed prior to the war.

The moving picture industry ought to undertake its readjustment just as rapidly as other lines of endeavor. This should start with the producing end and by reductions to be made by exhibitors in prices of admission. In our particular case there is not much readjustment to be made in admission prices because our increase in prices was but slight.

Policy

The following letter was sent by Robertson-Cole to the Editor of the New York Times:

Replying to your article of November 7, in which you speak of the slishi of producers who heretofore have waited until certain special screen productions, shown at regular Broadway theaters at advanced prices, appeared in their neighborhood picture theaters at ordinary prices, and who are now at the mercy of producers who tell them that henceforth such special pictures are to be shown only at regular Broadway theaters, at advanced prices, and will appear in neighborhood picture houses “never” or “not during 1920 to 1922,” we would like a word.

One company at least, Robertson-Cole, recognizes special attractions of such caliber as easily as to fill a regular Broadway theater for many months, as essentially the property of the regular motion picture exhibitor, who has invested his money in a theater, trusting that the producer will not make his worst product, and who funds himself by the regular screen, is such that we cannot re-configure against when the producer denies him the very best picture.

Viewing the matter this way, we have refused to “read show” “Kismet” or place it for an unlimited run on Broadway. It will be shown at the Strand and thereafter in regular motion picture houses all over the country. Our obligation to the public, and to him who has lived his living from the picture theaters, is such that we cannot re-configure against “Kismet” and all our special attractions will be distributed through the usual channels.

Only in a case where we should be denied representation in a manner and at a theater whereby of our special attractions we would deviate from this rule. In such case, and in such case only, we would be able to properly present the production our own way. Otherwise representation is the business of the exhibitor, and his determination of price the right of the public. Yours very truly,

A. S. KIRKPATRICK
Robertson-Cole Dist. Corp.

The Times article which inspired the comment,

“Shrewd and patient theatergoers have had a way of beating the admission prices charged for special productions shown on Broadway. They have simply waited until the pictures have come to their low-priced neighborhood theaters. Thus while some saw “Hearts of the World” at the Forty-fourth Street Theater and paid $2.00 for the privilege others saw it nearer to their homes for much, if not much much, later.

“Apparent,” however, the makers of such films intend to play the game against those who are content to lie in wait watchfully, for D. W. Griffith has announced that “Way Down East,” now at the Forty-fourth Street Theater, will “never” be shown at neighborhood theaters, and William Fox follows suit with the declaration that “Over the Hill” at the Central, will not be sent to the going houses “during 1920 to 1922.”

“So it looks like a long wait for the patient.”

Love Under Way for Co-operative Buying by Local Firms—Expect to Lower Prices

It is understood that a move is being made in local exporting circles to perfect an arrangement with a number of exporters whereby a stem of co-operative buying will be exercised in an effort to cut the prices asked by producers for foreign films.

The idea in back of the movement is to ally a representative firm of each of the foreign territories and form a combined purchasing power of the group to producers for their films. It is figured that when the plan actually gets working it will do enough prestige and value to command attention.

New Plan for Province of Ontario Being Discussed—Present Board Has Five Members

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Toronto—The Motion Picture Committee of the Social Service Council of Ontario is strongly advocating the organization of a meeting of 10 members, instead of five, as the Government proposes at the present time. Agitation for stricter censorship and a larger board has developed from the trouble over showing "Open Your Eyes," a health film which was passed by the board, recalled by the Premier three days before opening in Toronto, and finally allowed to be shown, notwithstanding opposition from certain quarters.

The present board consists of three members, and the Government proposes to increase the number to five, appointing a representative of the Social Service Council and also one who would be approved by the film industry. More than 100 applications have already been made for the two positions which would be open.

The committee includes representatives from the Board of Trade, leading clubs and organizations in the city, representatives of the provincial branches of the National Council of Women, etc., and members in 20 leading towns in the Province. The Premier, S. C. has the backing of many religious organizations, and exerts a large influence with the present government administration.
In the Courts

An attachment for $24,548 has been filed in the Supreme Court in a suit brought by the Victor Kremmer Film Features against the Reelcraft Pictures Corp., on the ground that it is a foreign corporation. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff sold to the Beehive Film Exchange Co., of Chicago the film "Champion," "The Jitney Elopement," "Work" and "By the Sea" for Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin for $26,500 over a period of one year; that said attachments, aggregating $124,182, were made in 1917, but after Beehive had paid all rights, which were sold to the Reelcraft Corporation, which agreed to carry out the contract but owes $24,548.

A default judgment for $1,250 was filed in the City Court yesterday by John J. Rotchford, on an assigned claim of A. H. McLaughlin against the C. B. Price Co. Inc. The complaint alleged that the defendant agreed with McLaughlin to give him all he got above $1,250 for the Kansas and Missouri rights to "His Pajama Girl," and that the amount realized was $2,400, half of which was due McLaughlin, but was not paid.

A summons in a suit for $15,000 has been filed in the Supreme Court by Elizabeth Brando against the B. S. Moss Theatrical Enterprises.

A judgment has been against the Goodson Pictures, Inc. for $363.20 by the Travelers Insurance Company.

Think It Over
Los Angeles—Maurice Touneur says: "I made 'Treasure Island,' then I made a remake of 'Treasure Island,' and then a second film released 'Trumpet Island,' and now I support Mack Sennett with those 'pinkie' pictures and call it 'Pleasure Island' and put a lot of bathing girls in it.

Regarding Reserved Seats
The following communication has just been received:
Editor, WID's Daily:
In your issue of November 4th, I note a statement from Mr. Touneur to the effect that the day is coming in this country when seats at photo-plays of all kinds will be reserved.
I thought it might be of interest to you and your readers to know that our New Theater at Fort Smith has, for the past three years, been putting on all of the bigger pictures with reserved seats. We have a cast iron rule of never changing our prices unless we also change our policy to two shows only a day, with reserved seats for the night performance. We go in on the principle that if a picture is worth double or triple the regular prices, it is worth a man's time to secure his favorite seat and be there at the commencing of the picture and get the atmosphere. Our reserved seats are always on three days in advance of the opening night, just the same as we do with the spoken road show.
Among a few of the pictures for which I can remember that we sold reserved seats, are the following: "Joan the Woman," "The Garden of Allah," "The Death of a Nation," "Mickey," "The Heart of Humanity," "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," "The Night of the Hunter," "Broken Blossoms," "Madame X," and "Earthbound." Some of these were sold for 50c high and some of them for 75c high. We put on "Broken Blossoms" only two weeks ago for only two days at 75c high and got $1,095.87 in a town of twenty five thousand people, and above all gave good satisfaction with the picture.
"Broken Blossoms," like probably 50% of the big pictures, has been brought down because they did not get in at the beginning of the picture and work up with it. "Madame X" is another picture of the same kind, as it also "Earthbound," which we are to play the fore part of December, and for which we charge 75c high.

From three years actual experience, I am sure that Mr. Touneur has hit the nail on the head but of course the picture must be out of the ordinary and we must get financial and artistic results.

Yours very truly,
C. A. LICK,
Manager

Some Statistics

Regarding “The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse,” Metro states:

Screen version took more than six months to complete.

Upwards of 12,000 persons engaged in the undertaking.

More than 125,000 tons of masonry, steel, lumber, furniture, and machinery—in excess of the materials used in the Woolworth Building—were used in constructing the settings.

An entire French village, capable of housing 6,000 souls, was put up and then destroyed before the camera.

Every house finished throughout, instead of being a “front.”

The costume factory was erected on the Metro studio grounds for dressing the production.

A new armory and two machine shops were used.

More than 500,000 feet of raw film—over 85 miles—were exposed, which when shown will not exceed 12,000 feet.

Fourteen camera men were employed, Rex Ingram, the director, at times had fourteen directors assisting film.

Field kitchens and a complete commissary organization were required to feed the army of 12,500 persons engaged on the production.

Several new mechanical devices for special photographic effects, for which patents have been issued, were used for the first time in making the picture.

Get On The Job

Wake Up!
This means you. Exhibitor, producer, distributor, director, actor—all of you.
Your first job on hand is to get to know your Congressman. Or the Senator from your State. If you don't make it your business to. Then—Sit right down and write him. If he is in business in your town telephone him. Get to him at once.
Tell him who you are; what you are; and what the picture industry means to you—and to him. Don't mince words. Let him have it right from the shoulder as if you were mad clean through.

Here's why—
When the new administration takes things over in Washington there are going to be a lot of changes. Incidentally the tax schedules will be revised.
Far-seeing business men, realizing what the Republican administration will have to face in the way of meeting taxes, have already started to protect themselves. A lot of them, important and representing big interests, have allied themselves into the National Industrial Conference Board. To give you an idea of their importance here are some of the firms represented: Gorton Pew Fisheries Co., Harmony Mills of Boston, Lake Superior Iron Ore Asso. of Cleveland, National Lumber Manufacturers Asso., Western Petroleum Refiners Asso., The American Farm Bureau Federation, the Delaware & Hudson R. R., the Mid-Continent Oil & Gas Asso. and the mining and coal interests, represented by attorneys.
You don't see any moving picture organizations lined up with this crowd, do you?
You bet not. And why?
Because these gentlemen are looking out for themselves.
They got together and started things by proposing to increase taxes—ON OTHER INDUSTRIES.

Among other things they are suggesting to the Ways and Means Committee of the new Congress is that one of the taxes now imposed on the film industry BE INCREASED 100 PER CENT.
As if this industry wasn't taxed enough today. What with the various taxes to which different branches are subjected, it is a serious question if the picture industry isn't taxed more so than any other in this country. This, despite that a well-known Washington exhibitor has figured out that he pays 14 different taxes. Think it over.
The Conference will suggest to the Congress that picture films be increased to 10 per cent—present tax 5 per cent—and makes a lot of other suggestions for increased taxes most of which could be passed on to the ultimate consumer.

BUT WITH PRESENT ADMISSION PRICES AS HIGH AS THE TRAFFIC WILL STAND YOU CANNOT PASS THE PROPOSED INCREASED TAX ONTO YOUR PATRON. ADMISSIONS NOW ARE AS HIGH AS THEY CAN BE, AND MANY BELIEVE THEY SHOULD BE LOWED.
So get to this. And get to it quickly.
Slow Starting But "Doug" Gets this One Over Well

Douglas Fairbanks in
"THE MARK OF ZORRO"
United Artists

DIRECTOR .................. Fred Niblo
AUTHOR ..................... Johnston McCulley
SCENARIO BY ................ Not credited
CAMERAMEN .......... Wm. McGann and Harry Thorpe
AS A WHOLE............. Exceedingly entertaining romance with "Doug" doing a dual role and his usual acrobatics STORY.......... Interesting and entertaining, laid in early Southern California days DIRECTION....... Satisfactory; cutting may have hurt
PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Very good LIGHTINGS .................. Usually excellent CAMERAWORK................ High grade
STAR .......... "Doug" probably gives one of the best performances in his screen career SUPPORT ............. Usually excellent; Noah Beery stands out as the swaggering sergeant EXTERIORS .......... Many unusual locations
INTERIORS ................. Very good
DETAIL ............ Excellent under trying difficulties
CHARACTER OF STORY..... Good for any house
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION....... About 7,800 feet

Excepting for the fact that either the scenario writer or the cutter missed out and consequently dragged what would otherwise have been a perfect production, there isn't the least fault to be found with "Doug's" latest picture, "The Mark of Zorro." It's an adaptation of Johnston McCulley's story and offers unusual opportunities in a dual role for "Doug." But somebody muffed it and prevented this from hitting on all six cylinders right along the line. However, "Doug" works so hard and the cast is so eminently satisfying that the chances are that the average picture fan will eat this up in gobs and come back for more. In the first place, they like "Doug." This was proven at the Capitol last Sunday when all records were broken and nearly 20,000 people paid over $11,000 on the advance advertising alone to see what his newest picture was going to be.

"Doug" has one of the best chances of his screen career in the dual character. First as the nonchalant, sap-headed, honey-drinking individual who makes tricks out of his handkerchief and amuses himself by making shadows with his fingers, as against the rollicking swordsman, fighter and rider that Zorro was.

Zorro is the individual who is attempting to bring justice to Southern California and rid that country of its despotic governors. In the end, of course, it is discovered that Zorro and the mild, easy-going Don Diego are one and the same, and there is much jubilation and a wonderful clutch where the lady's finger tips show how much she is enjoying the embrace, which occurs behind a handkerchief.

As Zorro "Doug" has ample opportunities to do all his usual acrobatics, and he does them like a Turk. As "Diego" he shows a new side and acts—actually acts.

The production is gorgeous and the detail of the early Southern California days is worked out to an exactitude that is rarely seen. The costumes worn are of the early days and some of these howlers about "costume plays" are going to find themselves up against another difficult argument. Because this is a money-maker.

The cast is exceptionally good. Noah Beery as the swaggering sergeant gives a splendid performance. Marguerite De La Motte is the dignified, yet sweet heroine, and Robert McKim is the villain.

Tell Them "Doug" Has a New Kind of Role

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is one of the best bets "Doug" has ever been given. It is romantic, full of thrills, and while it lags right at the start, this is not going to hurt in the least because they see "Doug" in the beginning in a brand new characterization. After a while when things begin to hum, and he climbs up the side of houses, jumps over walls, balconies, etc., and gets in his usual acrobatic stunts, they are going to like it immensely.

You can point out that "The Mark of Zorro" is one of the new kind of picture, of which they are probably going to see a great deal in the early future—romance. It looks pretty much as if the sex story had about run out in interest, and romance, adventure and stories of this type are coming into their own.

You have excellent opportunities for exploitation, by using "The Mark of Zorro" as a question and linking it up with the star's name. For instance: as a teaser you can ask them what "The Mark of Zorro" was?

The well known trade marks of brands of merchandise known to your community can be used in tie-ups with various stores handling them. Linking these names up with the query: You know what these marks are, but what is the Mark of Zorro?

Another Curwood Success Given Splendid Production

George H. Davis presents
"ISOBEL"
State Rights

DIRECTOR ....................... Edwin Carewe
AUTHOR ........................ James Oliver Curwood
SCENARIO BY .................... Finis Fox
CAMERAMAN ..................... Robert Kurrle
AS A WHOLE......Realistic production and fine atmosphere together with good acting make it one of the best state rights offerings

STORY......Typical Curwood story of Northwest Mounted Police; has its oddities at that DIRECTION......Has injected fine atmosphere and managed players very well

PHOTOGRAPHY......Excellent; some attractive color work

LIGHTINGS ...................... Usually effective CAMERA WORK .................. Well judged PLAYERS.....House Peters, Jane Novak and others all well suited

EXTERIORS ................. Many beautiful snow shots
INTERIORS ........................ Correct
DETAIL .......................... Usually good

CHARACTER OF STORY......Officer of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police trails down his man then lets him go when he realizes he loves the victim's wife

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 6,000 feet

The atmosphere alone in most of James Oliver Curwood's stories seems to lend certain success to the picture versions. At any rate, such seems to have been the case in all the works of Curwood so far produced. This is not to say that the productions provided haven't been successful but an assurance that again in "Isobel" or "The Trail's End" the atmosphere of the North and the Royal Northwest Mounted Police are due for a goodly share of the picture's success.

Some gaps in continuity present themselves during the run of the picture and whether the cutter or the director is to blame isn't evident. At any rate, and to be specific, one scene shows an officer of the R. N. W. M. P. conversing in his cabin and the next, with no title between scenes, shows him coming in from out-of-doors with his coat on, and carrying flowers. Inasmuch as the exteriors show snow about a couple of feet deep, the wonder is whence cometh the blossoms. And just where the little girl arrived from is difficult to understand. It isn't explained.

The photography is a feature of the production and some effective color bits add to its artistic side. House Peters and Jane Novak share acting honors, with the supporting company assisting capably. A little named kiddie is a real charm.

Scotti Dean throws Jim Blake overboard from a Northbound steamer when Blake attempts to dishonor Dean's wife. Dean is naturally labeled a murderer and for four years is hounded by House Peters as a member of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. Peters eventually trails his man to the end but Mrs. Dean is drawing a box on a sled in which she claims is the body of her dead husband.

The officer puts her up for the night but the next morning the box is empty—the two have fled. An enemy of the officer, believing Peters has forfeited his oath, vows to get Dean himself. But the officer reaches the couple first. Sometime later Dean appears at Peters' cabin begging help for his wife who is ill in a distant hut. After learning that Blake isn't dead Dean dies and Peters, who had previously acknowledged his love for Mrs. Dean, goes to her but she condemns him for hounding her husband.

Mrs. Dean is ill and after she recovers, Peters goes away. A couple of years later he receives a letter which indicates that the woman is dead. He goes to Montreal to see the little child but also finds the mother. Then comes the clinch.

Use the Author's Name and Promise Them a Pleasing Offering

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

A wonderfully realistic Northern atmosphere and the kind of a story with the kind of an ending that most audiences want together with a good company of players is offered in "Isobel." The author's name will mean a good deal in communities where the productions of his previous stories have been shown. If you played "Nomads of the North" recall the fact and promise them an equally live bit of entertainment in "Isobel."

At a special showing of the feature a well arranged and appropriate musical accompaniment added a great deal to the feature's enjoyment. It would be well to make a special effort to secure a suitable score when you show the picture. Mention the snow scenes and talk about the scenery. Stills and catchlines will all attract. Among the players use the names of Jane Novak and House Peters and tell them about the cute little girl whose name is not given.
A great play. A greater picture. As a play, it drew packed houses for two seasons. As a picture, it will draw packed houses for as long as you care to run it.
Gorgeous Production Makes Effort To Strengthen Ordinary Story Material

Louise Glaum in “LOVE”

J. Parker Read, Jr. Prod.—Asso. Producers

DIRECTOR ......................... Wesley Ruggles AUTHOR .......................... Louis Joseph Vance SCENARIO BY .................J. Parker Read, Jr.
CAMERAMAN ................. Charles J. Stumar

AS A WHOLE........... Extravagant production attempts to offset hackneyed story material

STORY......Poor East Side girl who won’t “wait” for her lover to succeed becomes rich man’s mistress to help her sister

DIRECTION... Made much of weak story material

PHOTOGRAPHY ..................... Excellent

LIGHTINGS .......................... Splendid

CAMERA WORK ....................... Very satisfactory

PLAYERS........ Little Laura La Plante very good: James Kirkwood overacts; Joseph Kilgour fairly satisfying

EXTERIORS ......................... Gorgeous

INTERIORS....... Show tremendous outlay on production

DETAIL ................. Generally accurate

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Along the lines of “The Easiest Way”

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........ 6,200 feet

J. Parker Read, Jr., has fitted several of Louise Glaum’s productions with titles, which in themselves are noticeably attractive, “Sex,” and this, the last, “Love.” Remembering “Sex” with all of its appeal, definitely based on the title, a lot of your fans are going to believe that “Love” is intended to give an entirely different impression than what the story really is.

Love, in this instance, is intended to convey the meaning of the sacrifice made by Louise for her baby sister, to give the child the advantages which she failed to secure and to take her away from the pestilence and filth of the East Side. Louise becomes the mistress of a Wall Street magnate. In the end, revolting at living such a life, she arranges a stock market operation, becomes independently wealthy, and throws over her Wall Street lover, and the clinch comes showing Louise, recovering from an almost fatal accident, looking into the eyes of her real sweetheart.

This title may get them in, but it is going to mislead a lot of them who will be looking for a lot of “sexy” thrills. They won’t get them. Louise is the nicest, cold-blooded sweetheart ever screened. Even as the fiancée of her honest lover when the proposal comes, there isn’t an embrace or a kiss in sight, excepting a paternal sort of thing that lands on her forehead as hero, James Kirkwood, is about to leave for South America.

Undeniably the production is entitled to considerable praise. Some of the sets are gorgeous in the extreme, including a shower and pool off her boudoir. They give you a flash of Louise under the shower, but the pesky water cuts off any view below her shoulders. This is going to disappoint some. Towards the end they give you a regular old-time movie stunt, by having a motor tumble over the cliffs. In the car are Louise and her Wall Street lover. Of course he dies and of course she gets well. But the thrill is there just the same.

James Kirkwood as the hero does fairly good work. Joseph Kilgour as the Wall Street millionaire, who is a cad, does very well with a rather unsatisfactory part.

There isn’t a great deal to be said of Miss Glaum’s work. All through it she seems cold, not only in her actions with her lovers, but otherwise.

Title Together With Star’s Name Will Get Them In

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

By playing up the title you are probably going to get in a goodly number of people who will in all probability expect to see something entirely different from what is shown. “Love” is a good title and coupled with Louise Glaum should bring you very good business. The only question is what they are going to say when they go out. “Sacrifice” would be a lot better title for what actually takes place, but it hasn’t the box office value that the present title holds.

Talk about the lavish production and say it is one of the finest shown this season. You will not be stretching a point. Talk about Miss Glaum’s past work and dwell especially on “Sex.” This may cause them to link up the idea of what they remember from “Sex” with the current production, and if they do you will benefit therefrom.

Press sheet contains an interesting idea along the lines of “Women Men Admire,” with some excellent stuff signed by Miss Glaum. This should make reader stuff for your local paper and can be used to advantage.

"Squandered Lives" is fast in action filled with drama, with big moments, and while the hero and heroine are wrongdoers nevertheless they command unwavering sympathy and deep interest.

"THE DEVIL TO PAY"
Robert Brunton Prod.—Pathé
DIRECTOR .................. Ernest C. Warde
AUTHOR .................. Frances Nimmo Greene
SCENARIO BY ............... Jack Cunningham
CAMERAMAN ................ Arthur L. Todd

AS A WHOLE......A real “fan” type of picture with good mystery element and suspense well sustained

STORY......Some of its “intrikut” business not plausible but this doesn’t matter; it plays its part just the same DIRECTION......Develops his material toward good climax; brings things to rather hurried conclusion

PHOTOGRAPHY .............. All right
LIGHTINGS .................. Good
CAMERA WORK .............. Satisfactory
PLAYERS.................. Robert McKim, Roy Stewart and Frtzi Brunnette handle most important roles well; others all very good

EXTERIORS .................. Very few
INTERIORS .................. Adequate
DETAIL ...................... All right

CHARACTER OF STORY ......Mystery drama in which girl’s fiancé is proven crook while the girl believes him innocent

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,800 feet

After watching Roy Stewart bounding Robert McKim until he proves him a crook in both “The Money Changers” and “The Devil to Pay” folks will begin to know just what kind of a story to expect when they see the two names announced in connection with a picture. There is a similarity in these two productions but where “The Money Changers” had it in action, “The Devil to Pay” has it in mystery.

The director has developed the plot coherently, yet the suspense is well sustained and the interest maintained until the end at which time things are brought to perhaps an abrupt conclusion and not altogether comprehensive solution. Nevertheless it suffices to bring the mystery to a solution even if they use the rather old-fashioned method of having the villain shoot himself.

The cast is a good one, each player being well suited to his respective part. Besides those mentioned Evelyn Selbie, George Fisher and others handles smaller roles adequately. The opening scenes are effective from a photographic standpoint. The scene is that of a gallows on which a hanging is taking place. The actual gallows is not seen, however. Merely the shadow is shown. This is rather a gruesome opening for a picture but it was probably intended for purposes of emphasis which certainly register.

Brent Warren, leading banker and politician, commits a felony for which he sends George Roan to death. In some way, never explained to the spectator, Roan is brought back to life and from time to time Warren is haunted by the voice of Roan, usually over the telephone.

Cullen Grant, district attorney and former suitor of Dare Keeling, a wealthy girl now in love with Warren, secures evidence against Warren and orders his arrest. Dare maintains her confidence in Warren but Grant’s further suspicion against Warren is aroused when Dare begs Warren to give her some of her money for which he is her trustee. Grant suspects that the money is for Warren.

Dare’s brother Larry is against Warren but at the same time wants to preserve his sister’s happiness. Larry becomes secretary to Warren and discovers papers which prove Warren’s guilt. At the trial Warren is confident of a favorable verdict until Grant announces another witness. It is Roan, the supposedly dead man, who proves that Warren forced him to kill the man. Warren cheats the law by shooting himself as he attempts to get away.

Play Up Title and Type of Story With Lines that Attract
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

“The Devil to Pay” is a typical “movie fan” type of story. And as such should prove a good box office bet. It has well maintained suspense and should be played up from the mystery standpoint. Announce it as a story of a man who was hanged but later came back to testify against the man who sent him to the gallows.

The title has drawing power and can be used effectively with catchlines. Mention the names of Roy Stewart and Robert McKim and recall their joint work in “The Money Changers” if you happen to have played it and say that “The Devil to Pay” contains as much mystery as “The Money Changers” contained action. Use the line: “You can’t get away with it if you have ‘The Devil to Pay.’ He’ll get you sooner or later.”

CHARACTER OF STORY... Russian Princess who seeks freedom in America under non-de-plume

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION... About 6,000 feet

Wherever those concerned saw the hope of making a picture from this “celebrated French play” is beyond understanding. When all is said and done this latest attempt to give Nazimova a chance to display her unusually temperamental personality doesn't even make a good burlesque, the thing that it most resembles.

“Madame Peacock” was weak but the star's work and a fairly satisfying production held out some hope for it but “Billions” hasn't even these features to boast of. The star wriggles her way through the six reels displaying queer costumes and and even more peculiar gestures and mannerisms. The appearance of Victor Potel whose familiar countenance is immediately thought of in connection with slap-stick, lends another burlesque touch when he is shown dressed up as a Russian-aid-de-camp.

The production accorded the very poor story for which Charles Bryant wrote the scenario, doesn't do much toward making it interesting. A serious effort has been made to start off in a big way by the use of a big set showing a bit of old Russia. An unnecessary bit and a waste of money is all it indicates. The titles are genuinely amateurish. A very earnest artistic effort is attempted when a bit of poetry is put in pictures. The star is seen cavorting around a sort of fairy land.

Princess Triloff's husband is killed by a bomb during an outbreak by the revolutionists. His wife seeks forgetfulness in America, where lives Owen Carey, a youthful poet, the publication of whose verses was made possible by the Princess although Owen never knew the identity of his benefactress.

But Owen's uncle dies and leaves him a “pork” farm and many millions. Owen becomes Krakerfeller, the multi-millionaire and the sole attraction at a fashionable resort where he never seems to say anything but “give them each a thousand” to his secretary each time anyone approaches him. Under an assumed name the princess arrives at the same resort. Krakerfeller's secretary is introduced to the princess as Owen Carey and soon the two announce their engagement.

Then Krakerfeller gets real desperate for he also loves the princess. There follows a lot of hokum in which some schemers try to inveigle the millionaire into a marriage with one of the guests, but the princess foil them and then falls for Krakerfeller herself. After some more footage, both Krakerfeller and the princess lose all their wealth and then decide to marry.

The Least Said About It, the Better

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is so far below the average of present day picture entertainment that it isn't fair to either the producer, the star or the public to offer it as entertainment. “Billions” is a mixture of drama, comedy, burlesque and what-not but never reaches even a point where it can be called interesting.

Where the idea originated isn't made known except that it's an adaptation of a “celebrated French play” but surely the picture will never cause any celebration. Both the star and producer better decide to get down to business for two poor pictures in succession aren't going to help either party. Whether the star realized her handicap or not isn't evident but she doesn't seem to even try to appeal in “Billions.”

While Sir James Barrie’s "Half An Hour" is undeniably an interesting and pithy story, there isn’t sufficient material in it to hold up strongly through a feature. Not that the picture isn’t entertaining, for it is, and most audiences will appreciate and enjoy the merits of its plot, but they will also be expecting something more to happen. For this reason it doesn’t entirely satisfy.

Dorothy Dalton wears many beautiful gowns, and gives a very satisfactory portrayal of Lady Lillian, the only criticism being her lack of emotion upon leaving her husband. Charles Richman does well as her wealthy husband, and the rest of the cast are all satisfactory.

Lord Dartmouth, the father of Lady Lillian (Dorothy Dalton), to extricate himself from financial troubles, consents to the marriage of his daughter with Richard Garson, a man of wealth but without family. Lillian does not love him, and although Garson is deeply in love with her, their married life is not happy.

Lillian, after a bitter scene with her husband, consents to elope with Hugh Paton, a former suitor who is about to sail for Egypt. She goes to his rooms, leaving her jewels with a letter for Garson in his desk. Paton hastens into the street to hail a cab, and while he is gone Lillian discovers through the maid that he is somewhat of a profligate. Paton, in the street, is run over by an omnibus, and is brought back dead by Dr. Brodie, a life long friend of Garson, who the latter had invited to dine the same evening. Brodie inquires if Lillian is Paton’s wife, and on learning that she is not, advises her to escape.

Awakened by what she had been about to do, Lillian hastens home and endeavors to recover her jewels and the letter, but the desk is locked. She dresses for dinner and is then introduced to Brodie who instantly recognizes her. The accident is discussed, but Brodie does not betray her. Lillian finally succeeds in regaining the incriminating letter, and white Garson suspects something he is unable to prove anything, and begs for forgiveness.

The crisis past, Lillian sees the possibility of happiness in her husband’s love. She confesses that the fault has been partly hers, and they determine to begin anew.

Talk of Barrie and Dorothy Dalton’s Gowns

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You have two excellent points to work on in exploiting this feature, which together, should make it a very easy production to put over. First of all, use the star’s name in all your advertising, as there is of course no doubt of its drawing power. You can safely say that Miss Dalton gives a performance which is entirely worthy of her, and fully up to her standard. Mention of her beautiful wardrobe will prove attractive to women patrons. The second point is the author’s name. Sir James Barrie needs no introduction to most picture patrons. Use his name extensively. The title suggests possibilities for stunts and lobby display of an effective kind. If you want to use catch lines, something like this will excite interest: “She was fleeing with another man—he was killed—Did she return to her husband?”
Louise Glaum, under the able supervision of J. Parker Read, Jr., has exceeded her previous best in "Love," her newest production. Because it treats vividly of a subject that touches every human heart it is a picture of universal appeal. Because it contains a score of scenes of bewildering beauty and magnitude it is a picture that gratifies the eye.

"Just finished three days of Louise Glaum in 'Love'," telegraphs G. H. Meyers from the Park Theatre, Champaign, Ill., "A wonderful picture. The best she's done. Let's have more like it."

Echo everywhere answers: "A wonderful picture! The best she's done!"

And so it is!
"It cannot be disputed that 'The Last of the Mohicans' is Mr. Tourneur’s greatest achievement—a masterpiece of its kind. It’s the greatest Indian picture ever shown. He has kept faith with Cooper's memory."—Laurence Reid, Motion Picture News.

"Tourneur sets his associates a mighty pace. 'The Last of the Mohicans' is a truly great work—a master work—in picture making. It has thrills aplenty and is a box office attraction of the richest sort."—Charles Hastings, Exhibitors Trade Review.

"The Fort William Henry massacre will stand comparison with anything ever accomplished for the screen. For a parallel to this scene one must turn to the battle on the walls of Babylon in Mr. Griffith's masterpiece, 'Intolerance.' "—S. M. Weller, New York Review.

"The public owes Maurice Tourneur a vote of thanks for putting 'The Last of the Mohicans' on the screen. It will restore the popularity of the story. The production is worthy of the subject and a sterling addition to A. P.'s output.”—Edward Weitzel, Moving Picture World.

"Tourneur has done it again. 'The Last of the Mohicans' has resulted in thrills galore. There are so many of them that it is going to be difficult to make your crowd believe that all of them appear in one production. Play this up."—Wid's Daily.

"In such a remarkable manner has Mr. Tourneur conjoined history and art that the result is one of the most valuable features ever brought to the screen. The wise exhibitor will make his exploitation of this feature elaborate.”—Irma Frances Dupre, Exhibitors Herald.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,800 feet

As a bit of entertainment Henri Bernstein's play couldn't offer a better opportunity for Pearl White to "show off" a lot of wonderful Parisian creations. The star's display of beautiful gowns is the attraction of the picture. The story is quite secondary. In the first place the whole affair is so implausible and so mechanically developed that it can never be taken seriously.

Things just happen, usually without explanation, and you are expected to believe such things as a wife having a husband so dumb that he isn't the least bit suspicious when his wife begins to blossom forth in strangely beautiful clothes with the explanation that she pays for them out of her allowance. This may not read so impossible but to see any man so completely fooled isn't at all realistic.

None of the characters are even interesting. There's the love sick youth who writes poetry about the woman he loves, the wife who loves clothes and her husband. The others are just figureheads. It doesn't make any difference that this wife and her husband have little money, they still live in luxury at the home of friends where all the action takes place. When the wife's new gowns arrive from the dress shop, Harry Collins, Inc., of New York, come in for a neat bit of publicity in a close-up of this firm's trade-mark.

Mary Cantyne and her husband are the guests of Mary's school chum Isabelle Lenwright, who has married a wealthy man. Mary has made a comparatively poor marriage and when she hears some of the guests discussing her appearance she decides to have beautiful clothes herself. Mary's husband can give her no money for them but before long she gets them just the same. Not one, but many and each more beautiful than the last.

Ralph Blake, a millionaire neighbor of the Lenwright's, becomes interested in Mary and Fred, Lenwright's son, falls in love with her. But Mary really loves her husband and will have none of them. Mary soon has more gowns than she can pay for and is surprised when Blake hands her a bill paid in full and promises to hand over certain love notes written by Fred if Mary will call for them at his apartment.

The plot thickens when a detective is hired by Lenwright to discover who is stealing money in his home. Fred is finally accused of the theft and accepts the charge. On top of this Mary's husband discovers the bill paid by Blake and goes to kill Blake, who tells him he paid it to help Fred out of a hole. The husband then goes to kill Fred but Mary confesses the whole thing—how she stole to buy clothes. She is forgiven.

The Women Will Probably Be Satisfied

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If Pearl White is a big enough drawing card to pull through a weak story which has not been given an over careful production, then you can book "The Thief," and confine all your promises to the star's array of gorgeous gowns. She wears a different one in practically every scene.

Whether or not the fact that the story is based on Henri Bernstein's stage play will mean anything or not is hard to say but you might mention it. Catch-lines should be effective. "To what extreme will a woman resort to maintain her husband's love? See how one woman became a thief." Or, "She envied other women's beautiful clothes. Although she was poor she soon had more wonderful gowns than her friends. See how 'The Thief' did it."

Without the catchy dialogue of the stage, "The Great Lover" runs on a flat tire, and depending, not a little, on whether or not Mr. or Mrs. "Movie" Fan have heard, seen or know of Leo Ditrichstein and his stage success of a short time ago.

"The Great Lover" is a corking good title but a good percentage of them may expect to see 'Gene O'Brien in some of his inimitable "clutches." They certainly will not expect to see "The Great Lover" as it is shown.

"The Great Lover" is not and never has had screen material. Its popularity on the stage (no records broken there) was due to its catchy dialogue. It's a one man play, with little action, much grand opera atmosphere and professional temperament. It has little to interest the millions who go to the pictures for action, romance, adventure and everything but grand opera unless the opera be a supplement to the entertainment on the screen. Since it is a one-man picture and since John Sainpolis, although an excellent actor and admirable in the title role, is not a star in the commonly accepted term, and since the dialogue of the play is missing on the screen, little is left in favor of the screen version excepting a picture, approximately six reels long, well directed, well acted and lavishly produced.

The Great Lover (John Sainpolis) is a world-renowned baritone having had numerous love affairs. At middle age he loses his voice just at the time that he has decided to renounce the distinction of The Great Lover and marry. But Fate will not have it that way. The son of one of his early paramours has become great and succeeds him in grand opera. The girl that The Great Lover has decided to marry is a great admirer of the young baritone and he is madly in love with her. His mother fearing that his career will be lost unless he wins the girl, goes to The Great Lover and reveals herself as his former sweetheart and pleads with him to give the girl up to her son. He does so and with voice gone and his many loves but memories, he retires.

"THE GREAT LOVER"

The fact that Leo Ditrichstein made an average success with this on the stage may work to the screen version’s favor. It’s about all you have got to put behind it in exploitation. The cast, although excellent, is not in starring rank, so you have little here to exploit. The authors, Frederick and Fanny Hatton, are well known and their works have met with big success. John Sainpolis has a certain following and might bring in some of them.

In all you have a picture to exploit that has back of it well known authors, a good cast, a successful presentation on the stage and a good title. Don’t promise too much. The high-brows will like it for its grand opera sentiment. The masses will probably wriggle in their seats for something exciting to happen.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...........5,118 feet

John Emerson and Anita Loos have had a hand in the making of Constance Talmadge's latest production, "Dangerous Business," and after acknowledging an indebtedness to Madeline Buckley and her story, "The Chess Board," these successful comedy makers go to it and present a spicy and well produced bit of amusement.

The story won't stand critical analysis inasmuch as most of the situations are loosely connected and at times are a bit far-fetched. Nevertheless they provide the basis for some good laughs. Along toward the middle things border on the bedroom farce idea and while it's really funny and you laugh in spite of yourself perhaps some folks will think they stretched things a little too far for the sake of comedy. On the other hand the majority will not take it seriously and accept it for the fun it contains. The Emerson-Loos titles are obvious and provide humor in themselves.

Constance Talmadge seems to enjoy every minute of the picture and she flirts her way through the five reels as though she were really having a good time. Kenneth Harlan is the handsome hero and a mighty likeable one at that. George Fawcett and others handle smaller roles well.

Nancy Flavell (Constance Talmadge) is a born flirt whose chief occupation is falling in love, first with a singer, then with an actor. But Nancy's mother has definite plans for her daughter and arranges her marriage to Braille, a wealthy old fellow. Nancy rebels, but to no avail. The marriage preparations go on just the same and the day of the wedding arrives with Nancy all dressed for the part of bride.

At the last minute, while the groom and guests await the bride, Nancy announces that she is already married to Clarence Brooks, her father's secretary, a meek sort of fellow who adored Nancy, privately, and who is then in France. Nancy writes Clarence what she has done and begs his co-operation and she gets it. Clarence returns "very much changed."

He claims Nancy as his wife and takes her to his mother's home in New Rochelle, where he keeps her over night and the next morning proposes to tell her folks they aren't married. Nancy begs him not to and the end of the week finds her very much in love with Clarence who has always loved her. Perhaps the cutest baby yet seen in pictures manages to keep them happy some time later.

Promise Them One a Whole Lot Better Than the Star's Last

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You will do the right thing to get hold of this at your first opportunity. It's a good live comedy offering. The fact that it borders on bedroom farce for a time isn't going to make any material difference with those who want good comedy and aren't going to pick it to pieces because of a few things that they might want to criticise. The star, the titles, and nearly all the situations are fun makers.

Be sure to tell them about the baby who makes its appearance at the close. Just this in itself will send them out satisfied. Stills of the youngster will be bound to attract. Announce "Dangerous Business" as another Emerson-Loos production and use the line, "They told her it was 'Dangerous Business' to flirt, but did she stop?"

CHARACTER OF STORY ............. Crook, trying to go "straight" is hounded by detective whose life is later at crook's mercy
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ About 5,000 feet

H. B. Warner's newest Jesse D. Hampton picture is based on a story by John Morosco according to the captions but there isn't anything conspicuously original about "Dice of Destiny," a good title but doesn't mean much. Coincident is king in these five reels but despite the fact H. B. Warner and his supporting company, together with the work of the director who has kept things moving along at a good pace, the picture makes an average good bit of program entertainment.

This type of picture, crook melodrama, always has found an appreciating audience somehow, especially in the neighborhood houses where "Dice of Destiny" will undoubtedly go over in a big way. There is a little confusion in distinguishing the characters in the opening reel due to the similarity of some of the male players who, with their hats on—regular "detectif"—like—most of the time all seem to look alike. At least there are two who sort of confuse the on-looker until about the beginning of the second reel.

When Nancy Preston's father, chief of a gang of jewel thieves, died he left Nancy in the care of his pal Jimmy Doyle (Warner) who has just finished a term "up the river." In order to give Nancy (she had never played the "game"), a chance, Jimmy took her to Jersey where he was really going "straight" until one of his former pals framed him and he was sentenced to another term, vowing to some day kill Tierney, the man responsible for his second sentence.

In prison Jimmy is given a place in the hospital, having at one time studied medicine and surgery. He makes a daring escape from jail and arrives on the scene in time to save Nancy from the villain. Together they go to Jimmy's uncle who owns and manages a private sanitarium.

Nancy and Jimmy are married and through the publication of the marriage license the two are traced by Tierney. While Tierney on the train is suddenly taken ill with an attack of appendicitis, a tramp is found unconscious at the station. Both Tierney and the tramp are taken to Jimmy's uncle's hospital. This is Jimmy's chance to kill Tierney when he is called to operate upon his former enemy but he doesn't and in the end everyone is made happy by the confession of the tramp who clears Jimmy of another alleged murder and Tierney withdraws his charges, also giving the couple tickets for a honeymoon to Europe.

Use the Star's Name and Exploitation Stunts

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Should your folks be favorably inclined toward H. B. Warner give his name the most prominence. On the other hand play it up as a crook melodrama, telling them a few of the situations through the use of catchlines such as: "For the love of a woman he went straight. Later, for the sake of the woman, he escaped jail where he was serving an unjust sentence. Then in after years, when as a physician he was called to operate and save the life of his enemy, what did he do?"

Announce it as a Jesse D. Hampton production and you can also secure some attractive posters from Pathe which will go well for lobby display. As suggested in Pathe's press sheet you might tie up with the jewelry shops in connection with this angle of the story. The press sheet itself will furnish additional ideas.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 5,944 feet

The biggest feature of "Fatty" Arbuckle's second Paramount is that it's such a vast improvement over his first. The comedy moments are well distributed and there are several mighty good laughs. The star is the life of the picture as well as the party. His efforts to amuse are sincere and he makes a good deal out of a rather limited role.

The actual story material isn't conspicuous enough to attract much attention but the situations afford good opportunities particularly suited to Arbuckle's personality, and he never misses a chance to make good. Perhaps the biggest laugh of the picture comes when "Fatty" as a lawyer who only pretends to be busy, is smitten with a pretty face in such a bad way that he sinks into a swivel chair near a window, the chair inclines backward and the hero turns a somersault out the window with the next flash showing him hanging on the ledge for life. This all happens so spontaneously that it brought a score of "oh's" at the Rivoli.

Other good bits that register are the "busy" lawyer's safe which contains a desirable assortment of "kickey" beverages. "Fatty" in one place sits on the desk buzzer and all the "help" come running in for orders from the boss and again when his prim stenographer interrupts one of his "nips," he holds the bottle in back of him, with his back to the window.
A window cleaner on a scaffold outside, relieves him of the bottle. The titles are well written and get a good share of the laughs in themselves.

Algernon Leary (Arbuckle), is a "promising" young lawyer who puts up a good front even though business is very dull. He accepts a check for several thousand from the Milk Trust to defend them against a band of women who have formed an organization to fight the trust. But the ladies get the better of the fat lawyer who gallantly tears up the check and accepts the case of the ladies without fee.

Milly Hollister, one of the leaders, makes a big hit with Algermon and he goes to extremes to gain favor in her eyes, even to the extent of attending a "little boy and girl" party, incidentally one of the good comedy bits, with Fatty in rompers. The Trust plan to ruin the lawyer for double-crossing them and when the anti-trust nominate Algermon for mayor, they get very busy.

Judge Voris is in league with the Trust and when he is found out he retires from the political race leave-ing Algermon to win both the mayorship and Milly.
In the cast are Viora Daniel, Winifred Greenwood, Roscoe Karns, Julia Faye and others.

Promise Them a Picture That They'll Laugh At. The Comedy's There

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you played Arbuckle's first comedy feature "A Full House" and found it to be a disappointment you can have all the more to talk about when you show them "The Life of the Party." This one is a big improvement over the initial effort of the star in the feature comedy line and you can promise them a real live comedy. Of course the story isn't much in itself but after all it's only secondary to the amusement provided by it.

You can say that Irvin Cobb is responsible for "The Life of the Party" and that "Fatty" Arbuckle has seen to it that the "life" has been put in. Manage to get them in and you can feel certain they'll go out satisfied. Say: "Who put the 'life' in 'The Life of the Party'?" See 'Fatty' Arbuckle's latest feature for the answer."

Several Hundred Unsolicited Testimonials Proclaim It the Best Book Ever Published in the Motion Picture Industry
Some Short Reels

“A Romance of ’76”—Goldwyn
Type of production.................................................. 1 reel animated cartoon

Happy Hooligan is seen recounting a highly imaginative romance that supposedly took place in Revolutionary times. Happy experiences considerable difficulty eloping with the fair lady, who is finally won by Gloomy Gus. The reel is just about average providing a few laughs and sufficient amusing material to carry it over. It will prove satisfactory where a short filler is wanted.

“Tails Win”—Universal
Type of production.................................................. 2 reel comedy

Trained lions are the basis of most of the comedy in this offering, which is just about average in merit. There isn’t a great deal of new business possible with the animals, and most of the footage is given over to a chase, with the comedians pursued by the lions. The show brings forth some pretty circus girls in abbreviated costumes, and the method of introducing the animals is a bit of a novelty. A young lady and her husband are employed by a theatrical agent, when the lady falls heir to the estate of her deceased husband. The estate proves to be a strange farm that is finally won by the star performer.

“Farm Boys Abroad”—Goldwyn
Type of production.................................................. 1 reel travelogue

This number of the Ford Educational series takes the form of a trip with the students of a farm school in Texas to various points of interest to their studies in all parts of the country. A stock show is visited in Nebraska, where the judging of blooded cattle and horses is shown. A trip to the prize corn field of Iowa displays some mammoth stalks. Some blue ribbon hogs are then shown, and a view of the Chicago stock yards. A view of the Woolworth Building in New York, and the Capitol at Washington are the final points of the trip, and the reel concludes with a shot of the boys’ return. There may be features of interest for some in the stockyard scenes, but on the whole the reel has nothing of special merit to recommend it.

“At It Again”—Goldwyn
Type of production.................................................. 2 reel comedy

This offering brings forward the son of an old favorite, George Bunny, son of John Bunny, is the featured comedian, and while he greatly resembles his well remembered parent, he does not possess the same amount of comedy ability. He works hard, however, and several bits of good business scattered throughout the footage make it a fair two reel. George and his pal determine to assist “Uncle Abe” in the sale of his cigar store. He has a customer who will buy if the business is good, and the young men make business very good by assuming disguises in rapid succession, making a purchase in each. They eventually become a trifle tipsy on Uncle’s private stock, and meet with many adventures on their way home, among them the purchase of a white horse which has been painted brown. There are more chances for laughs in the material than the director has taken advantage of, and hence more is expected some interest through Bunny’s name, but is only a mediocre offering. Mark Goldstein directed.

“The Isle of Desire”—Bruce—Educational
Type of Production.................................................. 1 reel scenic

Robert Bruce has taken his camera to the island of Jamaica for this one, and has secured a number of shots of true natural beauty. The offering is presented as a picturization of John Curtis Underwood’s poem, “The Island,” which contrasts the beauty of the wilds with the griminess and noise of the city, and thus the film is a succession of flashes, first of various parts of New York, then of the island. It has been well cut, and pupils from the poem in the title, and convey the ideas pleasingly. Toward the close the title is seen through the mist of the banana groves, the lake and woods, taken against the setting sun, are unusually fine pieces of photography, and should prove especially enjoyable to higher class patronage, and all those with an appreciation of the beautiful. This number is fully up to standard, and if this series has found favor with your patrons, will doubtless be exceptionally well received.

“There Is No Santa Claus”—Chester—Educational
Type of Production.................................................. 1 reel travelogue

An interesting, and at times beautiful series of views along the entire length of the famous St. Bernard Pass, in the Swiss Alps, comprises the footage of this offering. It should prove particularly interesting. The travelers start at the village of Oberatra, the last snowcapped peak to the summit of the mountain is reached. Proceeding up the steep slope, views are shown of the Inn of Napoleon, where the French general quartered his staff, the Cantine of Proz, a refuge for travelers, and some good shots of the Valley of the roses, showing the tremendous hanging ice and snow fields. The last portion is devoted to the St. Bernard Hospice. The Mule are shown starting a rescue party, and also performing skillfully on skis. The St. Bernard dogs, who aid in the rescue work are seen at work and play, with some information about the lives of both the Monks and their four legged aides. It is above the average of the type, and will make an excellent filler. Titles by William Henry Wright.

Pathe Review No. 81

This latest Review opens with scenes of Fez, Africa, showing the country itself and the people who inhabit it. Next comes the making of a Japanese lantern in which the nimble fingers of a Jap fashion a pretty lantern for your approval. “Highways of New York” is an interesting study of New York’s bridges, the Brooklyn Bridges, the Beverley Washing ton Bridges, the Pennsylvania Bridges, and the “Bridge of Sighs.” Another bit called “Giant’s Fingers” shows a powerful riveting machine at work. Two clever children in colonial costume then dance the minute. “A Woman From Mystery” shows how mayoral and incidentally gives the housewife a secret about it. The last subject in colored pictures of a Japanese park with some pretty native girls fighting shy of the camera.

“A Close Shave”—C. B. C. Film Corp.
Type of production.................................................. 2 reel comedy

This is by a long way the best Hall Room Boys comedy that has been produced. There is a lot more stuff in it than any of the preceding ones, and the laughs are frequent. Sid Smith and Harry McCoy are seen as the four-dashing Percy and Ferdie, and while they handle the parts well and secure all possible laughs, its success is due to some corking good comedy business. The first reel hold the biggest part of the good material, but the second holds up well enough to prevent dragging. In the beginning, Percy and Ferdie answer an ad for barbers, and to be sure of the job they get there in the middle of the night, sleeping on the steps of the shop. They get the job and the balance of the reel is a burlesque of the daily happenings in a barber shop. It’s all good stuff, with a succession of new bits of business. The second reel find the boys preparing for a meeting Miss Millionbucks’ ball. They get attired in tuxedo uniforms, passing as two friends of the young lady’s father. Of course the rightfull two arrive and show the boys up. At the moment they are about to be shot for impersonating officers, they wake up still in front of the barber shop, and the jobs taken. You can safely depend on this one to please.
"Cash Customers"—Pathé

Type of production .......................... 1 reel comedy

H. Roach again offers Harry (Snub) Pollard, sans mustache, with Marie Mosquini and Sunshine Sammie, the little darkey with the big grin. The reel is fairly fast and provides several good laughs. The comedy business is not very new and Pollard would undoubtedly produce better fun if provided with more original material. In this one Snub and his fat room mate have a tough time getting away from their facetious landlady when she catches them doing some ingenious cooking in their room. The boys finally make their escape into a drug store, where they are mistaken for the new clerks. Snub is going fine until the real clerks show up and then is forced to dodge the proprietor and the police force, with the aid of his dusky little ally. Most of the laughs are in this one and a part of the footage, and the finish of the reel is weak and silly. Pollard does one or two acrobatic stunts in a sack that are worthy of note and as a whole the offering will prove about average in merit.

"April Fool"—Mermaid—Educational

Lloyd Hamilton in another Mermaid comedy is making them laugh at the Strand this week despite a lot of hokum which, while it isn't new, is well done and Hamilton gets a good many laughs on his own account. Some April fool jokes amuse but like in a good many comedy offerings they keep it up too long to be funny. On the whole, however, "April Fool" hits up to the average comedy offering and has many really good laughs.

"A Tray Full of Trouble"—Chester-Educational

Type of production .......................... 2 reel comedy

The principal feature of this Chester production is the performance of the trained ape, already familiar in these comedies. The monkey furnishes a lot of laughs, and in fact a good deal of the comedy in the piece. There is a cute little girl who carries off her part in good shape, adding somewhat to the picture. This young lady with the aid of the sagacious monk, saves a baby heiress from the evil designs of two villainous kidnappers, and smuggles the infant to New York aboard a freight train, to secure the fortune. The antics of the ape in a box car with three tramps make a funny piece of business, and the animal's human-like actions through the whole thing carry it along fairly well. It will go well with children, and as a whole should prove just a passable offering of its type.

No. 14, "Screen Snapshots"—C. B. C. Film Corp.

Type of production .......................... 1 reel fan magazine

This number opens with Lillian Russell (not the one you think) having a try out before the camera. Then Zasu Pitts shows how some amateurs she has seen act before the moving picture camera. From there you jump to the office of Wm. A. Brady, where that gentleman and his daughter Alice are seen arguing over a play. The next vie wis of a party at Universal City, and shows Priscilla Dean, Carl Laemmle and Edith Roberts enjoying themselves. A short series of close-ups of George Loane Tucker, June Elvidge and Betty Compson follow, and then Nazimova and her company taking a moment's rest. The reel concludes with a shot of Rex Ingram and his staff of camera men shooting some big exterior scenes. If your patrons like the series, this one will be up to standard.

"Making Man Handlers at West Point"—Town & Country—

Type of production .......................... 1 reel magazine

In this, the second of the "Sport Pictorials" edited by Grantland Rice, a series of informative, and in some cases interesting shots of the life of the West Point cadets are presented. The principal point to be found with this stuff is that so many of the shots have appeared almost identical in news reels. At the beginning the cadets are shown on parade. This is followed by successive views of the different sports which now form part of the required curriculum. Football, polo and soccer are shown in brief shots. The manner of instruction in boxing, wrestling and fencing in the gymnasium are next taken and will very probably prove the most interesting bit of the footage. The reel concludes with a view of a mounted group of cadets and a roller inspection. Inasmuch as every American is interested in West Point to an extent, this brief insight into some of the life there should make a fairly good short filler.

"The Thrill of the Thoroughbreds"—Town & Country—Arrow

Type of production .......................... 1 reel magazine

This contains better material than either of the other two "Sport Pictorials" thus far reviewed. The picture was taken in and around the stables and track at Saratoga, and presents some facts and views of the race horses, which will prove brand new information to the "outsider." The handling, rubbering, bandaging and general pampering of the sleek thoroughbreds is shown. The preparation for a race, including the training of both horse and jockey, offers something unusual in a picture. Several shots of a typical thoroughbred show a shot of some of the blooded horses from the stables of Harry Payne Whitney. Well photographed view of a steeplechase provide a good finish. Most of the footage should prove of interest, to say nothing of the two horses. Will be all right where a high grade filler is wanted.

"A Home Spun Hero"—Christie

Type of production .......................... 2 reel comedy

This is a good one. Probably most of your patrons will find it one of the most amusing reels that has yet been seen in the little comedian is at his best, and there are an abundance of laughs from beginning to end. The action is very fast and there is quite an amount of slapstick, but it's all good and the complete balance of the entire footage is laid behind the scenes of a musical comedy show with plenty of original comedy business and several pretty girls to put it over in great shape. The story in itself is humorous material. The leading lady to the musical trooping receives word that her rural cousin (Bobbie Vernon) is in the neighborhood, and for amusement she telephones him to visit the show. Cousin is indeed a farmer, but a 1921 model. When he learns the type he is supposed to be, he dolls up in the true backwoods style and makes his appearance. Bobbie gets in a long series of troubles behind the scenes, which provide a lot of real comedy. Of course in the end he appears in his proper self, limousine and all, and the laugh is on the girls.

You can't go wrong on this picture. When you book it you will show your patrons one of the best of the type they have seen in some time.

"The Big Idea"—Educational

Type of production .......................... 2 reel dramatic playlet

This is the first of a series, all of which in theme and thought are constructed from stories by Ruth Steel, of the Saturday Evening Post, supporting the timely and all important appeal for true Americanism. In this respect "The Big Idea" is well worth while as an example of the senselessness of some of the ideas propagated by Bolshevik doctrines and preaching. However, the production itself is not good. The cast is amateurish, and with the exception of one old man do not lend much assistance to the appeal of the theme. It is the story of a shoe factory worker who falls under the influence of a group of anarchists. Their doctrine is that the worker is the only producer, and that every worker is entitled to the full output of his labor, without dividing with anyone. The working man becomes almost fanatical on the idea. His wife realizing the danger, conspires with an old friend, and to put him right they give him a dose of his own medicine. The tailor who repairs his clothes refuses to return them; his wife refuses to allow him to eat any food that she prepares, etc., and all give the same reason: they have produced the labor, hence the product belongs to them alone. After a series of such lessons the working man realizes the folly of anarchist principles, and the necessity of co-operation of capital and labor is made plain. The purpose of this picture is certainly commendable, and it will visualize a subject to which everyone has given more or less thought.

Worthless Stock

 Vigilance Committee Reports—$50,000,000 Bought in 1920

Worthless stock amounting to more than a quarter of a billion dollars is the annual offering of the wildcat companies to the American public. This is the estimate of the Vigilance Committee of the National Association after an extensive survey. The committee has investigated some 70 companies with a total capitalization of about $160,000,000.

The committee declares that the people of this country have actually bought during the past year between $25,000,000 and $50,000,000 of stock issues, none of which are worth the paper on which the certificates are printed. These figures do not refer to stock issues offered for business by well-established companies.

Only two or three of the 70 companies investigated had any earning power. With the market's interest in any branch of the industry.

George Callahan, eastern representative for the R. C. P. The company has taken over the interests of Smith and has already been produced in San Francisco. It is planned to have three companies at work. Actual production starts shortly.

How Hokum Pays

You'd bet Charlie Chaplin was an attraction, wouldn't you? Take the winning side all the time, yes? How much would you think his personal appearance would be worth? Lots of people. Start in figuring now. Uh-huh. Essanay paid him $50,000 once to keep working a week. To offset an exhibitor's offer. Well, let's see. Charlie dropped in at Madison Square Garden several weeks ago. At the fights. Benny Leonard starrin. Just before the big bout Charlie was engineered into the ring. Introduced. Bowed. Walked around a la Charlie. Got a laugh. And a "hand." But not a knockout. Not at all. Mild, perfunctory applause. That's all. Why? Because it wasn't staged. The hokum wasn't put in. If it had been played up, advertised, talked about, Charlie would have set 'em wild. Just another proof that advertising pays. Even with a world celebrity.

BETTER THINK THIS OVER

You, Mister Exhibitor. Yes. No one else. Got a good memory? Remember some months ago—last summer—Famous was talking about booking on a 20 per cent of the gross as percentage for their product? No. Well, they were. Then it died.

PRODUCTION
Richard's' Idea

I am unable to give any information in the nature of philosophy, but I will only express my real convictions as regards the industry, which I hope will not be misconstrued in case same is published, although I realize it is hard to make anything out of a statement, but I will not be misconstrued by about as many people as take the proper construction of statements, at these times.

A National Convention, selected from the most representative exhibitors, distributors, producers and stars, regardless of their affiliations, and not less than two hundred to three hundred in number, should be called for a period of from one to two weeks, if necessary, to make a complete survey of all conditions in every branch of the industry, and from all parts of the United States and Canada. This will do more for a better working of the industry than a political or Exhibitors' Convention or any other convention, if called in time, and if the same is not held the industry will suffer through this process of confusion.

As Broadway pioneered the extravagant methods of photo play presentation in with other large key cities, such a plan should be followed, and to pioneer the example of readjustment in a moderate way, if such is needed.

Exhibiting must be tested out to what extent the patron actually demands and expects in the way of music and other accessories, etc., advertising consistently on the proper features; and all other details, large and small, must be watched so that the waste eliminated wherever possible.

A code of business relations should be worked out in as nearly selfless manner as possible between the producer and the exhibitor, for their mutual benefit.

Adjustments both ways must be made or serious results to the business are certain, in case of any radical decline generally throughout the country.

The twelve or more most prominent screen stars should make fewer pictures per annum, although BIGGER AND BETTER, thereby leaving room for the lesser stars to come to the front in the industry that do not make such an immediate big demand in rentals, relieving the producing costs and demands on the box office in proportion to the investment.

Finally, let the average big man in this industry get out of his head "that he must make his life's fortune out of pictures IN FROM TWENTY-FOUR TO THIRTY-SIX MONTHS." I believe that much good in the business can be accomplished, that thought is eliminated.

Why He Cancelled

WATKINS, N. Y.

Wid's Daily,
New York City:

Please send me your bill to date and discontinue Wid's. I have lost faith in your judgment of pictures. I bought "Pinto" after your saying it was a fine comedy. The people led it silly and they were right. Then you said "put me down on record" that "The Miracle Man" was a great picture. The people fell flat in all towns and we lost money. Then you said "Scratch My Back" was a scream. I watched the picture and never laughed a word in the house for a half hour. And last but not least I bought "Blind Huber" out of your and am not being good. It was terrible—awful—and I cannot say enough. The crowd almost mobbed me as I charged them 28c. As I said before I have certainly lost all faith in your judgment of pictures. Yours truly,

GEO. C. STARKEY.

() Bn. Board of Censors Frowns on Films Showing Criminals as Heroes—Regarding Serials
(By wire to WID'S DAILY)
Harriusburg, Pa.—In a letter sent yesterday to all distributors, producers and exhibitors by Henry Starr Richardson, secretary of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, it was stated that films in which criminals are shown as heroes nad in which they defy the minions of the law are highly undesirable. The board places in that category pictures which show men of the underworld reaching a point of financial influence, defying the law to reach that stage in life.

Regarding serials the letter states: "The board will consider serials only in their entirety. In the future, single installments will not be considered or passed and the entire film must be submitted before application will be reviewed.

Former Places All Sorts of Evil Practices at Door of Pictures—

Blue Law Developments

The Rev. Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts of the National Reform Bureau of Washington, one of the leading lights of the blue law movement places at the door of the pictures the blame for all sins of existing evils.

He states that juvenile delinquency can be attributed to the pictures and that the Government ought to censor pictures before release. Dr. Crafts read a statement in Washington on Sunday in which he said that if the zoblastic administration failed to stop up to the expected standard for reform legislation, Harding will find a troublesome Congress in his hands.

Other developments in the reform movement:

The Society of Arts and Sciences will hold a dinner at the Astor on Dec. 19 to protest against the blue laws campaign. Invitations and speakers will include Frank A. H. Kahn, Dr. Frank Crane, Augustus Vincent, D. W. Griffith, Raymond Hitchcock, and S. Cohen and Frank I. Cobb.

The committee of the Board of Managers of N.Y. Civic League has submitted a report recommending the repeal of the Sunday law as affecting business in general and in general affecting the aims of the Lord's Day Alliance.

The Knights of Columbus announce officially that 35,000 members who are now standing in various kinds through the country are opposed to blue laws and will protest the passage of them.

Marshall Neilan's "Dinty"

Unerring in Showmanship

Newspapers and Trade Press Unite in Calling Picture One of the Biggest Money Makers of the Day

UNERRING SHOWMANSHIP

"Marshall Neilan is a master of producers. His pep and eager versatility makes him the George M. Cohan of the movies. He can make funny pictures, sad pictures and thrillers. He is suddenly jazzy, suddenly sober, suddenly sentimental. But he is a sure fire, a born movie maker. See his 'Dinty.' You can feel that all of his dynamic young energy and freshness have gone into this film—boiling, bubbling, instinctive cleverness and insight, unerring showmanship."—Chicago Herald and Examiner.

A GREAT BIG PICTURE

"A little boy makes a great big picture. I knew there'd come a time some day when Wesley Barry would hit the world right where it lived and make it see—a star. Congratulations. A clever story, one that has everything it needs—plot, interest and fun. 'O, lots of fun, ingenuity, sentiment, a whippy cast and that other thing that makes your heart all big and shabby and sets you feeling blindingly for a clean handkerchief."—Chicago Daily Tribune.

INTEREST IN EVERY INCH

"Marshall Neilan manages to get a thrill a foot and interest every inch. A fast drama of action and even coated with comedy. Wesley Barry is like lightning in his pranks and has been given an unbelievable number of clever situations, of which he makes the most. Mr. Neilan makes you forget all cares for an hour."—Chicago Journal.

A SURE FIRE MONEY MAKER

"The picture is sure to make money for the exhibitor. There is pathos, mirth and thrills. The action is swift and decisive. It is the sort of picture that pleases."—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

GETS OVER IN GOOD STYLE

"Tender, humanizing pathos that holds a tight grip on sympathy. There is so much humor, pathos and ingenuity that it will get over in good style. Wesley Barry plays with great realism and Colleen Moore gives a remarkable performance."—Moving Picture World.

WILL PLEASE EVERYONE

"There are enough elements in this feature to please every type of picture-goer. Vigorous melodrama, wholesome sentiment. It is rich in humor, which keeps pace with the pathos and sentiment. You can make sure of 'Dinty.' It's a great audience picture."—Motion Picture News.

Famous Players Canadian Corp. Financial Report Ready—Assets $2,500,000
(Special to WID’S DAILY)
Toronto—It is understood that the initial annual report of Famous Players Canadian Corp., which will shortly be mailed to shareholders, will reveal satisfactory earnings, an unusually comfortable position with regard to working capital, and a well developed construction program.
The statement will cover a period of 12 months ended Aug. 28, 1920, and therefore only six months of the period since public issue in April last by the Royal Securities Corporation of Famous Players 8 per cent first preferred shares. Reliable forecasts of net profits place them in excess of $250,000, an amount considerably in advance of estimates made at the time of public issue of the preferred shares. It is expected that the balance sheet will show net liquid assets in excess of $2,500,000, a somewhat unique current position, and one largely accounted for by the fact that the motion picture business is a non-inventory business, and that the corporation is holding a large amount of cash for expenditure on its current construction program.
The corporation’s construction program is well under way, large new theaters being scheduled to open in seven of the leading Canadian cities from January to June of the coming year.

Statistics as Proof
Rumors of Depression Are Exaggerated and Misleading, Says S. R. Kent, F. P. Sales Manager
“The motion picture industry never was in stronger condition than it is right now,” says Sidney R. Kent, general sales manager of Famous Players-Lasky. “Not only is there no general depression at the present time, but there is none in sight.”

“In July of this year we began to hear rumors of depression among the motion picture theaters of the country, which rumors have continued to a point where many people have taken it for granted that a great depression really exists the country over.”

“Nothing could be farther from the truth. There have been some ‘bad spots,’ it is true, but these are segregated instances for which local conditions are responsible.”

More Room for Fox
Takes Over 3-story Structure Below Studio—Gives Additional 50,000 Square Feet
A lease aggregating almost $1,000,000 for a period of 21 years has been closed by Fox Film on the new four-story structure recently completed by the Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., at the northeast corner of 10th Ave. and 54th St., a plot 100 by 175 ft., according to the New York Times. The lease calls for a net rental of $47,000 a year, in addition to taxes and operating expenses.
The building contains more than 50,000 sq. ft. of floor space, the lower stories being constructed to carry 300 lbs., the upper stories 100 lbs. The ceilings are from 12 to 15 feet high insuring excellent light on the block above Fox opened a short time ago its big studio. It is rumored, says the Times, that other picture interests are seeking sites in the vicinity, as the labor situation out side of Manhattan has caused considerable trouble.

It was impossible to reach any one at the Fox offices yesterday for confirmation of this or to find out for what purpose the company was to use the building.

All attendance records were smashed at the Capitol for the week just ended with Douglas Fairbanks in “The Mark of Zorro.” A total of 48,581 persons paid their way in and the total amount of public enthusiasm translated into box office receipts was $48,103.40.
Statistics as Proof

ditions have been responsible. The general situation has been good and I submit as eloquent evidence of that July and September prosperity as a whole the figures listed below, which are the actual amounts paid into the Government for the months of July, August and September, 1919, and for the corresponding months in 1920:

1919
1920
July
$4,699,239.22
$6,436,417.41
August
4,962,681.98
6,824,328.56
September
5,463,902.25
7,360,470.79
Total $18,335,513.45
$20,657,222.76

The above figures tell the story.
The situation is good, there is good business
ment. They are official. They do not lie.

We will remember the hottest weather stories of depression in July and Au-September. Kindly note the comparison of the Federal tax paid in July, 1919, and that paid in July, 1920. Also note the increase in the tax paid in August, 1920, as against August, 1919, and then the tremendous increase in September as against September of last year.

The Government figures for October of this year are not yet available, but they need not be feared.
Judging from our own records of sales, I am certain that they will be found proportionately satisfactory.
They will prove that the depression of the talk in October was just as misleading and, as affecting the general situation, just as erroneous as that of July, August and September is proved to have been.

I know that when our own busi-ess submits as eloquent evidence of the depression of last week in November was the largest in the Famous Players-Lasky's history with the single exception of National Paramount Week, 1920. I feel that I have submitted sufficient proof that the rumors of depression are greatly exaggerated and misleading.

George Bunny, son of the late John Bunny, is now making a series of two-reel Capitol Comedies for Naional. He expects the third will be released through Goldwyn.

A summons has been filed in the Supreme Court by William L. Pass-part against the Orpheum Theater & Realty Co., owner of the Orpheum in Manhattan, for $300,000. The cause of the suit is not known. State Senator James J. Walker is the attorney for Passpart.

An attachment for $11,837 against the C. R. Macauley Photoplays has been obtained in the Supreme Court of New York by L. Sellers. The plaintiff says he made an agreement with the Macauley Company July 25, 1919, and that $6,300 salary is due under the agreement. On a second claim he says he was to get 5% of the balance of the first $100,000 received from the sale of When Bear Cat Went Dry, after the cost had been deducted, and 3/4 on all other amounts. He says the books show that the film cost $85,257 and that up to June 26 last the receipts were $156,337, of which his share is $2,487.
He alleges that the sum received was at least $100,000 for which $5,487 additional is due him.

A suit has been filed in the Supreme Court by Samuel Cummins against the Bray Pictures Corp. The complaint is not yet on file but a de-gnial has been filed by the defendant through Gabriel Hess.

Victor Kremer has filed an answer in the Supreme Court to a suit by Frederick Post on a note. He says the note was given for the rights in certain territory to the film plays,
"Denny From Ireland," "The Snail,"
"The Ranger," "The Pen Vulture" and "Arizona Wins," on representation that the plaintiff owned them, but they were the property of the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Co. of Los Angeles, it is alleged.

M. P. D. A. Dinner

The annual dinner of the M. P. D. A.—the Motion Picture Directors’ Association—was held last night at the Bottman Hotel with about 150 guests present. Practically every member of the association who was in town yesterday attended the dinner at which Augustus Thomas was toastmaster. James Vincent, president of the M. P. D. A., made the opening address.

Charles Gilbey represented the coast branch of the lodge spoken of behalf of his co-directors while other speakers were William S. Cohen, Augustus Thomas and State Senator James L. Walker. It was the first dinner at which ladies were present. Among the hostesses were John D. Williams of First National and his wife, and the publishers of a number of daily newspapers.

which are state right offerings which it happens these two exchanges handle.

An advertising announcement which appeared in a regional trade paper states that “in keeping with the general reduction of various commodities, we have arranged to revise our price schedule on many of our First National attractions, so as to give the smaller town an opportunity to show our better pictures, which the former price list made prohibitive.” The plan calls for the booking of a block of 10 pictures in order to get the benefit of the lower scale of prices.

The list of pictures includes 3 Pickfords, 6 Stewarts, 3 Constance Talmades, 4 MacDonalds, 2 Vidoras, 3 Neillans, 2 Griffiths, 2 Norma Talmades and 2 Dwan.

The program opens with the overture, “Charley’s Aunt” by Anton Dvorak and this is followed by the Rivoli Pictorial, which includes a Matt and Jeff cartoon. The third number is a vocal selection, “The Roadside,” rendered by Carl Rolins and male chorus. William S. Hart is the feature attraction in “The Test of the Block.” A dance specialty by Grace Eastman and Martha Shelley, entitled “Pizzicatto,” follows. The sixth number is a Jack Snow comedy, “Pineapple,” the concluding number is the Twelfth Street March,” played by Firmin Swinnen.

The selection is rendered in the original Norwegian, and Mr. Bye is assisted by the Capitol Ensemble. The Capitol News follows and the next number is entitled “In a Russian Gypsy Camp,” being a presentation of Russian folk dances by Doris Niles, Mlee, Sergerava and Olga Plesha. The concert is concluded by the ballet corps and Russian Cathedral Choir. The feature is Miss Nazimova in “Billions.”

The new hill at the Criterion opens with “Serenata” by the orchestra. It’s a very pretty Prima subject, shows how luscious fruit would look if it had no color, then shows the same fruit with its natural color. The prologue to William DeWitt’s picture, at the Criterion, is attractive. It is called “The Four Seasons of Life.” Four different sets depict Childhood, Sweethearts, Marriage and Old Age, while the principal characters are costumed accordingly. The music is thoroughly appropriate, reminiscent of a certain picture Decca does. “The Bubbles” dance.

No Hope this Session
Congress Not Expected to Entertain Blue Law Bill for District of Columbia—Moore in Line
(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Washington—There is small possibility of Congress entertaining any idea of the passage of a blue law bill for the District of Columbia during the present session. It seems to be a representative opinion here among Senators and Representatives that districts are not as planned by the reform movements, can never pass Congress.

Tom Moore is waiting for the new movement to get active under way. He plans to hold a popular vote in his theaters to ascertain whether the public wants Sunday shows or not. Sunday is the biggest day," says Moore, "for the moving picture in Washington by 50 per cent. No industry, no amusement could flourish without public support. So it seems to me that the Sabbath crowds in the cinema theaters are the best answer to the reformers."

The Crying Need

The following letter has been received:

What is the crying need of the moving picture business? The encouragement and development of what is really meritorious work. The real authors—eminent and imminent—who look upon moving picture making as a serious art, and earnest and industrious thinkers who are willing to give all the abilities to the screen and to make it the end. The other scheme of things has been tried—at enormous expense and hard labor—and we have found most dismally wanting. It is an idle dream to suppose that a group of intelligent men can be kept on trying to build houses without foundations. That's moving picture making. And there should be some respect cultivated for intelligent criticism to one—and certainly no thing that glimmers in any person's eye and is put out, it's not common sense to see any opened. When you have an art as delicate as this one—or less minds, read and tear a writer's work a thousand ways and perhaps in the end, it should be interpreted by the director with a fair degree of subject to which the writer has intended to convey. And the director and writers should be held responsible for the result. If by their works they are able to make their pictures lose their jobs."

Nathanson to Britain
Will Develop Lord Beaverbrook's Film Interests—6 Months There and 6 in Canada (By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Toronto—N. L. Nathanson is expected to sail for England this month to assume an important executive position with Lord Beaverbrook. Nathanson is to receive $100,000 a year for his duties with the Beaverbrook film interests and is to spend six months of his time in England, the remainder to be spent in Canada, where he will continue to operate his various interests.

Nathanson is expected to develop the Beaverbrook interests, theaters and exchanges along the lines of the legal Films, Paramount Theaters, Ltd., Famous-Lasky Service, Ltd., and Famous Players-Canadian Corp.—the Paramount affiliated interests in Canada. The new move will not affect his interests in the theater units here in any way whatever.

Nathanson planned to leave last month but couldn't get away. He expected to take with him a complete technical staff for theater improvements, but some of the members demurred, stating they would rather stay in Canada.

Emil E. Shauer of Famous Players stated he didn't know a thing about the accuracy of the Nathanson story.

T. O. C. C. Expected to Hold Meeting With Adolph Zukor on Advance Deposit Question

It is learned that arrangements are now under way for what is expected to be an important conference between a committee of the Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce and Adolph Zukor, at which it would not prove surprising if the matter of advance deposits in which he was gone into fully. It will be recalled that the exhibitor organization last week successfully terminated a rather obstinate fight with Hiram Abrams of United Artists, the terms of the settlement providing for the elimination of advance deposits by United Artists and the creation of a $5,000 cash trust fund to protect the "Big Four" against the possible failure of exhibitors to live up to their agreements.

It is understood from well-informed sources that the conference will be held for a similar plan as affecting Famous Players. The Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce is known to have the advance deposit question under fire with at least one other nation-wide distributing organization and is planning to push the matter through with all companies.

New Ideas

The white way to eliminate cheap pictures to set a standard—and the most efficient means towards this end is the establishment of the Motion Picture School—would a school with such a high standard of excellence that it would give the directing novice a platform; that would make him a credit to the profession; a director intrusted with a star by that has been bought at high royalty and an overhead that would wreck a bank perhaps, who has won his spurs over an indifferent experience, would not plunge the whole project into financial ruin and oblivious were he a member of the moving picture school.

Take the cameraman, for instance. He must start at the bottom and serve an apprenticeship with a camera that first of all training the director and the audience she is to know about the mechanism. He must know everything there is to know about the camera. Then another school comes from gauging distance, the proper level, perspective and focus must be the perfection of results, and no picture producer dare assign the shooting to an amateur. Yet it is a positive fact that the director of all the productions has forced the amateur director into the breach.

Putting It Over

Utica, N. Y.—Does your theater take money from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M., if not you might try the idea originated by the Alhambra, a "lunch Hour Club," with the slogan, "catch while you eat," in which Constance Tinnis is a stenographer, seemingly have a particular appeal to office workers, they had cards printed announcing that the eating of lunches would be permitted in the theater between 11 and 2. They suggested to several of the biggest firms in the city that the relaxation of the noon certaination would be beneficial to employees, and had no trouble in getting the cards well distributed through all the offices. The "Noon Hour Lunch Club" has been a success from the start.

Lima, O.—A newspaper contest was held on the production, "What Women Love," starring Arlette Kelman with a co-operative advertising page based on the same idea were effectively used by Dick Emig, manager of the Regent, in connection with a showing of the feature. His suggestion to the newspaper that an interesting contest would be to have "Lima Women Love" applied to them, and a week before the showing, announcement of the contest appeared on the front page of the paper. Simultaneously, store windows blossomed with displays of merchandise appealing to women, and a "What Women Love" feature proved immensely popular. The last day of the contest a double page advertisement appeared, with Regent occupying the center, with a straight announcement of feature, and various merchants' "What Women Love" ads grouped about it.

Omaha.—Lions, real and imitation, are used to bring attention to the fact that "The Revenge of Tarzan," is being shown at the Moon. On top of the ticket office at the new was perched a life-sized image of a lion with a mechanical device that permitted the lion's head to roll from side to side and his tail to twitch. At each turn of the head, a lion omitted a ferocious growl as his eyes would flash with fire, with all electric lights having been placed in his head. The front of the theater and the lobby resembled an African jungle, so thick was the foliage on the palm, fern and other plants arranged there. Six-shoots and life-sized watercolor paintings were displayed in the lobby. The city's newspapers were covered with the effect of "Tarzan." 24-sheets.

A real "wild," untamed African lion was obtained, which was penned in a large steel cage and carried about the theatrical business and residence areas. A man dressed as Tarzan and as keeper of the lion.

M. P. D. A. Dinner
Attended by Many Notables Who Delivered Important, Interesting Addresses

It was well into the early hours of yesterday morning when the fourth annual M. P. D. A. dinner came to a close at the Biltmore. And everyone present declared it was the most successful of the various organizations, and probably in view of the addresses delivered, one of the most important film functions ever held.

It was natural that the proposed blue laws should be the chief topic of discussion among the speakers. There were a number of interesting talks, conspicuous among which were those of Wm. A. Brady, president of the National Association, who forcibly dwelt upon the importance of an aggressive attack by the motion picture interests to offset the propaganda and conspiracy being carried on behalf of the proposed blue laws.

Augustus Thomas was the toastmaster and was in an unusually happy vein. Dr. Frank Crane, the essayist, was also an interesting talker, and among other who made excellent points in their addresses were F. H. La Guardia, president of the Board of Aldermen; Everett Martin, of the National Board of Review; Lesley Mason, of the Exhibitors Trade League; Sophie Irene Loeb, of the Child's Welfare League, who made a play for naturalness and life in pictures; Sydney Cohen, of the M. P. D. O.; State Senator Jas. L. Walker, who closed the evening with a splendid appeal that the industry take no apologetic attitude, and James Vincent, president of the M. P. D. A., spoke favorably of what the future held for the director.

One of the features of the evening was the presentation of the original songs, with the composer, Hallet Gilberte, at the piano. There was also at the very important affair a cleverly prepared address delivered by an actor in costume. Chas. Miller was chairman of the committee in charge and was assisted by George Irving, Charles Giblyn, Ashly Miller and J. Searle Dawley.

No. Cause for Alarm
Elmer Pearson of Pathe Sees No Material Slump in the Middle West—Back from Trip

After a three weeks' trip through the Central West, Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges of Pathe, has prepared a survey of the situation. While at many places present conditions have not all they have been in other cities, the report indicates an early return to normal during the coming year.

"How frequently we have been told," says Pearson, "that investments in the motion picture business were of the most hazardous, yet we have witnessed a slump in every other line of business for six or eight months, the motion picture box office has only been affected during the last few weeks, and less than half of the theaters have felt any slump even for that short period.

"Everywhere I went I made it my business to talk with all exhibitors and was particularly impressed with the extraordinary fairness manifested especially with the smaller exhibitor toward the producer, the exchanges and a comprehensive recognition of their problems. They all seem to know that they had been the chief beneficiary of the wonderful box office conditions of the past two or three years, and of their items of expenditure, film rental had actually increased the least of any, consequently they were inclined to a feeling of co-operativeness. Nowhere was there any sign of antagonism.

"Although there were 90,000 unemployed at Detroit, the downtown theaters were habitually packed, and I was assured that for falling off in receipts had been experienced. Some of the other Michigan towns reported a small falling off, Lansing, however, was holding up well.

"Chicago had noticed no falling off at the large theaters. Small towns and busy country houses seemed to be the only slightly. The same condition prevailed at Des Moines, Minneapo-

For Increased Taxes
(By wire to WID’S DAILY)
Washington — Secretary of the Treasury Houston has recommended to Congress that the tax on theater tickets be increased 10% and places be increased revenue to be derived from the proposed measure at $70,000,000. In his report he also suggests an increase of 5% on film rental measure that would give the Government $4,000,000 more in revenue.
National Tie-Up
World M. P. Corp. To Issue 8 Page Rotogravure Section to Newspapers

A weekly newspaper pictorial section of eight pages, the circulation of which will be blanketeted throughout the country, is being issued by the World M. P. Corp.

Four pages are devoted to news photographs obtained by the World’s cameramen, one page to fashion photographs, one page to theatricals in which the pictures of the World’s stars will be featured. Every page will carry a credit line for the World thus making the supplement a direct tie-up with the local exhibitor.

The circulation will run into millions and according to David A. Murphy, general director of the newspaper service department, the circulation is now near the five million mark. Murphy is credited with the origin of this plan.

World M. P. Corp. has had this plan under way for more than a year and it is in addition to the daily newspaper photo service to be supplied to newspapers. Seventy-five pet. of the charter member newspapers of the Associated Press and many smaller newspapers are said to have already contracted for this daily service.

New York, Chicago, and a West Coast City have been selected as the distribution centers for the weekly rotogravure section.

DETACHED ANNOUNCEMENT WHEN THE TIME IS RIPE
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor sold his house over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Omaha—"Go to Movie" Week, tried for the first time here, proved to be a great success. It will be an annual event in Omaha hereafter.

The big campaign comprised the Strand and Rialto, and the Sun and Moon, united to make the week a success. For two weeks they ran the story.

Each of the four big houses advertised on a large scale, telling of the picture it would show, but this individual theater advertising was submerged under the "Go to Movie" Week ads. Eight hundred sheets were put out on billboards. The street car company consented to having big red banners put on the fronts of the cars, and distinctive cards put in the car windows. The Chamber of Commerce endorsed the week, praising the picture industry in the Chamber Bulletin, and urging merchants to co-operate with the theaters any way they could. The merchants consented to having cards put in their windows, and mentioned "Go to Movie" Week in their advertisements.

The newspapers co-operated to put over the week. Each of the four houses took half a page in the three big dailies, and each of the dailies gave four pages to motion pictures. Across each page, at the top, was a line "This is Go to Movie Week." The papers ran editorials, news stories, feature stories, columns, etc., each trying to outdo the others to tell the public of Omaha all about the industry.

A mammoth parade of the industry in Omaha, was planned, but continued bad weather made the parade impossible.

An automobile truck went about the streets in the rain, accompanied by a band, and from it were released 1,000 balloons, each carrying either a ticket to one of the theaters or a $5 purchase order from one of the leading merchants in the city. This was another way in which the merchants co-operated.

Each theater put up a special presentation feature, the pictures chosen being: Rialto, Charles Ray in "Peaceful Valley"; Sun, "The Penalty"; Strand, "Nomads of the North," and Moon, "The Great Redeemer".

Norfolk, Va.—An intensive campaign put "Madame X" over, despite the opposition of the Ringling-Barnum & Bailey circy, a one-day appearance of Billy Sunday and strong opposition in the picture theaters. In charge of the campaign was the manager of the Rialto Theater, and Otto Wells of the Wells theaters, gave helpful co-operation.

A unique lobby display was originated and built by W. R. Ferguson of Goldwyn headquarters. It consisted of a letter X ten feet high, painted a deep red, set on a pivot so that it revolved like a windmill. It was mounted in the entrance arch above the heads of persons entering the theater or passing along the sidewalk. Where the two strokes of the X cross, was painted a portrait of Miss Fredrick. In each side of the X was arranged so that the big X stopped at a certain time. Prizes of seats to the performance of "Madame X" were given to patrons guessing the nearest to the correct stopping time.

The circus itself was utilized to help boost the showings. Eight boys were engaged to march 100 yards ahead of the circus parade bearing full sheet white cards on which were pasted the black and white letters forming "Madame X." The letters formed "Madame X" with the name of the theater. In the evening Ferguson bought circus tickets for the eight boys who snuggled the white cards into the arena with them. There they formed in line, single file, and marched around the arena with the words "Madame X" and "Granny" facing the great audience.

An innovative police court summons was served on drivers of standing motor cars, each "summons" filled in with the number of the automobile in which it was left. A woman was represented to be Pauline Frederick as "Madame X," with eight children. She was sent to the managers of the opposite theaters and to the newspaper offices bearing a note addressed personally to each man on whom she called. The red-lighting of a stall magazine was done by newspaper, the Virginian-Pilot, was worked for the first time in Norfolk.

Brooklyn—Systematizing the irritating "lost and found" situation in a theater, has finally been worked out along the lines of what is considered a nearly model plan at the Strand. Hyman has formed a "Lost and Found" division. Every member of the Strand staff has been directed to return to the office each article found. If the owner’s name and address is on the found article a polite letter is written informing him or her of its whereabouts.

When an article has been lost and reported to be lost, the ushers and employees are notified, alter the performances and a search is made for the article. Nine out of ten times it is returned.

New Censor

Montreal—John McDermid has been appointed to the Board of Censorship of Moving Picture Films for the province of Quebec.

Showmen are coming from far and wide to EXHIBITOR’S WEEK AT THE CAPITOL

The most important event of the year will be Rothapfel’s epoch-making presentation of

“PASSION” Starring Pola Negri
The intimate romance of the little French milliner, whom the world came to know as Mme. DuBarry.

AT THE CAPITOL THEATRE Week Commencing DECEMBER 12

Mr. Rothapfel makes the following signed statement in his house program:

“I have seen ‘Passion’ and did everything in my power to procure it for the Capitol Theatre. As soon as I was sure it would be played here I started to make preparations for its presentation, which we hope will be one of the finest ever conceived. If I can accomplish something that will be in a measure worthy of this great production I will feel satisfied that I have indeed achieved something.

“No picture that I have ever seen in my career is better produced, and certainly, in my humble opinion, no artist has ever surpassed the work of Pola Negri in the role of Madame Du Barry. The settings, the cast, and every detail of the production have been given the most exquisite care and attention. The whole achievement sums up the nearest approach to what I should like to see as the culmination of the art of the motion picture.”

S. L. ROTHAPFEL.

Commonplace Story Made Unusual by Director's Treatment

"MIDSUMMER MADNESS"
William DeMille Prod.—Paramount
DIRECTOR .................. William DeMille
AUTHOR .................. Cosmo Hamilton
SCENARIO BY ............ Olga Printzlau
CAMERAMAN ................. Guy Wilky
AS A WHOLE......Commonplace story, made fairly attractive chiefly by sterling quality of cast STORY......Typically Hamilton; wife thinks husband neglects her and seeks sympathy from husband's friend DIRECTION......Responsible entirely for picture's dramatic values
PHOTOGRAPHY .............. Excellent
LIGHTINGS .................... Effective

character of story
DETAIL.......In harmony with direction, sub-titles

CHARACTER OF STORY......Deals with married life in "society"
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 5,908 feet

In "Midsummer Madness" William DeMille was given story material which could scarcely be called unusual, but by dint of careful treatment, he has turned out a production that deserves considerable praise.

The story is typically Cosmo Hamilton-like, dealing with two young married couples, high in society life.
Margaret Meredith (Lois Wilson) feels that her share of life's romance has petered out because her husband (Jack Holt) buries himself in his law work.
Julian Osborn (Conrad Nagel) takes advantage of the situation and while his wife (Lila Lee) is in the East and Meredith is busy in the city, takes Margaret to a dance. Under the exotic influence of the summer night and touched by the hand of romance, they go to a hunting lodge where, in a moment of midsummer madness, Julian's passionate love-making sweeps them off their feet. They are brought to their senses by the picture of Margaret's husband and child, but decide to keep the secret. It later develops that they were seen while at the lodge. The two couples are brought together where a confession is finally made and forgiveness granted.

In less skilful hands it is hazardous to think what might have happened to Hamilton's story. The unraveling of the plot does not tax the spectator's ingenuity in figuring just what twist it will take. DeMille has, however, developed his story logically and consistently. Director DeMille has injected many effective touches which will not go unnoticed, among several scenes between the mother who believes her husband no longer loves her and her little girl. These bits of mother love are bound to appeal. There is one "touch," however, that is altogether too "movie" like for DeMille to be guilty of, and that is the instance where the husband, upon learning his wife has committed an indiscretion with his best friend, proceeds to hand the friend a revolver. He does it as though someone suddenly remembered it was called for in the scenario. Another bit which is distinctly 10-20-30 is a long title with flames shooting up to indicate passion.

A word of praise must be given to the cast. Lois
Wilson does particularly effective work as Margaret.
In fact all of the principals are extremely well cast and all do very well. Lila Lee does not figure to any great degree until the close, when she steps into the center as the jealous wife. Her work here is really surprising. Production values are excellent. The interiors are very elaborate. The sub-titles are rather lengthy at times, but are very well expressed.

Theme is "Sexy"; You Know Your Audience Best
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you decide to play this, you can promise a production that will please because the settings and dignified treatment lift it out of the rut of the ordinary.
The theme is perhaps a ticklish one to play up in your announcements, particularly if you run a neigh-brhood or small town theater. It is essentially a big town picture and as far as the key cities are concerned, it should go well. Concentrate on the human quality of the cast and the general technical excellence of the picture.

It all depends on the kind of an audience you cater to. You, as a showman, know whether your crowd is fussy and whether it cares for "sexy" stuff. You can promise them a good attraction, if you decide to book it, and one that is worthy of boosting.

Producers seem to have come to realize that picture patrons are about “fed up” on sex theme productions and “The Sin That Was His” is among those to break away from it. Hobart Henley has taken Frank L.
Packard’s story and has made an interesting, entertaining picture. The story in the first place is a good one but Henley deserves credit for transferring it to the screen and maintaining the logic of the story and a well sustained interest.

William Faversham’s splendid performance goes a long way toward the picture’s success and both as Raymond Chapelle, gambler-outlaw and in his impersonation of Father Aubert, his work is creditable.

The supporting company is adequate and Lulu Warrenton as an old hag gives a fine characterization.

The photography is good and some night scenes are very effective. There is nothing elaborate or unusual about the quality of production but it indicates good judgement and is always in keeping with the requirements of the story. One or two twists in the story are based on coincident but it isn’t the sort of coincident that you usually find in pictures. In this case it is quite plausible and will probably not be looked upon as mere convenience.

Raymond Chapelle, an outlaw and gambler vows his hatred of God when after performing the only good deed he had done in twenty years—returning the winings to a youthful gambler—he had been put out of the only place he could call a home. Then his pal dies and requests him to take a bag of gold to his mother in Montreal. The mother happens to be an old hag with a good-for-nothing son who is ready to accept the gold instead of his mother. A fight follows and the mother shoots intending to kill Chapelle.
She kills her son and then swears Chapelle did the shooting.

The gambler escapes and comes upon the prostrate form of a priest he had met in the train on the way to Montreal. Chapelle changes clothes with the clergyman and since the two men look very much alike the deception goes. Chapelle, now assuming Father Aubert’s name, has the real priest—but in the clothes of the man who is supposed to have killed the old hag’s son—taken to the rectory.

Chapelle takes up the duties of Father Aubert and soon experiences a deep contrition for his sin. The real Father Aubert begins to recover and the gambler, who in his early years had actually studied for the priesthood, confesses his sin and is forgiven. In the cast are Lucie Cotton, Pedro de Cordoba, Miss Sherman, Robert Conville and John Burton.

Use Names in Connection With this and Promise Them Entertainment

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can be assured of showing them an entertaining picture if you book “The Sin That Was His.” You have plenty to talk about in the way of names. Tell them the story is by Frank L. Packard, author of “The Miracle Man” and that William Faversham plays the leading role. Use Hobart Henley’s name in connection with the production and recall his successful
“The Gay Old Dog.”

Promises will be in order and catchlines such as the following could be used: “He had long been a gambler and an outlaw but when he impersonated a priest to escape capture, see how the atmosphere of faith brought about his regeneration.” Or, “A criminal will resort to anything to escape detection. See William Faversham in ‘The Sin That Was His’—for the proof of this theory.”

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 6,000 feet

When David Belasco presented Ina Claire in "Polly With a Past," several years ago he brought a new star to the stage. In turn, Metro has done the same thing for the screen. The biggest pity of all, is that Miss Claire has been allowed to keep away from the silver sheet so long. She makes "Polly With a Past" stand out strong enough to be mighty fair screen entertainment, although the material hardly justifies screen presentation. When she is away from the camera the story lags and the entertainment is weakened considerably. When she is there she is a positive delight. She has all of the many charms of Connie Talmadge and some few added bits that promise to make her an important acquisition to the screen, if she is given proper material and the right kind of direction. Despite the stereotyped, old-fashioned situations which Director De Cordova has not improved, and which easily might have been, Ina Claire with her infectious smile and her cleverness will put the picture over. She not only gives a splendid characterization, but the screen version allows her opportunities to display her ability as a mimic and also as a dancer. And she does them both splendidly.

The story tells of how Polly, the daughter of a small town minister, failing in her effort to take lessons in singing in Paris, becomes the maid in the apartment occupied by two bachelors, who are friends of a rich young man, and who with Polly, perfect a scheme, the purpose of which is to have a wealthy young woman become actually in love with their pal, played by Ralph Graves. Polly is presented in the scheme as a French adventuress of international fame and flirts so desperately with Ralph that in the end he realizes he never has loved the other woman and the end comes with everything happy between Polly and Ralph.

Use Belasco's Name With That of the New Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you handle this right the chances are you can do very well with it. But to do this you will have to emphasize very strongly that you are showing the screen's latest star, Ina Claire. In this you have a definite and absolute bet. In connection with this you can talk of her as being with the David Belasco organization and point out that she made her first hit on Broadway in the same play. Also that for the past several years she has been appearing in another Belasco play, "The Gold Diggers," and is now accepted as one of the real stars of the stage.

You have little enough opportunity to use the name of David Belasco in connection with the screen and you should make the most of this because he is one of the master craftsmen in the theatrical world. If you use his name in connection with the star that should be sufficient to get them in. And when they do they are going to see a fairly interesting piece of entertainment. And when they go out they are going to talk about the new star, because she is there.

If you use catchlines something like this might work out: "Polly Had a Past—Oh, what a past—but not the kind you believe. See just what the past was at the blank theater." "Polly's past was supposed to be full of home wreckings. Instead of which her only past was that of an innocent girl in a small town, but see what complications were raised by Polly at the Blank theater."

Fox Film has taken the story, "Two Little Wooden" shoes and had Barbara Le Marr Deely adapt it. Frank Howard Clark has written a scenario and called it "Flame of Youth" regardless of the fact that the original title is the more attractive of the two. They may have had a good foundation to go to work upon but surely the director, cameraman and players deserve a good share of the credit for the pleasing entertainment that is offered in this latest Shirley Mason subject.

It will win favor from the very beginning with its novel introduction of Bebee, the little Belgian foundling, played by Miss Mason. An old Belgian peasant sees an old clothes basket drifting around among the pond lilies in a little stream. Six years elapse and he is telling Bebee the story of how he found her in the basket. Another lapse of time and Bebee is seventeen and the peasant is dead.

Some beautiful exteriors have been accomplished in representing a little Belgian village and the atmosphere throughout is refreshingly attractive. The camera work is very good and both scenes and players have always been photographed to the best advantage. Despite some familiar character types such as the unscrupulous artist from Paris, the sweetheart and the innocent little girl. "Flame of Youth" is a sort of fairy story that's clean all the way through. Shirley Mason as Bebee is a delight in herself.

It is Bebee's seventeenth birthday and on her way to her flower stand in the village Bebee stops to pray at her foster father's grave. Victor Fleming, an artist, sees Bebee and is inspired by the sight. He approaches the little girl who is much impressed by the fine stranger but later when he gives her silk stockings to go with the red shoes she received for her birthday, she is shocked.

Eventually the unscrupulous artist succeeds in making the little girl love him much to the sorrow of Jeannot, a farmer boy who loves Bebee. But Fleming has a sweetheart in Paris who follows him and begs Bebee not to take her lover from her. Fleming then refuses to have anything to do with his Parisian sweetheart but promises her he will go away from the innocent peasant girl.

Bebee pines for her artist lover and later, hearing that he is ill, goes to him in Paris. When Bebee reaches Fleming's studio a wild orgy of celebration is in progress over the unveiling of his masterpiece, the picture of Bebee at the grave. The little girl's heart is broken and she will have nothing to do with Fleming even though he is evidently sincere in his love. She returns to the village with Jeannot who has followed her.

Worth Playing Up Big. Get Them In Because They'll Like It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is one of the best pictures turned out from the Fox studios in some time. It's the kind that will please both young and old. It would be well to make a special feature of it for matinee purposes. The children will love Shirley as Bebee, the little Belgian foundling and her two little wooden shoes. The cast is splendid and Robert McKim's performance as the farmer boy will be sure to please.

You can call it a "sweetheart" picture and promise them they're going to like it. Use some stills of the star as Bebee and any exploitation or advertising expense that you lay out should not go to waste. A little girl in Belgian costume should attract attention. Use the line: "Do you know the story of Bebee, the Belgian orphan? See Shirley Mason's 'Flame of Youth.' You'll like it."

CHARACTER OF STORY: Girl society crook who wants to go straight after she falls in love
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,979 feet

Justine Johnstone’s first picture for Realart isn’t a knockout but manages to make a satisfactory picture of the society crook type. The story is too familiar to be unusual. The same idea has been used many times before with various twists. Despite this handicap “Blackbirds” manages to hold the interest to the end and there is an effective climax which finishes it up in a thoroughly good way.

The early reels are supposedly laid in France but the scenes contain nothing that indicate a French atmosphere. The only thing French about these reels is the title decorations which picture various familiar scenes. The remainder of the action takes place in America and is quite in keeping with the story. There are a few exterior shots of a pretty Long Island estate.

Miss Johnstone has a pleasing personality and she handles the role of the girl society crook very well and acts with ease. She is attractive to look at but has not always been photographed to the best possible advantage. William Boyd is the leading man and Charles Gerrard plays the “master mind” of the Blackbirds who, according to a title are the “aristocrats of crime” in Paris.

In an effort to escape the police Leoni D’Orville, known as the “Countess” and one of the most prominent crooks of the Blackbird gang, meets Nevil Trask. Duval, the mastermind of “The Blackbirds,” commands Leonie to sail for America and “cultivate” the Crockers, a family who have made their money on pork and who are returning to America with a famous painting.

Aboard the ship Leonie again encounters Trask and she soon finds herself in love with him. She also makes the acquaintance of the Crockers and the “Countess” is invited to visit the pork family at their Long Island home. Upon her arrival in New York Leonie goes to Duval to whom she delivers various jewels which she has smuggled in.

Her next job is to substitute a good imitation for the famous painting in the Crocker home. The girl refuses to carry out Duval’s orders but when he threatens to expose her real identity to her lover Trask, she consents. Trask is also a guest at the Crocker home and sees Leonie steal the painting. She does not turn it over to Duval, however, and when she doesn’t “come through” he puts the police on her trail. Trask is a secret service man who has been trailing the crooks. He forgives Leonie and Duval is caught with the goods.

Tell Them it's Justine Johnstone’s First for Realart

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This will undoubtedly satisfy most audiences in its capacity as a society crook picture even though it has not been given an unusual production and never aims to be pretentious. It is well developed and easy to follow. If your folks like this sort of story they will accept “Blackbirds” as a satisfactory offering.

You can announce it as Justine Johnstone’s first production for Realart and if they like this one you can be sure of patronage when you show her next picture. Tell them it’s the story of a band of famous French society crooks called “The Blackbirds.” Use the line: “She was known as ‘The Countess’ a prominent member of ‘The Blackbirds’ but see how she reformed when she fell in love with the secret service man who was trailing her.”
"The Great Lover" is a title that should interest every live-wire exhibitor in the industry. There are few popular plays that have been quite as popular as this sensational comedy drama which played to Broadway crowds for over a year with Leo Ditrichstein in the stellar role.

The leading figure in this skillfully directed production is, as the title indicates, "a great lover." Women could not resist Jean Paurel, the opera singer, whose conquests embraced every feminine type. Women admirers flocked to the stage door to shower him with bouquets and love notes.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... New York society women who divorce their husbands but retain them as "friends"

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 6,181 feet

Lack of real incident in a story that has nowhere near the strength of feature material is what they faced in making "The New York Idea," adapted from the stage play by the same name. In order to stretch the story to feature length the director has injected such a lot of padding and tedious detail that the picture is draggy and uninteresting.

Nearly two reels are consumed in getting started. The newlyweds in their new home are shown quarreling over petty nothings awaiting the cue to start divorce proceedings, the grounds for which are provided by the husband when he refuses to ask a lady to return the field glasses she has borrowed so peevish friend wife can see the horses better.

True, the director had a serious handicap in such material but even at that he has not displayed any real effort to insert anything that will in some way sustain just a slight interest. Miss Brady’s gowns are the feature’s main attraction. She wears many beautiful costumes and does fairly well in a role that has exceedingly limited opportunities. She has been photographed to disadvantage in several close-ups.

"The New York Idea," which aims to be a satire on society divorce has for its principal characters Cynthia Karslake and her husband John Karslake. Cynthia and John have just been married and having nothing else to do they quarrel a good deal over petty things such as John leaving some of his belongings on Cynthia’s dressing table, etc. Eventually Cynthia notices that Mrs. Phillimore, recently divorced, is forcing her attentions upon John, whereupon Cynthia cooks up grounds for a divorce from her husband.

Mr. Phillimore is the judge who arranges Cynthia’s divorce very quietly and offers himself as satisfactory “second choice.” Angered by reports connecting the names of Mrs. Phillimore and John, Cynthia accepts the Judge’s proposal for spite rather than love. Despite the fact that Mrs. Phillimore and John, Cynthia and Mr. Phillimore are constantly thrown together in the social whirl, Cynthia goes on with her plans to marry the Judge.

Everything is set for the wedding, but Cynthia delays the ceremony, having gone for a ride with an Englishman who wishes to marry either Cynthia or Mrs. Phillimore. He isn’t particular which one it is. When the bride-to-be does arrive she shows signs of weakening, especially when she is led to believe that John and the Judge’s wife are going to be married. At the last minute she refuses to go through the ceremony and runs off to prevent John from marrying Mrs. Phillimore because she still loves him. In the cast are Lowell Sherman, Hedda Hopper, George Howell, Lionel Page and others.

Use the Star’s Name and Play Up the Society Divorce Idea

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a very weak offering especially as far as the story is concerned. While the play with Minnie Maddern Fiske may have made a satisfactory stage play, it falls way short of filling the needs of the screen. It would be well to mention its origin, however. Use the star’s name extensively and tell them she wears many attractive costumes in this picture.

Tell them it’s a satire of society divorce. This may interest some and catchlines could read: “She divorced in haste and remarried her husband at leisure. That’s ‘The New York Idea.’” “No need to be ill friends with your husband just because you divorce him. You might want to re- marry him. See how it happened in ‘The New York Idea,’ Alice Brady’s latest for Realart.”
Perhaps if it hadn't been for that lovely young girl Jimmy Doyle would have gone back to his old unlawful life. Perhaps if he hadn't loved her so the persecution of the detectives would have worn him down, and he would have given to them the excuse they were looking for,—to put him behind the bars again.

Perhaps if, like the other man, he had loved her for her beauty and not for her innocence, he would have dragged her down with him into the underworld.

But he fought for her, and he fought to go straight, and he fought a winning fight.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Dealers in bogus oil stock turn the tables on themselves
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,658 feet

If they hadn't felt obliged to go ahead and tack on typical "movie" finale to this just because they were making a picture, "Beautifully Trimmed" would have been much more satisfactory. The picture has been produced along very ordinary lines and doesn't contain the splendor that Universal usually accords to a picture where they have even a slight chance to dress it up.

However, this doesn't matter much because the story wasn't worth spending a lot of money on and as a straight program offering it will fit in quite all right. The direction could be better, especially with regard to handling the players, most of whom overact noticeably. Irving Cummings as Bonzi, a clever copier of Rembrandt and other masters, is altogether too pompous in his performance.

Despite its obviousness the story would have been a whole lot better if after having the bogus oil dealers trapped before they succeeded in swindling anyone, they had let it go at that. But instead they have the oil well turn out to be a real prosperous affair with the crooks beaten at their own game.

Norige Lawton lures the victims while her friends Count Bonzi and Sims do the fleecing. Bonzi imitates the great masters and Norige weepingly parts with some "famous" painting because she needs the money. This is Bonzi's side of the game but Sims is a dealer in stocks. He evidently owns all the stock there is in Mercer Oil and all he needs is a victim.

Chris Gibbons, millionaire war hero, is selected for the oil deal. Norige had known him before the war. She arranges the deal whereby Chris buys some Mercer stock although he has found out that it is no good. He has plans of his own. Norige actually begins to fall in love with Chris and begs Bonzi not to carry through the deal.

He promises not to and ashamed of her part in the deal Norige tries to make Chris hate her but he refuses. The night after Bonzi's wild Bohemian party where Norige tried to turn Chris against herself, the girl learns that Bonzi is going through with the transaction. She goes to Chris to warn him but he tells her he has planned to nab the crooks when they attempt to cash the check. It happens, however, that the Mercer Oil wells start producing and while the crooks receive the value of the stock they sold, Chris obtains a controlling interest worth over a million.

Go At it from Either Star or Story Angle Whichever You Think Better

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In this you have a rather good title to work with. Play it up with catchlines such as "He had helped trim the Kaiser but see how he came near being 'Beautifully Trimmed' by a couple of crooks who sold him 'phony' stock." Use the star's name and mention "In Folly's Trail" and "The Gilded Dream" for the benefit of those who may have seen her in those pictures and will want to see her again. Irving Cummings' name might attract some.

You are safe in counting "Beautifully Trimmed" in on your schedule where you use straight program stuff in between special runs. As such this will give adequate satisfaction. Play up the society crook angle of the story if you think that will appeal. In some theaters it will go bigger than others.

If Bill Hart can write stories like this it's to be hoped that—he'll keep up the good work for "The Testing Block" is the best thing he has had in many a day.
It's a typical Hart picture of the old days, fightin', shooting and more fightin'. The picture is really made up of two parts—Bill as an outlaw and Bill as a husband and father. In the first half he does some great acting when he offers to fight his whole band of outlaws and drinks enough liquor to "even" things up—his band is already "liquored."

Then things take a sort of "movie" twist in long about the third of fourth reel and a frame-up on the part of the villain parts the former outlaw and his wife. This is soon covered up, however, by some more fine acting; a desperate fight and the final happy ending is what they will want. There is a touch of pathos running through the last reel which is bound to "get" them. Bill's little boy is dying and he is forced to sell his pet horse to provide a doctor. Another big moment is when he breaks the jail to prevent the villain from dishonoring his wife.

The photography, especially some night scenes, is very good and the lightings effective. The love story is genuine and the scenes between the father, wife and son are real human bits. All told this trio, Hart, Hilly-er and August have given the screen another worth while piece of entertainment.

Sierra Bill, chief of an-outlaw band, fights for the right to take Nellie Gray, a violinist with a traveling theatrical troupe. Bill is the last man on his feet which gives him the right to go. A lapse of time shows Bill and Nellie happily married and the former outlaw the contented father of a little son. It happens that Ringe, one of Bill's band who fought for Nellie, comes into town. He has a Mexican girl with him whom he instructs to tell Bill's fortune and fortell that his wife is about to leave him and return to her troupe.

Ringe visits the cabin and tells Nellie her husband is not true to her and plans a meeting between Bill and the Mexican girl to prove it. Nellie goes away.
Bill's little son is taken ill and the outlaw sells his horse to get a doctor. Later he is put in jail for shooting at the horse's new owner because the animal is mistrated. Later he breaks jail to chase Ringe who has told him he is going to Nellie. Ringe is killed in the chase and when the girl confesses part of the affair, Nellie and Bill are reunited and the little boy recovers.

Be Sure You Don't Miss this One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you want a real, live, honest-to-goodness human picture without that "sexy" business making its appearance every few minutes, then by all means book
"The Testing Block" and consider it a good day's work. Bill Hart's latest attempt at story writing is a sure winner and if nine out of ten don't like it they're all wrong. There are so many really human bits in it and such a wealth of virile action that you can't go wrong.

It's worth everything the Paramount press sheet says about it. The old song "Darling Nellie Gray" plays a prominent and a pathetic part in it and should be used throughout the showing. Extracts from some of the well written titles or the following should attract: "He fought for the right to win the girl he mar-rried and then fought to keep her." Or, "What is 'The Testing Block'?" See Bill Hart in his latest picture at the blank theater for the answer."

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Curiosity of American girl leads her into a harem where she is kept a prisoner

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,000 feet

This is the type picture that will be a big attraction for the class of picture patrons termed "fans." And not to them alone, for the atmosphere of the Orient seems to have a big appeal for the majority of audiences for variety if nothing else. The producer and director have seen to it that a very realistic Oriental atmosphere has been secured for "The Palace of Darkened Windows." Several very elaborate sets have been devised and the customs and raiment of the people of India show careful detail.

The story doesn't contain an over-abundance of incident, the entire situation being based on the desire of an American girl to peep into a rajah's harem and her subsequent imprisonment followed by her efforts to escape and the efforts of others to rescue her. The director has spent considerable time getting into his story but perhaps this rather slow beginning will be forgotten in the fairly good action that follows. A thoroughly satisfactory climax is obtained in the firing of the harem, the rescue of the girl and the evident consumption of the rajah in the burning building.

Claire Anderson is pleasing and very pretty in some close-ups. The camera work is generally very good except for occasional shots where the distance has not been well judged. The shots are often too long. This is all right for the purpose of showing the entire set but when the players start acting its time to get a bit nearer the scene. The lightings, especially with regard to players, are good. Adele Farrington supplies a needed bit of humor in her characterization of the girl's aunt who is much thrilled by the rajah's attentions. Arthur Carewe as the rajah, Jay Belasco as an admirer of the girl and Gerald Pring as an English Captain all give good performances.

Arlee, an American girl, and her aunt, are visiting in India. Arlee becomes fascinated with a rajah, much to the disgust of her English friend Captain Falconer, and Billy Hill, an American also, who is not acquainted with Arlee but admires her. Arlee accepts the rajah's oral invitation to visit the harem. The aunt receives the written invitation and much excited, hastens to the harem.

But the rajah has planned to keep Arlee and tells her the palace is quarantined. The aunt arrives and is told the same thing. When Arlee and her aunt fail to return to the hotel, Billy and the Captain set out to rescue them. The remaining action consists of the efforts of Billy and the Captain to rescue the women and the latter's effort to escape. Eventually the palace is set afire by an overturned candle, Arlee escapes and the villainous rajah is evidently killed.

Some Clever Exploitation Stunts Should Draw
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Base your exploitation and advertising of "The Palace of Darkened Windows" on the Oriental atmosphere idea. Tell them it's a story of the harem. This will appeal to enough of your clientele to satisfy the box office. An attractive lobby display with a man dressed as a rajah would get a good deal of attention.

Still could be used to advantage and any exploitation stunts with regard to the Oriental angle will attract. Use the lines: "Have you ever been in a harem? There's one in 'The Palace of Darkened Windows.'" Or, "She wanted to visit a harem. She did. But see how she came near not getting out and how a woman's curiosity nearly caused capture by a rajah." If Claire Anderson is familiar to your folks you can use her name.

CHARACTER OF STORY........English nobleman who ruins daughter's life by sending her gamekeeper husband out of her life

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..........About 6,000 feet

There seems to be a rush on English melodrama in the picture business of late. Metro has another, by Cecil Raleigh for release under the title of "Hearts are Trumps." As a whole the offering is quite satisfactory despite the way it slows up in several instances. There is plenty of material contained in it and perhaps it was difficult to get it all together without a few breaks. The interest sags badly in more than one place.

From a technical standpoint the production has been given adequate attention. The climax which takes place in the Alps and shows an avalanche is probably nearly all miniature work but so carefully done and well photographed that the most alert will believe it to be the real thing. It is quite an example of what can be done along this line.

The direction is generally very good and all the players fulfill requirements in a capable manner. Winter Hall dies early, but the action is carried on by Francelia Billington, who incidentally neglected to grow older with the passage of twenty years, Frank Brownlee as her gamekeeper husband, Alice Terry is the daughter, Joseph Kilgour is the villain. Brinsley Shaw handles a character bit very well. Some comedy between Bull Montana and Kate Price doesn't belong in the picture and there is one instant where a player is thinking back and instead of using the fade-out the flash-back appears as the next scene. This should be remedied.

Lord Altcar played heavily and lost until he went so far as to accept Lord Purford's offer to play for the hand of Altcar's daughter, Lady Winifred. Burford won but when Lord Altcar told his daughter that she was to marry Burford she confessed that she was already secretly married to Michael Waine a gamekeeper on her father's estate. Then Altcar had Wain beaten and driven off the place.

Twenty years had passed, Altcar was dead and Lady Winifred, having inherited her father's taste for cards was at the end of her resources. At this same time her "ward"—really her daughter by Wain—returned from a convent in Switzerland and Wain, now very wealthy, returns to avenge himself against the woman who made no effort to save him from her father's wrath. Somehow or other Wain owns the Altcar home and puts Lady Winifred and her daughter out.

There is a love affair between the daughter and an artist and villain Burford again enters the story in an attempt to get the daughter for himself. The action switches to the Alps where the girl has fled and is trapped by Burford. Eventually the villain dies and everything ends happily.

Spectacular Climax Will Please. Play Up the Story

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Those who had the making of "Hearts are Trumps" had a good deal of plot to work with and under the circumstances have managed to wade through it in a satisfactory and comprehensive fashion. Bill it as a melodrama containing plenty of action and a variety of scenery. Say that the action is laid in England and Switzerland. A rather successful attempt has been made to inject the proper Swiss atmosphere.

Francelia Billington is probably the best known in the cast and you might also mention Winter Hall although he has a small part. You could say that Cecil Raleigh is the author and use the lines: "You have read of the recent avalanche on Mount Blanc. See 'Hearts is Trumps' and see for yourself what an avalanche is and the destruction it causes."

CHARACTER OF STORY .... Faith of little orphan girl brings about her benefactor's recovery and reclaims a non-believer

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 4,340 feet

"Girl of My Heart" has been adapted for Shirley Mason from Frances Marion Mitchell's story, "Joan of Rainbow Springs." The story is slight in incident but makes a thoroughly satisfactory vehicle for the star, whose performance together with the attractive settings secured make the picture good to look at and help cover up some of the story's shortcomings.

There are one or two moments when the story threatens to "die" but picks up again with another idea and goes on. These loosely connected sequences often injure a fairly good story. There is one bit of detail that is bad. The star is shown lassoing two men who are standing near a tree. The rope is shown catching the two men, but when they show the close-up the rope is all the way round the tree. She'd have to be a female Will Rogers to lasso a whole big tree.

It had been the custom of the Lanes to leave the door open for a stranger on Christmas eve. Accordingly, a young man, the last of the Lanes, leaves the door open and Joan seeks shelter from the storm. She has run away from the woman who took her from an orphanage. She comes in unseen and in time to save Lane from killing himself because he is a victim of the white plague.

Lane adopts Joan and with his aunt they go west. There is an Indian settlement where they locate and before long it is learned that someone is selling the Indians whiskey. Joan finds out that it is a man named Phillips. His secret discovered, Phillips bribes the Indian, Chawa, a half-breed, to kill Lane and kidnap Joan. But Lane is only severely injured. But after his recovery the Indian kidnaps Joan and takes her to the desert.

Lane and the hermit doctor hurry to the rescue, but a sandstorm comes up and delays them. The little hut to which Joan has been taken is shattered by the wind, the Indian is killed, but Joan comes out safely from the wreckage. Some time later Lane realizes that he is in love with Joan and she with him, but hesitates on account of his disease. A test, however, shows him entirely cured and the clinch follows.

Shirley Mason in "GIRL OF MY HEART"
Fox

This is likely to give general satisfaction because it is good to look at with its attractive settings and fine western atmosphere. Also Shirley Mason is seen in a part that she knows how to handle, and her personality does a lot to get it over and make it interesting. Play up the locale of the story and tell them it's a tale of health and ambition regained in the great West.

For those who may be familiar with the story, "Joan of Rainbow Springs," mention the author's name and use the lines: "Have you ever left your door open on Christmas eve to welcome a stranger? See how Joan found a home with the door open." Or, "See how Joan, the little orphan girl, saved her benefactor by her wonderful faith. Shirley Mason in a recent Fox picture 'Girl of My Heart,' is at the Blank Theater."

Some Short Reels

"The Cameraman"—Reelcraft

Type of production........................................1 reel comedy

Billy Franey is the featured comedian in this reel, which has several new gags, and a funny idea to work on, and which gets across better than the average of his pictures. Franey is the staff camera man of a daily paper, and seems unable to ever get a picture right the first time. This will accept. He's always just a little bit too late, or something goes wrong, all of which makes acceptable material, and provides steady amusement, even though there is a scarcity of real laughs. Most of the latter are obtained by several pieces of trick photography, and the introduction of a character who is seen in every shot, making him apparently in all places at once. It's a fast reel, with the usual amount of slapstick. Should make a little better than average filler. Better suited to small houses.

"Why Change Your Husband"—Goldwyn

Type of production........................................1 reel animated cartoon

Judge Rummy makes a sad mistake in this one. His wife requests a new hat, which Rummy refuses. Silk Hat Harry consoles the lady and offers to help her get the hat. He tells Rummy he is going to introduce him to a peach, and the peach is Rummy's wife, much disguised. Rummy falls hard, and buys her a hat, follows her home, and then finds out his grave mistake. There are just about the usual number of laughs in the reel, which is amusing and snappy. A satisfactory filler.

"Wards Of A Nation"—Ford—Goldwyn

Type of production........................................1 reel magazine

This is a Ford Educational offering showing scenes in the lives of one of the tribes of Indians on a government reservation. No information is given as to what tribe or where the picture was taken. It shows some of the Indians being confirmed by an Episcopal bishop, and also shows the whole tribe at worship. Several shots are taken around a street of tents, showing the Indian women at work, cooking over a camp fire, washing clothes, etc. Several other shots of the Indians are presented, none worthy of mention.

"Summer Days"—Reelcraft

Type of production........................................2 reel comedy

There is nothing uproarious about this one, but there is a lot of humor running all through it, some that will appeal especially to high class patronage. It is a "drammer" of the city feller and the country girl, but the three leads are kids of ten years or so. They are better than the average people performers, and are responsible for nearly all the comedy in the offering. A little blond haired girl gives a very enjoyable performance as the country girl, and the tiny city feller with his blase airs, and grown up conversation, as set forth in the titles, furnishes genuine humor. The featured youngster is Matty Roubert. There are four bathing girls who add something to the production. There is no slap stick, and it is not particularly fast, but should prove good entertainment through the work of the kids. There is a big laugh toward the end when a diminutive darky poses in the nude as "September Morn."

"Greek Meets Greek"—Pathe

Type of production........................................1 reel comedy

Eddie Boland and the Vanity Fair Girls in another "Vanity Fair" offering that is shy on laughs, but mildly amusing all the way through. The girls have ample opportunity to display their charms, and Eddie Boland doesn't have much in the way of comedy. It is about Pathe's "educational" type of comedy (Eddie Boland), who makes life miserable for his sister and her up to date friends. The girls, to cure him of his Grecian mania, decide to teach him a lesson, so when Prof. writes to Socrates to visit them, they engage a prominent shammy teacher to impersonate Socrates. They all don the apparel of the ancient Greeks and insist on the professor living as the Greeks did. Some of the inconveniences prove unbearable and professor finally says "never again." As a whole not up to the standard of this series.

"Then Company Came"—"Art In Everything"—Chester—Educational

Type of production........................................1 reel scenic and nature study

The first half of this "acrench" is devoted to a study of the person, and habits of the common house fly. The insect is photographed under a variety of conditions, and is shown from the time the egg hatches until the fly is fully grown. There is some interest in these enlarged views, which clearly show the whole make up of the brute, the peculiar construction of the legs, eyes and wings. This subject breaks off in the middle of the reel, and the balance is a scenic composed of a series of shots in and around the city of Santiago, the capital of Chile. Views of the opera, art museum, and other public buildings are offered, and some street scenes. Somewhat interesting from the fact that so little is heard of this flourishing city. Several long shots of the Andes Mountains conclude. Moderately satisfactory filler.

"The Business Of Camping"—Bruce—Educational

Type of production........................................1 reel scenic

This is offered as a scenic, and there are some good mountain shots, and one or two artistically tinted bits, but the main interest is occasioned by a detailed comparison of camping methods and camping life, past and present. The old time camper is shown, with his small pack on his back, his gun and shot box, and a series of shots that show the inconveniences of his life. The greater portion of the reel is devoted to the modern camper with his pack train, and it will doubtless prove interesting to the average audience to see the compact and efficient outfit of the "professional" camping use. The film is taken at the chosen camping ground and the entire operation of pitching camp and cooking the meal makes an interesting subject. There is no outstanding feature, but the reel as a whole, should make a satisfactory filler.

"The Man Hater"—C. B. C. Film Corp.—State Rights

Type of production........................................2 reel Western

Grace Conard wrote, directed, and is starred in this short feature. It is an average production of the type, aside from the fact that Miss Conard wrote too many impossible accomplishments into her part. When the young lady not only stands two separate bands of husky men on their heads, but captures a whole band of outlaws and ropes and ties them, single handed, she certainly is going some. However, there is a good bit of mild comedy running through the piece, and the action moves along at a good clip. The young lady in the case has become acquainted with the whole man tribe, because of a blunder of her sheriff sweetheart. She builds a cabin in the woods, determined to become a hermit. The sheriff plans to bring her out of her retirement, as a good show, and this is done, but the sheriff's friends to impersonate a desperate outlaw and his band, and steal the girl. She has just baffled them when the real band appears and carries her off. She outwits the gang, captures them, gets the reward, and marries the sheriff. There is probably enough in this to put it over in small houses, but there is nothing noteworthy about it.
“Fickle Fancy”—Paramount—Mack Sennett
Type of production .......... 2 reel comedy

Ford Sterling is featured in this one of Sennett’s, and the piece recalls good of his old shorts. Sedgwick, it is good stuff almost all the way through, and while the last half is the best, it all holds up well. There are a lot of laughs in the last portion of the film, where the scene is laid in a cafeteria. Sterling gouts heavy of funny business out of the situations, and most of it is new. Toward the end a regular old fashioned pie throwing and dish smashing scene takes place, but they couldn’t very well help using that kind of ammunition in a cafeteria, and it is all good stuff. A laugh or two. It contributes somewhat. The production is up to the Sennett standard, and will fulfill your patrons’ expectations.

“Rookeries and Squawkeries”—Chester—Educational
Type of production .......... 1 reel scenic and bird study

There is too much sameness in most of the footage of this reel, and as a result it doesn’t hold up very well. The picture was made in a stretch of sandy, brush country somewhere on the Atlantic coast, and resolves itself into a study of the birds that inhabit the region. Only one species of bird is taken up at any length, however, and the repeated views of the Night Heron are not enough to more than the average. Some shots of baby herons with a professor making a weights and measurers study of them, forms a slightly more interesting bit of material. The Lyre bird, or American Egret is shown in its nest with the young birds, and there is a clever shot of the old bird feeding the young ones. The cameraman’s work is commendable throughout the whole film, but it is lacking in interest, and scarcely a satisfactory offering. Titles by William Henry Wright.

“IF”—Prizma
Type of Production .......... 1 reel magazine

“IF” is a beautiful Prizma, showing the various fruits first in black and white and then in natural colors, via the Prizma process. The reel is effectively arranged with a number of well-written sub-titles. It is a bit different from the usual Prizma in that it does not show any out-door stuff but various kinds of fruits on a revolving platform. The audience at the Criterion, where this was seen frequently expressed its appreciation of the reel.

“The Diamond Queen”—Universal
Type of production .......... Serial

This latest Universal serial is an adaptation of the novel, “The Diamond Mystery,” by Jacques Futrelle. The first episode starts off with a bang, it’s fast, and there are an abundance of thrills throughout the first two episodes reviewed, which give promise of more to come. While there are perhaps too many seemingly impossible situations, the story is a good one and the picture has been well made. Suspense is maintained admirably. The story starts with the bankruptcy of a philantropic diamond merchant, who has been forced to the wall by the diamond trust. His daughter arrives home just as her despairing father commits suicide. She and her grandfather, who has been working for years on a mysterious invention, swear revenge upon the men who ruined her father. The grandfather gives her some valuable documents which incriminate the heads of the trust, and after several narrow escapes from the trust’s hirelings, she places the papers in the hands of her father’s best friend. The second episode finds her in the diamond country of South Africa, forwarding her mysterious revenge, and closely followed by a young man who loves her. She is captured by a savage tribe and is to be made their queen.

No one is starred in the production, but the cast is all satisfactory. It includes, Fileen Sedgwick, George Chesbro, Burton Wilcox, Frank M. Clark, and Alfred Fisher. If your patrons like red hot thrillers, this one will do as there will fill the bill excellently. It is a good one of the type. Edward Kull directed.

“Cowboy Jazz”—S. & E. Enter—State Rights
Type of production .......... 2 reel sport pictorial

This film is a novelty in two reels, bringing forward a branch of sport you can call off—that has hitherto been practically neglected by the cameramen. Both reels are devoted to a succession of rapid fire stunts performed by boys and girls, in competition similar to that of the annual exhibitions. “Round-Ups” at several points in the West. In fact this film was made at a championship round-up, held under the auspices of the Elks Lodge. The champions of each branch of the sport are introduced and are shown in action. There are some good shots of trick horse riding, lariat shooting, and broncho busting, the latter showing some real rough-riding. The steers riding contest in which the contestants ride wild steers is interesting, and a real thrill is provided by a dangerous stunt. The photography in some of the latter shots is necessarily not of the clearest, because of the difficulty in close range shooting, but in spite of this fact there are several very good close-ups. Some good close-ups have also been secured of steers roping. This stuff is all fast, and in view of the fact that there is a wide range of the country that has never seen these stunts, this picture should prove attractive, and a very satisfactory two-reeler for any class theater.

“Park Your Car”—Pathé
Type of production .......... 1 reel comedy

Hal Roach offers Harry Pollard, (he has left off the “Stub” with his mustache), in another comedy built around a flivver. There have been so many of these that the business is pretty much over worked. Nevertheless there are some new hits and a fair amount of amusement results. Two real laughs are all that can be chalked up for the reel, but these are good ones. Pollard’s little dusky partner hasn’t much to do, but he has brought the rest of his family with him and they provide one amusing shot in an exceptionally ratty flivver. As a whole, the reel lacks punch, and just about slides by as a mediocre filler.

Harry and his fat neighbor decide to purchase a second hand car, much to the delight of their wives. On the first joy ride everything falls off the car except the number. Harry drives dastrously, through walls and buildings, carrying one man in a bath tub into the street. He finally wrecks the flivver completely, and he and wifey swear “never again.”

“A Hard Luck Santa Claus”—Fox
Type of production .......... 1 reel animated cartoon

Mutt and Jeff become imbued with the Christmas spirit in this one, when a bearded stranger offers them $500 to steal the giver. The business from a certain angle is good, but to put it over is to disguise as Santa and go down the chimney. After considerable stuffing with pillows, he gets the right make-up, and then after some trouble in getting on the roof, which Jeff makes. Mutt gets stuck in the chimney, and the house owner builds a fire. Mutt finally falls through and takes a beating—then the bearded stranger tells them it was the wrong house. Not as good stuff as usual in this reel.

“Pals and Petticoats”—Fox—Sunshine
Type of production .......... 2 reel comedy

Several mustached comedians, including Harry McCoy, are employed in putting across this number, which is good in spots and bad in others. The first reel starts off fast and there is plenty of good comedy business almost up to the finish, when it slows down. The business with sticky tar in the first part is good for a number of laughs. The last half of the reel is a trifle dead, as is the first half of the second. Then there are some more good bits with a monkey and a cute little kid, Slapsick business in a cabinet provides good laugh in a view of some pretty girls. A thrill is provided toward the end by some clever trick photography, in which the baby is seen teetering precariously above the street until the end. The business ends up a brick throwing and a chase which is only fair stuff. The stunts are well placed to hold it up, and except for the middle portion, it will make a good comedy offering.

M. P. T. O. Plans a String of Them Across Country—Aid to Exhibitors

The M. P. T. O. of America has plans under way for the establishment of a series of service stations in the key cities of the country to which exhibitors in the various territories can go for advice and assistance without loss of time in communicating with headquarters in New York.

The Exhibitor’s Bulletin explains the move as follows:

“Preparations are under way to establish service stations in the various key cities of the country. These stations will be maintained by the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America for the sole benefit of the exhibitors in the respective territories. They will be bureaus of information, advice and assistance. The exhibitor can confidently take his troubles to these bureaus and will find his interests fully protected.”

Unique Film Here

Futuristic Picture Made in Germany

Owned by Export and Import

and David P. Howells

A print of a picture, unique in film, is now in New York. It is “Das Kabinet des Dr. Caligari,” produced in Germany and was commented rather extensively in the two last issues of “The Freeman.” The picture is futuristic and as such is said to be radically different from anything ever made. Articles of furniture are placed bottom-side up and doors open side-ways instead of in and out, as usual. The picture is of feature length and is controlled jointly for the United States by the Export and Import Film Co. and David P. Howells, Inc.

No arrangements have been made for its distribution.

EX-ARMY DOCTOR
FOUND DEAD ON HOSPITAL GROUNDS

Hugh Sainsbury is Victim of Shot by Unknown Assailant—Inmate of Hospital Missing

Another murder case was added yesterday to the present epidemic of crimes when the body of Dr. Hugh Sainsbury, prominent neurologist connected with the Glenwood Sanitarium, and formerly of the Medical branch of the U. S. Army, was found dead on the hospital grounds with a bullet in his heart. Near the body was a .32-caliber revolver with one chamber empty and the muzzle still warm.

The police state that the position of the dead man and the absence of powder marks on his clothing make it clear that it was not a suicide.

Dr. Sainsbury had no known enemies, and Police Lieutenant Clandin, in charge of the investigation, is without clues. A peculiar circumstance centers around Miss Adele Warren, a patient, who disappeared simultaneously with the murder. Mark Thomas, superintendent of the sanitarium, asserted that Miss Warren is a complete convalescent who, rather than face the excitement which followed the discovery of the murder, had most likely gone to her home.

The police are particularly anxious, in view of the widespread publicity which has recently been given to the crime-wave, to solve this extraordinary murder mystery without delay.

Dr. Sainsbury was well known in his profession. He was thirty-five years old. Among Sainsbury's friends, it is stated, were many women prominent in society.

The new company will provide for an issue of 5,000,000 in 8% preferred stock in exchange for all of the outstanding issues. A second issue of $15,000,000 in common stock will be floated and the shares will have a par value of $10.

The Loew theater holdings in Canada which are covered by the company are as follows:

Loew's, London (Ont); Loew's, Montreal, and the Yonge St. and Winter Garden in Toronto. Theaters under construction are as follows: State, Montreal; Loew's, Ottawa; State, Toronto, and Loew's in Windsor.

Meeting Today

The joint committee of the M. P. T. O. and the N. A. M. P. I. will meet at 11 o'clock this morning in the ball room of the Claridge to discuss the legal and other problems. William A. Brady is expected to open the meeting. A number of exhibitors and officials of the M. P. T. O. arrived in town on Sunday and yesterday to attend the meeting.

In view of recent reports circulated in Wall Street circles that current with his resignation as treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky of New York and New Jersey, effective Jan. 1, that his holdings would be thrown on the market, and desires of exercising any control, it was felt this was a strong statement as to his future status as a member of the board of directors, Arthur S. Friend issued the following statement yesterday:

Hiram Abrams has appointed Abraham C. Berman sales manager of the New York exchange, succeeding Jack Von Tizler.

New German Ban

Local importers didn't seem to know very much about the cabled reports received from Berlin to the effect that the Ministry of Finance and Economics had ordered the police to prevent further showings of American pictures. The complaint lodged was that the American films were smuggled across the frontier usually at Cologne and that they were being sold so cheaply that German films couldn't compete with them.

The practice seems to be most prevalent in the Rhineland province.

Export and Import Film Co. whose German connections are generally represented as being close ones didn't hear about the latest order from Berlin and the same condition seemed to exist with the majority of local film men.

Crippled Woman Declare Blanche Warner Shot Ex-Army Doctor

District Attorney Puzzle

Stirring developments in the Dec. 14, 1920 murder case followed yesterday when it became known that Blanche Warner, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Sainsbury, is accused by Mrs. Bert Lydiard, an eye-witness of the crime, of having fired the shot which killed the young neurologist, whose body was found, forty-eight hours ago, on the outer grounds of the Glenwood Sanitarium, with which he was associated.

Police Lieutenant Floyd refused to make public the full story of Mr. Lydiard, a patient at the sanitarium, but he declared that she had voluntarily stated that she had seen Adele Warren, a sister of Blanche, the latter, and Dr. Sainsbury together just a few moments before the shooting. Adele had left the group, said the witness, just a moment before the shot was fired.

The witness is exceedingly de- and also crippled, and it was from her rocking chair, in which she was seated, that she says she saw the murder, which, Lieutenant Floyd said, followed a violent argument between Blanche and Dr. Sainsbury. Neither of the Warren girls have been located and a general alarm has been sent out for their apprehension. —Ad about two hours and then adjourned at 2:30 o'clock. At that hour the meeting re-assembled to continue discussions and closed at 6 o'clock.

At the close of the meeting the press committee which was appointed earlier in the day told newspaper men that the Hoover speech was the high light of the meeting, that preliminary discussions were held, tending toward a better understanding between the producer and the exhibitor and that a meeting of the joint committees would be held at 2:30 this afternoon at the Claridge.

It was agreed shortly after the morning session by those present that the doings at the meeting be held in confidence and that the only information to be made public would be that issued by the press committee.

It was learned, however, that following Mr. Hoover's address in the evening was one by Felix M. Wurtz, the banker who is also interested in the Central European relief question. Gabriel L. Hess of Golds-berg then spoke and said that in his opinion the censorship question was the most important one at the present time. Hess is chairman of the N.A.M.P.I. censorship committee. Tom Moore of Washington followed Hess. Moore stated that the reform question move as affecting the District of Columbia should be dealt with in some way.

It was also learned yesterday that there was some sort of a tilt after Moore finished by the remarks made by State Senator James L. Walker who emphasized the need for a closer working arrangement between exhibitors and producers. Walker said in his address that the exhibitors were the only ones who made any attempt to offset the wave of comment started as a result of the Carnegie St. panic. Whereupon it is understood that William A. Brady asked to know, if at any time, and when, the National Association had failed to come to the aid of the exhibitors. This was the occasion of several remarks flying back and forth but no serious rift in the meeting occurred.

At the committee meeting today it is expected that actual work on exhibitor projects will begin. Nothing was done yesterday regarding the blue law situation.

It is understood that the blue law question will be discussed on Friday at a luncheon at Delmonico's at which Adolph Zukor will be host. Zukor, it is understood, sent out wires to a number of prominent distributors yesterday asking their presence at the luncheon.

Practically every company was represented at the meeting. Among those glimpsed in the room were: Adolph Zukor, Oscar A. Price, William Wright, Charles C. Pettijohn, Lewis Innes, Tom Moore, Jack Connelly, William A. Brady, Frederick H. Elliott, Harry Berman, C. L. Yeaslee, Paul N. Lazarus, Thomas G. Wulpy, John C. Films and J. Robert Himmel.

because of the difference in exchange.

As a result of the meeting, as noted in the offices of the Fleischmann Construction Co. on Monday, Andre Himmel issued the following statement:

"The Board of Directors of the Franco-American Cinematographic Corp., has been engaged in receiving a report from Andre Himmel and in examining options, contracts and other documents which Mr. Himmel has presented to the Franco-American Cinematographic Corp., embodying negotiations which he has conducted in France. As soon as the examination has been completed, the board will make a specific announcement in regard to the foregoing."

He also issued a statement denying the statements made by French film men to the Paris correspondent of the New York Times which that newspaper published in special cables on Sunday and Monday.

Convention Put Off

"U" Has Wales Film

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

St. Louis—Due to the inability of the Hotel Statler to give accommodations on Jan. 11th and 12th, owing to the convention of merchants being held there at that time, it has been decided to postpone the second semi-annual convention of the M. P. T. O. to Jan. 20th and 21st.

The most important matter that will be brought up at this time will be state censorship as well as the Sunday closing agitation. The St. Louis Federation of Churches is making a concerted effort in favor of legalized state censorship and circulating petitions broadcast asking for signatures in favor of same. They have had an organized force that work on this for some time. The M. P. T. O. are endeavoring to counteract it by having petitions signed by those against censorship to offset any effect that this might have.

Universal has an option on the sequence of pictures showing the Prince of Wales on his recent tour of the world, according to George E. Kann, export manager for Universal.

The pictures were filmed by Capt. William Barker and include incidents taken from all the important places visited by the Prince in his 50,000 mile jaunt. They were shown last month at a private presentation in the Alhambra, London.

The first print will be brought to this country by Arthur Glavering, a prominent figure in the Film Booking Offices, Ltd. Glavering is due in America Dec. 24.

Universal has not announced how the pictures will be released.

New Unit Coming

Known as San Gabriel Producing Co.—Will Cater to Latin Tastes—Ernest Shipman Interested

A new producing unit is in process of formation. It will be known as the San Gabriel Producing Co. and Ernest Shipman will be associated with it in a managerial and advisory capacity.

The company plans to make special pictures. It will cater to the Latin tastes and therefore expects to find a ready market for its product in the Spanish-speaking countries and in the countries of Southern Europe. It is understood that one individual interested in the company is now on his way to New York from the coast and another on the high seas en route from Italy.

Shipman states, incidentally, that he has under his wing 22 completed pictures, all ready for distribution.

He will not state just what they are, among them, however, is "Lavender and Old Lace," the Myrtle Reed story produced by the Renco Film Co.

Shipman will handle three Renco pictures a year.

H. Y. Reynolds, president of the Renco Film Co., Inc., the producers of "Lavender and Old Lace," is in New York. He will establish permanent headquarters here.

In the Courts

Supreme Court Justice Giegerich has denied an application by the Robertson-Cole Co. to restrain the Minute Trading Corp., E. S. Mannheimer and Joseph Weinstock from offering for sale through out the world outside of the United States, Canada and the Hawaiian Islands the films, "For Love of Money," "The Profiteer's Daughter," and The Discarded Woman" and "The Common Sin."

The plaintiff alleges that it obtained the foreign rights for the films from the Hallmark Pictures and paid $6,250 for "For Love of Money" and "The Discarded Woman," and was ready to pay the amount agreed on for the other films.

The plaintiff alleged that on June 11 last, Frank G. Hall borrowed $70,000 from the Minute Trading Corp., and for security gave notes for $120,000 and the negatives of three films, including "Should a Wife Work." It is alleged that he borrowed $22,000 from Westwood on July 14 and gave $27,000 in notes and the negatives of "The Profiteer's Daughter" and "The Loophole." The plaintiff said that the defendant Mannheimer stated on Oct. 18 that the foreign rights would be sold as soon as possible and the plaintiff stated that he had already disposed of some of the foreign territory it will be involved in litigation.

The Minute Trading Corp., through its president Benedict Weinstock, said that concern never knew of the alleged contract of the plaintiff or it would not have advanced $100,000. He contends that the films belong to Hall personally and not to Hallmark Corp. He pointed out that Attorney DeWitt, representing the plaintiff, is the receiver in bankruptcy of Hallmark and that Mr. Hall is doing work for the receiver now.

In refusing the injunction and vacating a temporary injunction obtained by Robertson-Cole Justice Giegerich said that "the proof of the plaintiff's title is too much in doubt to permit of relief pending the trial."

It is understood that plans are being drawn up by the Burnham Co. for their new theater in Evanston. They already have one theater there known as the Hoyburn.

NOT GUILTY IS PLEA OF BLANCHE WARREN ON MURDER CHARGE

Unexpected Surrender Causes Sensation in Attorney's Office

Declaring herself innocent of the murder of Dr. Hugh Sainsbury, Miss Warren unexpectedly rendered herself this morning to District Attorney Day. She refused anything about her movements since she disappeared after the murder of Dr. Sainsbury, and refused to reveal the whereabouts of her younger sister Adele, whom the police are anxious to question.

Miss Warren looked pale and weak and gave every evidence of worry.

The surrender of Miss Warren caused a sensation. District Attorney Day was questioning the witnesses in the case adjoining swing open and Miss Warren appeared and half hysterical denied the charge that she was guilty of the murder of Dr. Sainsbury which had just been voiced by F. B. Lieutenant Cloyd, following the recital of the testimony by Mrs. L. diard, a patient at the Glenwood Sanitarium.

The District Attorney drew from the witness the admission that she had not actually seen the shot fired. Mrs. Lydiard told graphically of how she had seen Dr. Sainsbury leave Blanche after a violent quarrel. Blanche, she added, had run after the doctor and a moment later a shot rang out and Sainsbury staggered into view and fell. Blanche Warren followed him and, a shocking review of her own, Mrs. Lydiard declared Miss Warren threw away the weapon and ran, said the witness.—Adv.

FAIR WARNING

In justice to themselves, ourselves, and the industry at large, we hereby warn the NEWS WEEKLIES that had camera-men on the ground at Los Angeles on December 14th and 15th photographing the unique aeroplane scenes that are to be incorporated in a forthcoming production starring

KATHERINE MacDONALD

temporarily titled "Stranger Than Fiction" for Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Not to print, release, exhibit or distribute any of these scenes, and particularly the flight of an aeroplane from the roof of an office building (a stunt never before performed in the history of aviation) under penalty of full prosecution to the limit of the law.

These hazardous scenes were arranged and engaged exclusively for one production at great cost and extraordinary risk, and it is obviously unfair and manifestly damaging to have them unlawfully duplicated promiscuously in the news weeklies.

This warning extends to exchanges from exploiting and exhibitors from showing the scenes in question. It is only fair to add that the damages their unwarranted circulation will cause us, will, by far exceed the cost of the prints or whatever rentals may be secured for them, and will be immediately followed by injunction proceedings and suits to recover damages.

Quick Work
Special Two Reel for Hoover Relief Ready for National Distribution

The special committee representing the National Association and the M. P. T. O. have accomplished very speedy work in getting ready their campaign for "The Vacant Chair." The campaign to provide two and one-half millions for relief of the starving children in Eastern Europe. Scenario writers from several companies worked out the production, which was rushed through the past few days, and it is understood that the prints of this two-reeler will go out either today or Monday in a tremendous effort to reach as many cities as possible for showing on Christmas. At all events, during Christmas week the bulk of the country will be covered and all exhibitors are expected to show this print, regardless of any program arranged.

On January 26 next, the entire country will be asked to attend motion picture shows and every exhibitor will have as a quota a certain number of starving children to feed. Receipts covering this quota will be taken from every picture theater and producers and exhibitors, as well, will contribute their quota in the effort to show that this industry "can do anything that is necessary, even as to raising such a huge sum upon such short notice.

At the meeting of the sub-committee yesterday detailed arrangements were completed for participation of the Red Cross workers and others in this movement.

The news weeklies are already on the job and have distributed prints containing matter of interest along this line.

May Play 3rd Week
Capitol Breaks Precedent by Holding Over "Passion"—Terms of Contract

The Capitol may play "Passion" for a third week. Because of the phenomenal business done this past week, the picture will be held over for a second week's showing, thus establishing a new precedent at that theater. The third week looms up as a strong possibility. Under the terms of the contract entered upon between S. L. Rothafel and First National, the picture was to play on percentage with a proviso in the contract that if the gross receipts passed the $45,000 mark a second engagement was to be given within six weeks after the first showing.

"Passion" was shown on Thursday night at the opening of the Bradford theater in Newark. The picture was shown at the opening and then taken off.

Switch Ford Weekly
Distribution from Goldwyn Pictures to Federated Film Exchanges of America

The Ford Educational hitherto distributed by Goldwyn Pictures will in the future be handled through the Federated Film Exchanges. Negotiations tending to this arrangement have been completed by Fitzpatrick & McElroy of Chicago, distributors of this reel. Mr. Fitzpatrick, who is in New York, said yesterday the chief reason for the change was to allow for more points of distribution, the Federated having 29 exchanges as against 22 of Goldwyn.

E. C. Jensen, identified with Fitzpatrick & McElroy, will make his headquarters in New York at present in the offices of the Empire State Film Co. He will, however, in addition to watching the distribution of the Ford reel, handle other affairs in which Fitzpatrick & McElroy are interested.

Close a Second Deal

Another deal of importance has been consummated by Federated. It calls for the distribution of all of the product of Educational Corp., of which Louis W. Thompson is president. Federated will in the future distribute the following series of pictures: Comedies, Chester Conklin comedies, Ford Sterling comedies, Louise Fazenda comedies, Milburne Morant comedies, Clayplay comedies, Come dyar Prod. and Sunset-Burrus Scenics.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Brooklyn—The Strand pulled a real surprise recently when practically the entire performance was given over to the very highest type of classic art both in music, film, and novelty. Managing Director Hyman had Lionel Barrymore in "The Devil's Garden," as the picture headliner.

He stepped out of the beaten path and engaged the Russian Royalty Chorus, 15 men and women singers and instrumentalists from Petrograd. Costumed as peasants he displayed them in gay diversion on a green, tobacco high seas. Young girls and matrons, and youth—"their ears were in seen in native dress and were in Russian. Then the angelus was heard the clouds of twilight and the girl fell into some manner of work. There was a gradual transition. The lighting effects enchanted the wonderful singing of the celebrated group.

New Brunswick, N. J.—Benjamin Suydam, manager of the Bijou made extremely successful use of the situation recently in connection with his showing of "The Inferior Sex," starring Mildred Harris Chaplin. Mr. Suydam insisted that he could not have "Bijou" in New Brunswick if Mr. Suydam was not there. The Bijou is the only theatre in New Brunswick where the Bijou is regularly exhibited. Mrs. Suydam had written a letter which appeared in the "Eden," the Bijou's column, of a New Brunswick paper, reading as follows: "The undersigned worked very long for the right now accorded the Bijou in the government of the country. I felt that politicians said realized the excellence of a distinction between the sexes, politically. At the present, however, we find the dominating party bitterly asking women to join an "auxiliary" to the regular organization membership. It is organized for men only. We are not pleased that the female is an inferior sex should be met with a firm determination by every woman to prove her equality. Let the women organize alone, and the itme will come when they can prove their actual superiority by according men an equal position in their own organization."

The letter accomplished a lot more than Mr. Suydam expected. It stung the Bijou. In fact, Mr. Suydam offered the Bijou to a recruiting office, installing portable equipment for enrolling the women voters. The walls of the Bijou were covered with charts, sample ballots and other aids to the registration drive. The thickly intermingled signs were such as these: "See Mildred Harris Chaplin's idea of the Inferior Sex. "Don't let them lock you out. You know who leads. See Mildred Harris Chaplin in "The Inferior Sex."

In the Courts
George D. Rose, who says he is an expert forgers, in a suit brought against the national Film Service and the Marion Davies Film Co. for $10,000 damages for injuries sustained when a mob scene was being shot at Porte, Lee in April, 1919, for the film, "The Dark Star." Rose says that Allan Dwan, as director of the film, had engaged him to play a part, and that he was one of the principals in the rough house scene and that Dwan told him he had instructed Kelly not to injure the plaintiff because he was of smaller stature. He alleges that Kelly struck him so hard his left ribs were fractured and he hasn't been able to accept employment as a trick rider since.

Because Mollie King, who in private life is Mrs. K. D. Alexander, accepted $1,000 from the Fitzgerald Mig. Co., for the exclusive use of her name, for advertising in promoting the sale of an electric birator, and then made several contracts for the use of her name and photograph; judgment for $2,672 has been filed against her in the Supreme Court.

Supreme Court Justice Hotchkiss has denied an application by the Blaney Producing Co. as owners of a play, "The Man Who Dared," to restrain the film Corp, from using the title for a film play. The court said: "Here we have a play which has not been produced for sixteen years and the likelihood of there being any deception of the public or that anyone will visit the defendant's moving picture under the mistaken idea that he is going to witness the plaintiff's play is so remote as to make the remedy of injunction inapplicable."

A default judgment for $10,785 has been entered against George Barr Baker in the Supreme Court of the Republic Laboratories to recover on a contract for $16,000 for a loan used by the defendant in financing the film "Starvation."

"Pardoning the bad is injuring the good"—Benjamin Franklin.
Stoll's First American Release Very Satisfactory Program Offering

"SQUANDED LIVES"
Stoll Film
DIRECTOR .................. Franklin Dyall
AUTHOR ................... Cosmo Hamilton
SCENARIO BY ............. Not credited
CAMERAMAN ............... Not credited
AS A WHOLE............ Interesting program release, quite up to average American production of same class.
STORY.............. Based on how younger son of English peer cheats at cards, but finishes all right.
DIRECTION......... Quite fair, some excellent bits.
PHOTOGRAHY ......... Usually very good.
LIGHTINGS ............. Satisfactory.
CAMERAWORK ........... Usually good.
PLAYERS.......... Ivy Duke exceptionally pretty and screens well. Guy Newall is surely going to please. Remainder of cast adequate.
EXTERIORS....... Several unusually beautiful English backgrounds. One shot on the Thames at night very pretty.
INTERIORS .............. Satisfying.
DETAIL............... Usually accurate. A few poor titles.
CHARACTER OF STORY...... Will probably suit the average house, especially good for neighborhoods.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...... About 5,800 feet.
Stolls have hit upon a Cosmo Hamilton story of his usual type for their first American release. It will go over. Not because "Squandered Lives" is a knockout. It isn't. But considering price considerations and market conditions this picture is liable to get in without difficulty and it certainly will satisfy unless too much fuss is made about it as a special, etc. If it plays as a straight program release it will do and do very nicely.

Practically all of the titles of the original production have been changed for the American market, but at that those who handled the job slipped up several times and left in titles which are very "English-y," and which will probably be over the heads of the average picture audience. As a whole, however, these will probably be overlooked.

Guy Newall and Ivy Duke are the featured players and it's a bet Newall is going to be liked by the usual American audience. He is far from a good looking hero, but he looks like a real he-man and has a charming screen personality and a lovable smile. He is a gambler, a cheat, and he makes no secret about it, but your crowd is going to like him just the same. Ivy Duke is a very pretty heroine and several of her close-ups show that she is very beautiful. At times she suffers from poor photography and lack of direction.

The story tells how Newall and Ivy Duke both keep up their position in English society by cheating at bridge—he because he is the younger son of a peer without funds, and she because her people have practically no money. She rejects a multi-millionaire and marries Newall, and later when this millionaire catches them cheating there is a rough house, after which Newall throws him out. Later to thoroughly accomplish revenge the millionaire pleads for forgiveness and invites Newall and his wife to a big house party, where he catches them cheating and exposes them before a huge crowd. Disgraced, and without a future, they plan to commit suicide by suffocation, and are saved from this by an old servant who, reading in the newspaper of the death of the peer, finally breaks into the room and rescues them. The clutch shows them, banned by English society, with their future hopes centered upon the coming heir.

Cosmo Hamilton Your Best Bet for Exploitation

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Squandered Lives" is a rather catchy title for a good average program picture. Stoll's first American release is coming to you this way. You had better look it over if you haven't hitherto seriously considered booking these productions. It is true you haven't any names of particular importance to play with, and it is also true that as an English film certain prejudices will be propagated by some salesmen. You had better see it and decide for yourself just what to do.
Cosmo Hamilton is well known in this country, one of his latest screen offerings being "Midsummer Madness," which Famous Players expect to go very well. He has written a number of other somewhat popular screen successes. You know your clientele best and it may be that you may want to keep from the fact that this is a foreign production. You might mention Newall's name as an English actor who is bound to become liked in this country because of his unusual personality.
The title will give you several excellent opportunities for catchlines.
Splendid Action and Fine Direction Make This Real

STORY ...... Offers good material for screen presentation; author’s story given vivid presentation

DIRECTION ........................ Mighty fine

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. Excellent

LIGHTINGS .......................... Good

CAMERA WORK ................. Very good

PLAYERS.... Catherine Calvert photographs beautifully; some excellent individual acting

EXTERIORS ... Mostly aboard the “Lady Jermyn”

INTERIORS ......................... Correct

DETAIL .............................. Well taken care of

CHARACTER OF STORY .... The schemes of one who goes the limit to attain his desires with the creed “Dead Men Tell No Tales”

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 6,154 feet

Tom Terriss seems to have a weakness for shipwrecks and the like but he can’t be blamed for that when he handles them so expertly. No doubt about it Director Terriss is a first class wrecker of ships. It seldom happens that in a picture of the type of “Dead Men Tell No Tales” where it starts off with a punch, that the same sort of action can be kept up and the interest sustained until the end.

In this production, however, due to splendid direction and a mighty capable cast, the mystery of the Lady Jermyn remains a secret until almost the very end and every scene holds a new interest. The burning of the ship comes in about the first reel and from then on until the big fight scene near the close the picture never sags or threatens to let up. The scenes aboard the ship are excellent and have been exceptionally well photographed. The night scenes are all effective.

The cast is in no small way responsible for the picture’s success. Catherine Calvert as the featured player is a very beautiful Eva and she has been always very carefully photographed. But the acting honors go to George Van Syffertiz in the character of Senior Joaquin Santos whose creed forms the title of the story by E. W. Hornung. Others who do very capable work and give careful expression to their respective roles are Holmes E. Herbert and Percy Marmont. Director Terriss has certainly made a worth while and pertinent production of Hornung’s famous novel.

In his greed for gold Joaquin Santos has established the creed that “Dead Men Tell No Tales.” The gold rush is on in Australia and prompts Santos to plan the destruction of the Lady Jermyn, carrying gold. He wins over the ship’s captain and powder is stored in the hold of the vessel and the life boats scuttled so that none but the plotters will escape.

Through his love for Santo’s daughter Eve, Squire Rattray is drawn into the murderous scheme though Santos promises him there will be no loss of life. Rattray is to pick up the villains and their loot in his private yacht. Among the unsuspecting passengers aboard the Lady Jermyn is George Cole, a barrister, who falls in love with Eve.

At the appointed time the ship is blown up and practically everyone lost except Cole, who is picked up and then searches for Eve. The schemers, however, plot to kill him but reckon without Eve with whom he is finally reunited.

Promise Them Another Fine Sea Picture from Terriss

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You won’t go wrong in booking Tom Terriss’ latest production for Vitagraph. There is abundant real live action, a big ship wreck and an honest-to-goodness fight that will be sure to “get” them. Play up the burning of the Lady Jermyn extensively. This is the big scene of the picture and is sure to attract attention if you show stills of the wreck.

Tell them it’s an adaptation of E. W. Hornung’s story. It is very well known and anyone who is familiar with the books of this author will want to see “Dead Men Tell No Tales.” Recall Terriss’ “Trumpet Island,” and promise them just as much excitement in his latest. Use the lines: “In his murderous schemes he maintained that ‘Dead Men Tell No Tales’ and laid his plans accordingly.
J. Parker Read, Jr., has achieved, in “A Thousand to One,” starring Hobart Bosworth, a melodrama that is different. Though much of the action transpires in a Western setting, neither a six-shooter nor a two-gun bad man, black curses of the “Western movie,” is visible.

In his newest Associated Producers picture, this young producer demonstrates that the message of the clean, upstanding story of a moral coward who conquered an evil self may be told on the screen without a foot of hokum or a breath of bombast.

"The Misleading Lady" is another case of a successful stage play proving itself far from successful as screen entertainment. The main trouble is the lack of dialogue. They depend almost entirely on subtitles for the comedy and in order to stretch the story to feature length there is so much padding and extensive detail that the result is very tiring.

A sort of burlesque twist is introduced in the form of a harmless crazy man who thinks he’s Naplepon but even this bit isn’t genuinely funny. It’s merely more of the padding of which there is no small amount. The opening of the picture promises an African locale but the scene soon shifts to New York where a rehearsal of “The Siren” is in progress.

The direction is only average. There’s so much in and out business, a quick flash of this and a quick flash of that, that it often borders on dizziness. There’s one long stretch which takes place in the cabin to which the hero takes the girl he has kidnapped and they make a serious effort here to register some comedy both in action and sub-titles but it isn’t obviously a success. Bert Lytell as Jack Craigen does all that’s required of him but that isn’t much, while Lucy Cotton is the girl in the case. There’s a fellow who tries to act like Ed Wynn but he only tries and isn’t at all funny.

Jack Craigen, engineer, returns from a three years stay in Africa and goes to visit at the home of his uncle, Cannell, who is also entertaining Helen Steele, a young society girl with aspirations toward the stage and her fiancé, a playwright. Helen is trying to persuade Cannell and her fiancé Tracey to give her the leading part in their new production “The Siren” but they are not convinced that she can act the “vamp.”

And so it happens that Helen wagers to vamp Jack and within a week have him propose to her—and he does. But when he learns he has been tricked he accepts Helen’s joking suggestion that he kidnap her the way they do in Africa. He takes her to his mountain lodge where the remainder of the action takes place. He chains her, tickles the soles of her feet and generally manages to use up a reel or so with this sort of thing and finally her fiancé arrives. But by this time Jack’s caveman tactics have won Helen’s heart and she tells him so.

Bert Lytell’s Name and the Popularity of the Play Will Attract

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you think they’ll be satisfied with this give it to them. You have a good title to work with. The run of the piece on the legitimate has given it publicity so the title may get them interested. If they like Bert Lytell, be sure to tell them he’s the star of this.
Perhaps your folks have seen musical comedies previously presented in screen form and come to realize that they don’t always make the best material for pictures. In this case they will not be greatly disappointed. They try hard enough to be comical and in less critical audiences some of the comedy may get over. They even use “cuss” words to get the proper effect. Some may not like this.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . . . . 4,765 feet

A rather good production, a colorful Southern atmosphere with some very pretty exteriors and effective interiors has been provided for a story that altogether too nonsensical to deserve any serious effort. The direction also is quite satisfactory and there are some splendid examples of camerawork. However, it is all pretty much wasted on the story which is about the weakest thing Universal has turned out in some time.

Edith Roberts is pretty and looks charming in her Southern dresses and the mannerisms become her but outside of that she is handicapped. The role gives her no opportunity to act so she just plays round like a kitten with a ball of silk. The sub-titles are poorly written and there are many of them consisting of unnecessary conversation.

There is one set particularly worthy of mention. It is a wine cellar that really looks the part. The cobwebs indicate the age of the beverage and altogether it is very realistic. The story aims to show how a gentlemen of the South, a descendant of an aristocratic old French family tries to marry his granddaughter off to an old fellow who has already had three wives to get even with the girl's mother who married the gentleman's son without the gentleman's permission.

Aline Belame arrives at her grandfather's chateau in anticipation of the marriage he has arranged for her but is provoked when she meets her prospective husband, an old wine-drinking fellow. Burton Striker is the hero in the form of a representative of a safe company. He is installing a vault door on grandfather's wine cellar. Mutual admiration is established between Aline and Striker but the plans for the wedding with the old man go on.

Several inconsequential occurrences delay the marriage and finally Aline decides to go away with Striker. They lay plans for their elopement at the inn but the keepers warn the grandfather and the plans are interrupted. Aline is taken back to her home and a trap is set by the old prospective bridegroom to kill Striker. It fails and he then decides to fight a duel.

There follows a lot of business that means very little. The two men get ready to shoot at each other, but the old fellow fires astray and breaks a pipe which the grandfather prizes as a gift of an empress. This "queers" the old man and leaves the way pretty clear for Striker. The grandfather still withholds his blessing but when Striker says he will not give him the combination to the door to his wine cellar then grandpa comes through.

Talk About A Good Southern Atmosphere

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There is very little to talk about in this one. It doesn't even come up to the strength of a program picture. A fairly attractive Southern atmosphere may offer some recompense for the poor story but it is too nonsensical to gather very much serious interest. Edith Roberts is very pretty but she needs to do a little more than look pretty and she doesn't have a chance in this.

If you do use this secure a good accompanying program and trust to luck that one or two bits like a few good close-ups of a negro mammy and some pickaninnies eating watermelon and a good Southern atmosphere will meet with their approval. Catchlines will attract but you can't do it without deception.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION... About 6,000 feet

It often happens and unfortunately so, that in getting off with a bang they go all to pieces when it comes to the finish. And that is just what has happened here. Director Edwards had a really fine story to work with and he got right to it in the first few hundred feet when he pitched right into action and kept things moving at a lively pace and reached a logical conclusion at the end of the fifth reel but why he went ahead and tacked another thousand feet on, is a mystery.

If they will just misplace or destroy this last reel "The Scuttlers" will be a corking fine picture, action-ful and with a well sustained interest and an atmosphere of the sea that is realistic and offers something which while not altogether new is a variation from the customary cut and dried location atmosphere that is the most familiar.

The photography and camera work generally is very good and plays an important part in the picture. Scenes aboard the vessel are splendid and a storm at night has been well photographed. And again in the scenes in the hold of the boat when the villain bores holes and plugs them for the time being and later releases the plugs and the water comes spouting in, there is some more good work. Farnum plays a role well suited to his personality and he practically carries the picture although G. Raymond Nye is a splendid villain while Herschel Mayall, Jackie Saunders and Arthur Millet handle smaller parts well.

Jim Landers, adventure seeker, is employed by Lloyds of London to join the crew of the "Dorothy Low" to ascertain whether or not the ship's captain is scuttling his vessels to collect the insurance. Erickson, first mate, and a brute, has Landers put in irons for interference. Laura, the captain's daughter, has already shown her admiration for Landers and when he is bound, Linquist—another of the crew but really a member of Lloyd's shadowing the work of Landers—gives Laura a file to give Landers.

The hero hides in the hold of the vessel while villain Erickson believes he has gone overboard in the storm. In his hiding place Landers sees the mate bore holes in preparation to scuttle the ship. A fight follows and the villain is drowned in the hold now fast filling with water. Landers, the captain, his daughter and some of the crew escape. Hero and the daughter acknowledge their mutual love and that should be the end but in another reel they go on finishing up a lot of minor unnecessary details.

Star's Admirers Will Like It. Others Should Too
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a much better picture than Farnum's last "Drag Harlan." "The Scuttlers" contains five reels of fine live action and a realistic sea atmosphere which makes a fine background for a story such as the personality of the star demands. Perhaps Farnum has never been seen in anything just like this or at least not recently, so you can promise them something entirely out of the ordinary for him.

Play up the locale principally and then tell them something about the story. Say: "He craved adventure. Did he get it? Yes on the vessel 'Dorothy Low;' Hop aboard with Farnum and enjoy an exciting adventure at sea." "Who were 'The Scuttlers.' See how an adventurer turns detective and solves the mystery." Stills for your lobby and catchlines should get them in. Farnum fans especially will be well pleased.
"THE LURE OF CROONING WATER"

From the Novel by Marion Hill
Featuring Ivy Duke and Guy Newall

It's a story of the stage, of midnight suppers and nerve-racking life, and of green fields and the charm of the country, of an actress who under the spell of rural surroundings falls in love with a married man, only to repel him when her persistence breaks down his reserve.
Unconsciously the Woman has fallen in love with an Ideal—-with a Man who not only utterly disregards her but who seemingly is insensible of proved feminine charms, one whose indifference she interprets as devotion to honor, home and fidelity.

The infatuation lasts only so long as he is cold to her, so long as he is not like other men she has known. When he yields he becomes in her eyes common clay, the halo that surrounds him “fades into thin air,” and her faulty outlook is instantly righted.

So she sends him back to the Greater Woman, his fellow toiler, the Mother: “He is your man, I haven’t harmed him.”

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 6,979 feet

In “The Truth About Husbands” Whitman Bennett has produced another of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero’s novels of domestic “unhappiness,” which is just a bit different than some of his other stories of the same order, but the same old time-worn situations make their appearance in his “The Profligate,” which is given the new title for its screen presentation.

Kenneth Webb has provided a thoroughly satisfactory production for the story and it runs off smoothly enough if you’re not impatient. It’s altogether too long and the plot is given to many new leases of life. Just when you expect “the cat to be let out of the bag” something happens to prevent it and keeps things going for another hundred feet or so until finally the expected happens and you say “I knew that’s the way it would turn out.”

So after all “The Truth About Husbands” doesn’t prove to be at all unusual. It’s just a satisfactory program picture, mildly interesting of itself, but will perhaps gain a better reputation for the appearance of May McAvoy whose cheerful personality makes the scene a lot more pleasing each time she is on the screen and she’s missed when she’s off.

Director Webb has seen to it that production values have not been stinted and so there are some pretty views of an Italian Villa, both interior and exterior and then there’s some sort of a “pass word” cabaret where the “husband” is lured to watch a dancer do a naughty dance on a table. The censors will enjoy cutting this even though there are few close-ups.

Dunstan Renshaw, wealthy idler, had promised to marry Janet, the librarian in the town of Plansville. But later he meets Leslie Brownell, a wealthy young girl whom he marries and takes abroad. It happens that Leslie’s brother Wilfred has met Janet but isn’t aware that she is also in Italy as secretary to Mrs. Stonehay whose business in Italy is to marry her daughter to Lord Randolph.

Of course Leslie is unaware of her husband’s previous gay career and when he leaves her to go to Rome she is very sad but not at all suspicious. Incidentally he really is true to his bride. The Stonehay’s call upon Leslie and Janet is taken ill and forced to stay in Leslie’s home where she again meets Wilfred. He falls in love with her and she with him but she explains to Leslie why she can’t marry her brother. Janet is about to go away when Dunstan returns from Rome bringing Randolph with him. Janet sees her former sweetheart and tells Leslie “that is the man.” Thinking she means Randolph she insists that Janet make known her case. Of course there is much sorrow following the actual disclosure that “the man” is Leslie’s husband. Finally Janet dies and Leslie forgives Dunstan.

Title Should Give Them an Idea of What to Expect

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Domestic troubles woven into picture entertainment are still relished by some people. If you cater to this class be sure to show them “The Truth About Husbands.” The title is explicit enough. You shouldn’t have to do much explaining. Also tell them it’s an adaptation of “The Profligate”—this should give them an idea of the type of story to expect.

On the other hand if you’re not so sure they’ll like it and still feel you want to promise something you can tell them they’ll like charming May McAvoy. If you showed Whitman Bennett’s recent production with Lionel Barrymore “The Devil’s Garden,” they may want to see his next release.

CHARACTER OF STORY ............. American diamond merchant attempts to locate source of fake diamonds which threaten trade of real stones

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ Over 6,000 feet

Five reels would have sufficed to tell the story of the fake diamonds in a thoroughly satisfactory fashion but instead of bringing about the conclusion of the various situations simultaneously or nearly so, Perret has each one dragged to its own ending.

Perhaps one of the most attractive bits photographed in some time is the "Black Mill" in which one of the investigators is imprisoned. The Mill is set on fire by the villain and the prisoner escapes by climbing out on to the wheel which whirls his body around in the air and finally when the flames begin to eat at the wheel it gives way and flings the man to the ground. Here's a real thrill.

Again the director shows ingenuity in his methods of tracking down a murderer. Measuring the footprint in freshly watered earth is one clever bit. There are others. The locations are the real thing, the picture having been made abroad. The Casino at Monte Carlo, the flower carnival at Nice and many other famous European places are sure to attract.

Robert Elliott as a representative of an American diamond concern goes abroad to learn the source of imitation stones which are so perfect that his company has even purchased them. He takes his sister (Lucy Cotton) with him. Her sweetheart, Sell, is to assist Elliott. Arthur Graves, the maker of the fake stones, plans to do away with Elliott who has secured the services of a chemist formerly in Graves' employ.

Graves finally imprisons Elliott and employs de Lambri, Elliott's former manager, who knows the whereabouts of the fake formula which the chemist had given to Elliott. Graves makes it appear that Elliott has decamped with his company's papers, etc. A lot of detail follows in which Graves kills de Lambri, Elliott finally escapes and through the aid of his sister and her sweetheart they trace Graves' whereabouts to an island where he has fled with a girl, his accomplice, and formerly employed by Lucy as her companion.

"THE EMPIRE OF DIAMONDS"
Leonce Perret Prod.—Pathé

In announcing this latest Leonce Perret production confine most of your promises to the fact that it contains some shots taken on the actual ground of some of Europe's famous resorts such as Monte Carlo, Nice, Paris, etc. There are many interesting shots of these famous spots that will be sure to attract more than passing attention. In regard to the story, say it discloses the source of the imitation diamond trade.

Catchlines might get them interested. You could say: "The search for the imitation diamond lead them through the famous touring places of Europe. Enjoy the casino at Monte Carlo, the flower carnival at Nice and scenes of Paris in Leonce Perret's production 'The Empire of Diamonds.'" Stills of the burning windmill and the man on the wheel will promise them a thrill.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 6,000 feet

In view of the lack of originality in the plot, it is surprising to find "The Coast of Opportunity" holding the interest as well as it does, and the fact that it is fairly entertaining must be credited to a well staged, well acted, and well directed production. The hero's battle of wits against the capitalist, to hold his property is well told, and Kerrigan commands sufficient sympathy to make the spectator want him to win. As in all pictures of the type, the hero performs some superhuman feats, such as battling single handed and winning against several armed villians. However, these scenes are well done, and furnish the desired thrills.

The scene is laid in a fictitious principality, supposedly in Central America. At any rate a very good "Mexican" atmosphere has been secured in the shots of native buildings and country.

The story opens with Dick Bristow, Kerrigan, discovering copper on his supposedly worthless land. Unable to finance the mining, he seeks aid from Senor Marr, a wealthy railroad magnate. Marr refuses and Bristow secures the financial backing from a wealthy friend, Tommy De Boer. Securing an option on the adjoining land from Marr, who does not know its value, and Janet Ashley, Marr's ward, with whom Bristow is in love, the two men begin work themselves. Marr learns the truth about the mine and endeavors by foul means to regain possession of his option. Several native blackguards kidnap Bristow and make off with the paper.

Meanwhile Marr has conveyed the impression to Janet that Dick is a crook and has skipped out to beat her out of her land. Dick outwits his captors, escapes, and after several perilous adventures arrives at Marr's home just before the option expires.

He is shot in a fight, but Janet arrives in time to learn the truth and force Marr to close the sale, and as Dick regains consciousness, he finds himself in the arms of the girl he loves.

Star's Name and a Promise of Thrills Will Put This Over

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

J. Warren Kerrigan is a widely popular star of long standing, and his name, therefore, will be the biggest thing to work on in handling this feature. You can honestly say that the star is at his best in his present part, and that he gives a convincing portrayal of the young miner. As a second point of appeal you can talk about the thrills in the picture, bringing in the Mexican outlaws. Also let them know that it is the story of a victorious fight of a poor man against a crooked capitalist, for there is a strong appeal in that point. If you want to use catchlines, try something like this: "Could you fight a railroad—and win? See how Dick Bristow did it in 'The Coast of Opportunity.'" "See how a broken mirror saved a copper mine in 'The Coast of Opportunity.'"

Some Short Reels

"Convict 13"—Metro

Type of production........................................2 reel comedy

Buster Keaton has made another that is sure to tickle all comedy lovers. Some people may consider "One Week" and "Neighbors" funnier stuff than this one, but there is not much difference in their comedy value. Buster's solemn faced antics are sure fire laugh getters, and he makes good use of his athletic and acrobatic prowess in this as in the others. It starts off with Buster playing a game of golf, and doing some remarkable shooting. He gets hit on the head with a golf ball, and while still dazed, an escaped convict changes clothes with him. Buster is brought to justice and sentenced to hang. The rest of the picture is made up of a lot of good business in the prison yard, with some big laughs when they try to hang him. There is a great deal of heavy slapstick, but Bust er puts it over in an exceedingly funny manner. In fact, he finds that the whole thing has been a dream from the time the ball hit him. It is good stuff from start to finish, and should prove one of your best bets in the comedy line.

"Trouble Bubbles"—Universal

Type of production........................................2 reel comedy

The basis of this Century comedy is the well known home brew theme, and while the prohibition angle is somewhat overworked in such pictures of late, this one develops some new lines of business that make most of it good stuff. It is full of action, from the start, with enough laughs scattered around to put it across. It has also been more carefully staged than the average two reeler. The mustached and monocled comedian is seen as a member of the police force, who comically arrests the chief of the home brew clan, and is promoted to captain. While the chief of police is away, a large party is staged in the jail, and the chief's wife, a rabid prohibitionist, takes an active part, after one taste of home brew. Then there is a lot of business in which the home brew clan capture the chief of police's daughter, only to be outwitted by her captain-sweetheart. This makes a lot of fast slapstick stuff which, although not new, is put over well, and gets the laughs. The picture holds up well through both reels, and will make a satisfactory comedy offering.

"Edgar's Little Saw"—Goldwyn

Type of production........................................2 reel comedy

This is the ninth of the series of "Edgar" pictures, written by Booth Tarkington, and presenting one of his well known boy characters. The picture doesn't contain the fund of humor that Mr. Tarkington writes into his stories, because it lacks something of his personality, but it furnishes quiet amusement, and of a type different from the ordinary comedy offering. In this one Edgar receives, among other Christmas gifts, a tool chest containing a little saw. While he is out displaying some of his other presents to the boy next door, little brother Charlie saws up everything in the house, furniture, hats, and at length hangs the little saw around the cat. Edgar gets the blame, and is being kept from his sweetheart's party as punishment, when the guilt of Charlie is discovered. There is nothing exceedingly funny in the picture, but it is a smooth running, and altogether enjoyable little piece, which should especially please high class patronage. Johnny Jones, featured as Edgar, is a clever little performer, whose work is above that of the average child player.

"Professional Ethics"—Goldwyn

Type of production........................................2 reel comedy

George Bunny is starred in this one, which is somewhat better than his first effort. Bunny isn't funny himself, but some good comedy business provides several good laughs, and makes it about an average offering. Most of the comedy is supplied by business in two doctors' offices. Bunny is a young dentist. His arrival in love is an omen. They have adjoining offices, and their work on several patients is amusing. The girl they both love has a bad tempered father, who throws everything within reach at the two suitors. Nothing avails until Bunny turns on the laughing gas in his office. The girl's father his first laugh in twenty years. Then everything turns out all right. Nothing outstanding about the production, but enough stuff to put it over fairly well. Will get by as a moderately satisfactory comedy.

"Rest in Peace"—Educational

Type of production........................................1 reel comedy

This is one of a series of "Gagety" comedies, produced by the Christie studios. Harry Edwards and Mary Wynn are the featured players in the piece, which hasn't a great deal of real comedy value. It is mildly amusing, but there is almost an absolute lack of real laughs. Such as it has is situation stuff, no slapstick. The young husband is such a powerful snorer that wife forces him to evacuate the twin bed and move to a somewhat distant room to sleep until he shall have been broken of the habit, also insisting that he play no more poker games until he is completely caught up on sleep. Hubby wants to play the very next night, and signs upon the plan of substituting the club's heaviest snorer for himself after friend wife has retired. Wife listens to the snoring, convinced that her husband is safe in bed. The poker game is raised and hubby has a hard time dodging cops. The young wife discovers the intruder, the husband makes a run, and it ends all right. Not much to it, and should prove only a fair number.

"Number Please"—Pathé

Type of production........................................2 reel comedy

This latest Harold Lloyd offering is a good one, with a new basis for the comedy, and several new gags that put it over in good shape. It isn't the funniest one Lloyd has made, but there is plenty of stuff in both reels to hold it up. It is fast most of the time, and except for a little slowness about getting started, there is no drag. The scene is an amusement park, where Harold is trying to forget the girl who threw him over. She appears on the scene with a fat admirer, and Harold tries his best to get her back. There is some business good for a number of laughs when the girl has her purse stolen and the thief plants it in Harold's pocket. Harold can't lose the purse, although he tries every possible way to get rid of it. There is some more good business with a telephone booth and a lot of wrong numbers for the main idea, and this stuff is also good for a number of chuckles and one or two good laughs. Mildred Davis is in support of Lloyd and looks attractive. This will make a very satisfactory comedy offering and will undoubtedly fulfill expectations of your Harold Lloyd fans.

"Way Down North"—Universal

Type of production........................................1 reel comedy

This is a reel of burlesque on the story of "Way Down East." The story isn't followed at all closely, merely the outstanding features are used and twisted around to suit the hokum. It is presented as though a cheap company were doing the play, with frequent scenes of confusion, and evidence of mistaken cues, etc. Some of the stuff makes good comedy, as for instance, the ice jam of soap boxes 'pulled about the stage with ropes. Several bits of good business result from untimely exposure of properties, and the crudeness of the action is mildly humorous. The snow catches fire from the villain's cigarette, the old man's wig comes off in the midst of a speech, and several other such incidents should make it go with more intelligent audiences. It will of course be better fun to people who are familiar with the story. The sub-titles try hard to be amusing, but most of them fall flat. As a burlesque it is all right, and if your audiences are the kind that will appreciate this type of comedy, this one should prove a satisfactory offering. Vin Moore directed.
Short Reels

“Crowning King Blizzard”—Chester—Educational
Type of production.................................1 reel scenic

As may be judged by the title, this reel is devoted entirely to Winter and snow scenes. The first shots show the city of Quebec after a tremendous snow storm. The huge piles and drifts feet deep are displayed, with their effects on traffic. The Winter sports of the Canadian city are seen in a series of shots of tobogganing, skiing, and snowshoeing. The views of the sports afford a bit of interest, particularly the snowshoe races. The scene is then changed to the Adirondacks at the same time of year, showing about the same amount of snow scenes, with some children enjoying slides and toboggans. A deserted movie camp is shown, where western and Alaskan pictures have been made. This is fairly interesting but short, and the reel as a whole is shy on material. It will make only a passing filler. Titles by William Henry Wright.

“Frivolous Fije”—Chester—Educational
Type of production.................................1 reel scenic

This comprises rather an intimate study of the life of the Fijian Islanders, and makes a real full of interest. The natives, formerly cannibals, are shown at several of their occupations and celebrations. Their principal business is fishing, and the various methods they employ are well shown. A long semi-circular line of the savages closes in on the fish, driving them in shore. When they reach shallow water, the natives are seen spear fishing them. A few shots of net fishing are presented, and a novel method of poisoning the fish. That the natives also have the “home brew” habit is made clear by views of the making of some sort of liquor from roots. Quite interesting is a fire walking stunt, in which rocks are heated in a fire, and the warriors then dance on them. The final shots are of the war club dance in which they have perfected themselves until they resemble a Broadway chorus. It is a good reel all through and should make a very satisfactory number.

THAT was the question that puzzled Police Lieutenant Cloyd and every inmate of the Glenwood Sanatorium. Here was a man, an ex-army doctor, who had no known enemies and many friends, found dead on the hospital grounds with a bullet in his heart. Who killed him? Was it the woman he loved? Was it the woman he wronged? Was it the man who hated him? That's what your patrons will want to find out.

Deal Not Closed
Morris Greenhill Has Until Dec. 31 to Raise Money for Big Four Productions

Despite the fact that it has been reported in New York by Hiram Howells and Dennis P. O'Brien of O'Brien, Malevinsky and Driscoll, that the deal for United Artists' foreign distribution had been definitely closed with Morris Greenhill of London, it was admitted Saturday that the agreement was tentative only, and that Greenhill has until Dec. 31 to raise the necessary money to be paid in advance for each United Artists release. At the offices of O'Brien, Malevinsky and Driscoll it was stated that no action would and could be taken until the term of Greenhill's option had expired.

WID'S DAILY at various times has stated through its London correspondent that the deal had not definitely been closed, but in New York it was maintained that negotiations had been terminated.

Snowy Baker Prod.
(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Snowy Baker, former Olympic hero and millionaire sportsman of Australia, will be starred in a series of five or six reels to be known as the Snowy Baker Prod. The announcement was made from the Selig studios where the pictures will be filmed. Col. Selig and Sam York are associated with Baker in the new company.

Hindsight and—

Yes. If the hindsight was as good as the foresight things would be different. Everybody advertises when the trays would beat opening jacks. Same in this business. Everybody knows a winner. When it's a winner. But not before. Take "Passion." They peddled it around abroad. No one wanted it for America. One big distributing concern could have had it for less than $10,000. Turned it down. Wasn't any good for America. Another American had a chance to get it for $13,500. Couldn't see it. Then Dave Howells happened along. Know Dave? Has foreign rights to First National. Closed the deal with Ben Bluementhal. Quick. Paid pretty big money for it. Thought it was right. Sold First National same idea. They went to it. First showing in Paterson. Over 27,000 people in that town flocked to see it. Then next at the Capitol. Broke records. Smashed precedent. In for a second week. Maybe a third. Record business. Now the knowitalls are talking again. You know. Luck! All that sort of thing. Hindsight vs. foresight.

Oscar Price, daddy of Associated Producers, saw his photo in a special Xmas edition of the Nooze, printed in green. Turned to someone and said: “I’m green in this business, but not green s that, am I?” I’ll say he isn’t. Seek Change in Minor Law

(Special to WIP’S DAILY)

Albany, N. Y.—Efforts will be made at the coming session of the legislature to amend the law regarding the admission of children to theaters. The present law prohibits children under 16 years of age to attend theaters unaccompanied by parent or guardian, or by an adult person authorized by its parent or guardian. The operation of this law has resulted often in a great injustice to the managers of the theaters. Children often appear from their size and personal appearance to be above the age limit and frequently do not tell the truth when questioned by the ticket seller as to their age.

Second Perret Film

Leonard Perret’s third abroad made a double picture called “The Race for Millions.” It was produced in France and will be completed in seven weeks.
A large advertising campaign is planned in connection with it.

Incidentally, Perret met with unusual difficulties in taking “The Empire of Diamonds” which will be re-screened through Pathe. It took him about five months to make this picture that would have ordinarily taken a month here. He encountered trouble in regard to lights and studio space. The picture contains scenes taken in Alost, Paris, Monte Carlo, Nice, Havre, and on board the La France en route from France to New York.

New "Aphrodite" Mayflower Promises One—Isaac Wolper Bought Book Rights a Year Ago—Production in East

Mayflower stated yesterday that it would make an elaborate screen version of "Aphrodite" for release in 21. John W. McKay, general manager of the company in speaking of the picture stated that the director's name would be announced later.

The company producing "Aphrodite" will be divided into three units, with working separate and all factories and other in three different studios, all under supervision of the director in chief. The studios that Mayflower has negotiated for are Paragon, Solax and Biograph.

The reason for dividing up the work in making this picture, McKay explained, was that the ultimate speed may be maintained. The two for "Aphrodite" has been in press for the past 15 months by Val Cleveland. It will be finished by Jan. 1.

The Mayflower general manager noted that this picture might be only one, other than those already contracted for with George Tucker and R. A. Walsh, that company would make next year.

Unsolicited editorial from Moving Picture World (issue of Dec. 11th)

A GENUINE SENSATION

GREAT moving pictures are few, although many productions may be called excellent. "Midsummer Madness," the third important production created by William DeMille, steps into greatness and classifies itself by absolute merit as a superb entertainment. It has that fine virtue of being a complete dramatic structure to begin with. To this have been added real acting, beautiful photography, a sense of taste and composition. It is the greatest legitimate dramatic production the screen has ever seen. Nothing in "Midsummer Madness" has the slightest likelihood of one's sense of credulity, and there is no jarring note of anachronism in the good social atmosphere through which the action proceeds. Such small flaws as too great length of titles are totally forgotten in the absorbing interest of the story.

It is a pleasure to congratulate Famous Players-Lasky on having added a great screen masterpiece to the list of moving picture achievements and to notify the exhibitors of the country that they may expect a truly great success. Mr. De Mille is a dramatist first and the result is very evident on the screen. An effort to tell the story would form no proper part of this comment, as we leave the beauties of the production for enjoyment by the many who will see it. A word to those who are distressed about the falling off in fine productions for the screen—a critical examination of this exceptionally great work will effect a cure.

PASSION

“Ranking as one of the few really great motion pictures, ‘Passion’ is real, not reel. Even the supers—and there are hundreds—are not motion picture-ey. The story moves like wildfire. The little scenes are often really very subtle. It proves that a costume picture can succeed if the theme is good and it proves that one good picture is enough to fill an evening. More of ‘Passion’ and of Pola Negri—a school unto herself—anon.”—S. Jay Kaufman, New York Globe.

Lillian Gish Special for Frohman Amusement Halted—Only Temporary, Says Sherrill

It was reported yesterday that the Lillian Gish production at Frohman Amusement had been held up pending the completion of the Griffith film. The Griffith offices took over the picture about a week ago for making the picture it was supposed to be work at present.

When the Griffith offices said whether or not "D. W. Griffith will take the picture over, no definite answer was made. When William J. J. Sherman, president of Frohman Amusement, was asked relative to the statement:

"I have no statement to make regarding Mr. Sherman, but I can say that Gish was out of the picture because that is a temporary co-production. This is the Griffith and Gish production. It is true that the picture has been delayed, but that is not because the Griffith company was not interested in the picture. The picture was delayed because Griffith wanted to make a certain number of personal appearances in the Middle West."

Injunction Granted Against Parrot Films, Inc., in Essanay Chaplin Case—Appeal Planned

Judge Cohen in the Supreme Court has granted the motion for a temporary injunction sought by the Essanay Company, the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co., and Warner Bros. as plaintiffs against Parrot Films, Inc., defendants, in the case of the Essanay Chaplin re-issues.

Warners Bros. brought the suit against Parrot on the grounds that the latter company had the prints of some of the Chaplin films which Warners were endeavoring to sell on the state right plan. Judge Cohen has granted a temporary mandatory injunction compelling Parrot to turn over to Warners Bros. the prints of whatever Chaplin pictures it has on hand.

Comes Advice to the Big Fellows to Stop Crying "Wolf"

The following letter has been received from W. P. McCarty of McCarty & Johnson, who operate a chain in Pennsylvania:

Editor WID's Articles.

Being a hick town exhibitor you will note at the top of this sheet, I am surprised that you ever published these "Wolf Cries" of these big fellows with the protruding foreheads about adjustments, reconditioning, and "God, What Shall We Do To Be Saved?". In a short time every exhibitor that has the least bit of yellow in his spine will close up and get out of the exhibiting end of this game, or will be shaking hands with the Sheriff in his sleep, you know the old story about the Wolf, if you keep crying Wolf all the time, he will soon put in an appearance and no one will know why or where he came from, but he will be there. Just advise the Big Fellows with the exceptional brain that they can't just try on a new coat and when that day comes everyone will know just what to do, where and how to do it. The only thing to do is to keep going and making the pictures and presentations so interesting that the patrons just can't get along without it, in other words making the lardar so strong that it's impossible to just like the boozers that would spend his last dime for a drink, why should he or she spend it for a picture.

What To Do.

Let out a notch in your troubles and start taking a larger stride, this will increase your speed, if the wolf does come, you have a Bank Roll to throw at him.

Yours truly,

W. P. McCarty;

Revived in St. Louis—Has List of Reform Bills Prepared for the Legislature

St. Louis—The Committee of 50 organized in 1917 to determine legislation needed to better moral conditions in St. Louis, was revived at a meeting at the Chamber of Commerce on Monday. The committee includes representatives of various Catholic, Protestant and Jewish bodies, and leading civic and welfare organizations.

They have prepared a list of 11 bills to be presented to the Missouri legislature when it convenes in January.

Among the bills affecting directly or indirectly the industry are:

The creation of a board of censor for moving pictures.

A bill to prohibit the showing as well as the sale and manufacture of indecent pictures.

To make it a misdemeanor to write or post indecent pictures on one's own property or on the property of another.

To provide for the destruction of indecent literature and pictures on conviction.

Similar bills were presented to the legislature two years ago but all failed of passage.

Goldwyn Films at F. P. L. Theater.

St. Louis—The first showing of "Bunny Pulls the Strings" will take place at the Missouri Theater on Sunday, followed by "Godless Men" on Jan. 3. The Missouri is a Paramount house and up to the present time has booked nothing but Paramount attractions.

The idea of the bill was admitted unless accompanied by their parents or guardians. Kienfeld is extending an invitation to all to remain for the regular performance, which begins at 7:30. The program has Wallace Reid in "The Charm School" as the feature.

Joe Plunkett at the Strand will cooperate with some of the New York newspapers who are sponsoring special performances in the morning. Two have already been arranged, one with the World and the other with the Mail. Next Wednesday morning 4,000 children will be the guests of the World and on Thursday a similar number as guests of the Globe.

The Charles Ray in "Nineteen and Phyllis" will be shown at these performances as well as "Edgar's Saw" at Booth Tarkington's comedy. There will be a special Christmas frolic in three scenes and special films for the children. Mrs. Julian Goldman has contributed $300 with which candy will be bought for the children.

England Recovering

So Says Major A. P. Holt, in from Britain—Talks of Film Conditions There

That the next two months will see England sail ing into a period of financial and industrial depression is the prediction voiced by Major A. P. Holt, Chairman of Pathé Freres Ltd., according to London last week for conferences with Paul Brunet.

The speedy return of normal finance conditions in England, where it cannot be delayed beyond another eight weeks” said Major Holt, yesterday “makes us hopeful soon of effecting some much needed reforms in our methods of film distribution, which are a hold-over from the time of the beginning of the war. I refer to our pernicious system of booking attractions 18 months in advance.

“This is especially hard on the distributor, who frequently sees no return for product ordered and sold out within many months afterwards. In the meantime many of these attractions have become passe, which decreases their value to the exhibitor due to the national dissatisfaction with his patrons It also postpones action on fresh product. All around, the money loss has been considerable. I have been struck by this experience with Mr. Brunet, and also with Elmer Pearson, and have hopes of restoring the practical basis of distribution to English Exhibitors which prevailed before the war-together with improvements which progress in the industry has brought about in America."

Referring to the theater operations of the Provincial Cinematograph Theaters of which he is a director, Major Holt said:

“Some time next June our company will open one in Brighton which now is being completed at a total cost of $1,500,000. It will be equipped with the stage, and operators, and a large orchestra will accompany screen performances. It may interest you to know that a highly profitable feature in conjunction with our provincial picture theaters is the cafe conducted for the convenience of the theater patrons on the premises. These places, where well-prepared light meals are served at popular prices, not only are self-supporting, but are the means of sending many individuals and family parties directly to the theater box-office whose patronage otherwise would be missed.”

Rivoli Anniversary Jan. 2

The Rivoli will celebrate its third anniversary during the week beginning Jan. 2, postponing it one week to prevent conflict with the Christmas week celebrations. Cecil B. De Mille, connected with Forbidden East, will be the screen attraction during Anniversary Week. Agnes Ayres, Conrad Nagel, Theodore Roberts and George Wills are cast in prominent roles.

Hugo Riesenfeld will be host to the dramatic reviewers of New York on Sunday, when he will give an informal tea at the Rivoli from 4 to 6.

inasmuch as Jensen and Von Herberg have not bought a controlling interest in the company, in question, the houses cannot be considered as a part of the Jensen and Von Herberg chain and that until they are advertised as such, the director of this firm cannot be taken for granted that Jensen and Von Herberg control them. They state that they have no objection to selling to Jensen and Von Herberg for the houses that they own or control, but all the branch managers except J. A. Koer pel of Goldwyn and L. M. Cobbs of Vitagraph have refused to recognize the circuit. These two have sold to the circuit. Of course it is taken for granted First National is selling to the circuit, since all the members are holders of First National’s subbranches.

For Famous Players-Lasky, Jensen and Von Herberg are buying from them for their own houses and have given permission for the member of the company to act in business. Famous Players will build theaters in Seattle, Portland and Tacoma if they do not allow Paramount pictures to be shown at Famous Players’ own terms.

Owing to the stand taken against the circuit by the branch managers most of their companies have been bought out of the company and Jensen and Von Herberg have formed the company independently. The other branch managers claim that the reason for this seeming favoritism is shown when Van and Jensen inasmuch as they are not avowed members of Famous Players will build theaters in Seattle, Portland and Tacoma and if they do not allow Paramount pictures to be shown at Famous Players’ own terms.

Warner Win Out

Thomas and Friedman, attorneys for Warners and Essanay stated yesterday that Parrot came into possession of the Chaplin prints through the Patent. Price, Inc., who had purchased them from a man named Charles Berman. Berman, the attorneys claimed, secured the prints from the General Film Co., of Canada, Ltd., that corporation went into bankruptcy. The plaintiffs alleged that the Essanay company had manager the prints to the General Film Co. and that the receiver had therefore no right to sell what the company did not own. The court maintained this contention.

Alfred B. Lind, attorney for Parrot Films, Inc., stated yesterday that he intended appealing the decision.

brooklyn Exhibitors Charged With Fraudulently Advertising "Way Down East"

David Rosenzweig, Morris Gross and Henry Katz, operating in Brooklyn as the Advance Theaters Enterprise, which conducts the Echo theater at 368 Bushwick Ave, will appear for examination in the Williamsburgh Bridge Plaza Court this morning on a charge of advertising Homespun Folks, a Thomas H. Ince Prod., for Associated Producers, a "tale of 'Way Down East'" with the last three words in type many times the size of "Homespun Folks."

The case is identical with the recent one in Union Hill, N. J., where two exhibitors were fined and held for grand jury on a similar charge.

The Griffith office has been buoyed up by these various attempts at benefiting from the prestige of "Way Down East" as a result of sending out a warning letter to exhibitors, pointing out the Union Hill and now the Brooklyn happenings.

An unsolicited editorial from Motion Picture News' (Issue December 18th)

William de Mille. Our hat is off! His new picture: "Midsummer Madness." A winner! Artistically, dramatically, and from the box-office standpoint. Some pictures are reviewer pictures; some are box-office pictures. This is both. Proving it is possible. Wonder why he only started to make pictures a year and a half ago. Don't like to overestimate but think perhaps he has been waiting for pictures to catch up to the kind he evidently can make. Anyway, we call this the idiodrama of the future. Not a bit of "movie" stuff in it. No bolstering, nor artificial has. Has all the hold on an audience, all the expressive acting, all the unity and construction of the best spoken drama on Broadway—and more than most, together with artistry of setting, the completeness of which the stage can never give. Predict a long run at the Criterion, and a big incentive to others to do likewise. Happy selection of appeal—this. Just as "Over the Hill" hits the mother-child theme, so "Midsummer Madness" goes to the heart of the almost universal husband-wife problem. And it will arouse much discussion and a universal good.

Alfred S. Black Makes Charges Against S. Cohen Relative to Screen Advertising—Latter Replies

Alfred S. Black in a statement of approximately 3,000 words issued yesterday attacked Sidney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. and his interest in national advertising on the screen.

Black by using "the deadly parallel" pointed out the charges he made at the time of the Cleveland Convention and which were published on June 9 last, also making statements regarding what he claims is actually occurring at this time. At the same time he asks Cohen certain pointed questions regarding these alleged happenings. Among the questions he asks Cohen relative to the national advertising on the screen are what interest Cohen has in "the exclusive contract with the Baumer Film Co."

Black asks at another point the same question he put forth at the convention, who was paying Fred Herrington's expenses and salary and states that Herrington is soliciting the exhibitors of the country to show the Baumer Films. Black also asks (Continued on Page 2) —Merry Xmas—

New Unit Formed on Coast—Starts Work Shortly
(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Al J. Kerrigan who until recently was starred by Robert Brunton on the Hodkinson program has formed his own producing company to be known as the J. Warren Kerrigan Prod.

Kerrigan has secured the rights to a number of works and is expected to start work shortly after the first of the year. Production will probably be at the Hollywood Studios, Inc.

who is paying the expenses of Sam Bullock of Cleveland, Sam Berman of New York and others who are engaged in soliciting business for Baum-ner Films. He asks whether Baummer is paying them or whether the money comes from the treasury of the M. P. T. O., to which exhibitors make contributions. He asks whether it is not true that the Baummer Film Co. holds a re~ vised exclusive contract with the M. P. T. O. and its affiliated state organizations to show its product.

Added queries were along the same general line. A copy of the statement was sent to Mr. Cohen.

"The interests opposed to the exhibitors organizing for protection are again using the worn out tools that failed at the Cleveland convention.

"This statement issued by Alfred S. Black is the same kind of literary sewerage which was voted down unianimously at the national convention and insofar as I am concerned, I can only say that there is as much truth in Black's statement as there was in his statement at Cleveland that he was an independent exhibitor and had no financial connection with the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. His declaration, as the entire industry knows, was dissipated by the admiss ion of Adolph Zukor that Famous Players owned a financial interest in Baumer's chain of theaters.

In conclusion, Cohen said that the exhibitors must realize that the interests that have always been opposed to their organizing would keep up these attacks from time to time and that the stronger the organization became the "more desperate" they would become.

New Theater in St. Louis (Special to WID'S DAILY)

Open Shop Possible in L. A. (Special to WID'S DAILY)
Los Angeles—There is a possibility that the local theaters may operate on the open shop basis, so far as musicians are concerned. The orchestra at the newly opened Mission theater issued an ultimatum to the management asking for increased pay because a railing had not been placed around the lobbies. The Theater Owners' Association of Los Angeles holds a blanket contract with the musicians' union and in that way concerted action may be taken.

Sees Bright Future for Short Reels (Special to WID'S DAILY)
Los Angeles—The following is the report, in part, turned in to Special Pictures by Max Roth, after an extended trip in the East:

"We are experiencing the reaction that all other industries are undergoing in a greater or lesser degree from an overdose of prosperity. The reaction is not dangerous, and after all it is over the result will leave the industry in a more healthy condition. Short subjects are slowly but surely coming into their own, and the instances where the two-reeler is featured over the feature are more frequent every day. Developments show that exhibitors are comparing the two-reeler favorable with the longer pictures in entertainment value, and this will logically compel the producer to set a higher standard of production."

Putting It Over
Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

(Special to WID’S DAILY)
St. Louis—An unusual exploitation campaign was arranged for “For the Freedom of Ireland.”
The picture received the endorsement of the Friends of Irish Freedom and the Odeon was secured, which was draped with American flags and the flags of the Irish Republic. Cards were distributed to the drug stores, cigar stores and the churches, calling attention to the date of the production. Mayor Kiel agreed to act as speaker on the opening night.
The services of Barney O’Mara, the Irish baritone, were engaged and he sang “Mother Machree,” “Macushla,” “The Soldiers’ Song,” “Minstrel Boy,” and other Irish airs. The McGlade children in Irish dances entertained the crowd. A Pathе Weekly preceded the production showing late reels of Ireland. Boy Scouts belonging to the various branches throughout the city of the Friends of Irish Freedom rendered their services in selling tickets, and this coupled with the agitation in the newspapers of the burning of Cork and the rest of the news in the daily papers, succeeded in bringing out one of the largest crowds that ever attended a picture theater in St. Louis.

DIRECTION......Good particularly regarding settings

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. All right

LIGHTINGS ...................... Fair

CAMERA WORK ................. Average

PLAYERS......Matheson Lang handles title role very well; others quite all right

EXTERIORS....Many pretty Chinese garden scenes

INTERIORS ................. Real Oriental atmosphere

DETAIL ...................... Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY......Stefn Chinese parent who kills his daughter and attempts to dishonor a mother for an outrage against the "house of Wu"

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,650 feet

The second Stoll production to be released is an adaptation of the English stage play, "Mr. Wu." It has for its main feature a really effective and realistic Oriental atmosphere. The settings both interior and exterior are splendid and there's a fine variety of location. The scenes in Mr. Wu's garden are very pretty and always the background is in keeping with the action.

There are a great many titles—more than are really necessary—although it is quite evident that the picture has been cut considerably in which case the titles may be needed. However, this is no great fault. The plot is rather slight but very little time has been wasted in getting through it so that the little less than five reels that are presented tell the story in a straightforward manner and there is no obvious padding.

Matheson Lang who plays the title role is a convincing Mr. Wu. His performance is forceful and his work carries the picture because there is no other character given any particular prominence in the plot. The direction is quite satisfactory both as to players and settings, the latter especially being given excellent care and the matter of detail is well provided for.

Wu Li Chang, a rich and influential Chinese has a pretty daughter, Nang Ping, who is in love with Basil Gregory, son of a tea exporter in Kowloon, the home of Wu. One day Nang Ping is found in the garden in Basil's embrace. Basil is imprisoned by Wu and according to custom Wu must sacrifice his daughter, who has been dishonored by the white man. Wu kills his own daughter and proceeds to avenge the wrong.

Basil's father summons Mr. Wu to his office but cannot learn the whereabouts of his son although the Chinese promises that if Mrs. Gregory will call that evening—alone—he will help her search the garden for her son. Mrs. Gregory's Chinese servant, scenting Wu's treachery, accompanies her mistress and remains outside the locked compartment and at an opportune moment throws a vial of poison through the transom.

Mr. Wu's plan is to dishonor the boy's mother and then free the boy but it happens that as Mrs. Gregory is about to drink the poison and save herself from the Chinese' justifiable grasp, Wu desires to drink from the cup which has touched her lips and he drinks the poison. The servants had been instructed to release the prisoner at the sound of the gong and as he writhes with the effect of the poison, Wu strikes the gong. The Gregory family decide to leave the Orient.

Play Up the Title and Promise Them Real Chinese Atmosphere

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In "Mr. Wu" Stoll Film are presenting a first rate program picture. It is the sort of picture that the largest majority of picture patrons—the fan crowd—want. The Oriental atmosphere always makes a hit with this crowd and in "Mr. Wu" they will get all they could possibly want and it's good too. The Chinese gardens and wharf and the interiors of Mr. Wu's house all provide the proper Chinese color.

You can tell them it's an adaptation of the London stage success and promise them a fine performance of the character in the title role. Refer to the Chinese methods of revenge and the extreme penalty for dishonor in a Chinese home. Use the line: "Pretty Nang Ping died by her father's hand because she dishonored his house through her love for a white boy. See this latest Stoll production at the blank theater."

Ballin’s First Independent Production Sincerely Made

Hugo Ballin presents “PAGAN LOVE”
Ballin Prod.—Hodkinson

DIRECTOR .................. Hugo Ballin
AUTHOR .................... Achmed Abdullah
SCENARIO BY . . . . Hugo Ballin, George S. Helman and the Author CAMERAMEN ............ J. Roy Hunt and H. Farrell
AS A WHOLE ........ Questionable whether average American audience will appreciate or enjoy story based upon sacrifice of Chinaman for American girl

STORY . . . Somewhat similar in a sense to theme of “Broken Blossoms,” but lacks artistic appeal of that production

DIRECTION . . . Generally very good
PHOTOGRAPHY ............. Good
LIGHTINGS ................ Satisfactory
CAMERA WORK ........ Satisfactory, at times unusually excellent PLAYERS . . . Mabel Ballin makes sincere effort to portray blind girl. Togo Yamamoto suffers when his work is compared to Richard Barthelmess

EXTERIORS ........ Some beautiful Chinese shots
INTERIORS ............. Lifelike and satisfying
DETAIL ................ Very well worked out
CHARACTER O F STORY . . Chinaman who brings joy into blind girl’s life sacrifices his love after her sight is restored and she hates him

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . 5,800 feet

Hugo Ballin’s first independent production, “Pagan Love,” is a mighty sincere effort to do a very difficult job in an artistic manner. Ballin, who for some years was art director for Goldwyn, is on record that he is trying to do something different, and in a sense his first independent production gives promise that he intends to carry through along this line.

It is, however, going to be extremely difficult to get a definite line upon the possibilities of Ballin’s accomplishment through his first production, because the theme is such that it is questionable whether or not the average American picture audience likes this sort of theme—where a Chinaman, no matter how noble, is in love with an American girl. True, in the Ballin production this Chinaman sacrifices his love for the girl after her sight is restored and commits suicide, paving the way for a love affair between his friend, the surgeon who restored the sight of his beloved, and the girl.

One of the chief objections which Griffith’s “Broken Blossoms” had to overcome was this very idea of a Chinaman loving a white woman. Ballin will be up against the same thought, and where the performance of Richard Barthelmess was one of the greatest characterizations the screen has ever known, so much cannot be said of Togo Yamamoto, who plays the part of the sacrificing Chinaman, although he gives a very good performance, all in all. But the lights and shades and shading of the Chinaman as played by Barthelmess completely overshadows the usual work of Yamamoto. The remainder of the cast is quite satisfying. Mabel Ballin as the blind girl is photographed advantageously and does some very creditable work, and Nellie Fillmore, as Mrs. O’Grady, who runs a pawn shop on the Bowery, is very human.

Probably the outstanding feature of this is the production itself. Always a stickler for detail, Ballin has really produced a picture that technically stands up very well. There are several shots of Chinese life and settings that are extremely well done and it is somewhat regrettable that this painstaking work was based upon a story the theme of which, so far as popular appeal is concerned, is questionable indeed.

Gives Big Chance For Unusual Lobby Display

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

While it is a question whether or not your people are going to like a story where the love of a Chinaman for an American girl is the dominant theme, on the other hand, you can tell them that “Pagan Love” is a first class production with some exquisite Chinese shots, and it may get them in.

Your chief point of appeal will be that the production is based upon a story which ran serially in “The Pictorial Review,” which enjoys a huge circulation, especially among women, and you know how important women are in your clientele.

Other than this you have practically no names of importance to attract the crowd.

If you go in for lobby display you will have ample opportunity to do a great deal, because the Chinese atmosphere is rich and colorful, and you can make the front of your house very attractive indeed.

If you use catchlines play them upon the theme of a Chinaman’s sacrifice for an American girl. That may get over.

Make sure to keep your crowd from breaking in on this through the running. It is one of those productions that should be seen from the very start.
A Bit Slow In Starting But Makes Up For It In Fine Last Reels

DIRECTION . . . . . . . . Last half much better than first

PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Very good

LIGHTINGS ..................... Good

CAMERA WORK ............... Splendid particularly in getting in long shots

STAR ....................... Takes some new "chances" in this

SUPPORT ...................... All well suited

EXTERIORS ..................... Real western

INTERIORS ...................... Very few

DETAIL ....................... Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY . . . . . Cowboy in love with herder's daughter has some rescuing to do before he wins her

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . . About 6,000 feet

Because the latter reels contain such a splendid amount of real live action, daring riding and several great thrills, it probably won't matter much that the first reels are a bit slow. They spend too much time "talking" in the sub-titles at first and about one reel less would make the picture a whole lot better. The last reel or two contain enough action, however, to satisfy the lover of thrills.

The story provides ample opportunity for Tom Mix to "show off" at his various stunts and there are some good ones. He does some well calculated landing in the saddle, some fast riding, jumping up into trees, rescues a girl from a runaway horse and the biggest thrill of all is when he slides down the side of a mountain, fastens a rope to a tree projecting out on the side, then swings himself down to the road below where he lands in the saddle of one of the gang he is after. This is a very fine bit.

The material isn't a knockout of itself but the star puts a good deal of kick into it with his riding and rescue stunts so that "Prairie Trails" will be sure to satisfy those who like this type of western. There's the usual bar room row and the outlaw gang that has to be subdued and finally the "goil" is won. It's one of the liveliest Mix has had in some time.

Tex Benton (Mix), a cowboy from Texas is in love with Janet McWhorter, whose father owns a sheep ranch. The girl's father is willing that she marry Tex but the latter would be required to live on the ranch and help tend the sheep. Tex objects to the condition and rides off looking for a fight to soothe his anger. He gets one and after "cleaning out" the town saloon Tex escapes and rides away.

He rescues a girl who is on a runaway horse but Tex is being pursued by Purdy, the town badman, so he gently places the girl in a safe hiding place and continues his escape. Tex then comes upon Janet and they decide to look for a minister but Purdy in the meantime has learned of a big reward offered for the girl, now believed to have been kidnapped by Tex and so Tex rides off to again save the girl while Janet believing her hero has really kidnapped the girl—a married woman—starts for her home alone.

Tex makes another daring rescue and sends the girl safely on the way to her husband, but that isn't all. Purdy has now kidnapped Janet so another chase follows. This is the one where Mix swings from a tree on the side of the mountain, saves his sweetheart and they are finally married.

Tell Them Mix Has Another Live One In This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you cater to a crowd that likes real thrilling westerns, the shootin', fighting, riding kind, be sure to give them "Prairie Trails." Particularly if the star is popular this will make a big hit. It won't matter much that the first reel or so don't amount to very much, other than conversation because the last few reels are full of regular thrillers, daring riding and real wild west atmosphere.

Some stills of the thrills advertised by Fox— the swing from the mountain side—will be sure to attract attention so you can decorate your lobby with pictures that will bring them in. Announce it as the liveliest Tom Mix picture in some time. Promise them some real exciting rescue stuff and say the star has some new stunts for their approval.

"Flying Pat" is a bright, snappy and wholly reasonable entertainment all the way through, but particularly so during the time that Dorothy Gish is before the camera. The little star displays a very fascinating personality, and makes a most amusing character of the inconsistent young wife. It is a farce, and you aren't supposed to regard it otherwise than as a good story, and as such, it will please almost any type of audience.

Star's Name and a Promise of Amusement Will Put This Over

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Dorothy Gish's name will probably count for the most in advertising this production, and you can safely say that the star is at her best. Also make a strong play of the novelty and the abundance of the slyly humorous comedy in the piece. You can do this in any number of ways, based upon the numerous almost-tragic situations.

You can also talk about the excellence of the production, commenting on the airplane angle. This point will also make good material for lobby displays and stunt exploitation.

Make clear that it is a rollicking farce, with a succession of laughs from start to finish, and promise them that the story is absolutely new.

The picture is going to please most of your audiences and you can count on this in the make-up of your advertising campaign.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Woman who fights for twenty years to forget the stigma of her illegitimate child

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 6,300 feet

It seems to be quite a waste of effort to produce a picture of this calibre and offer it for entertainment. Neither the story nor the production accorded it come near the entertainment mark. In the first place Emerson Hough's story is such an uninteresting affair dealing with a poor unfortunate woman whose grown son returns to the home town to find that his birth was illegitimate and there follows a lot of unpleasant occurrences, many of them implausible and certainly lacking in real dramatic strength.

For instance, the angry townspeople, believing the son has killed a man storm the jail to lynch him and when they cannot find him they go to his mother's home and smash everything in it that is smashable and then break down the gate outside, hence the title "The Broken Gate." This is only one of the very implausible instances. There are the usual courtroom scenes that afford so little interest.

Bessie Barriscale is sincere in her efforts as the woman and the cast consists of some well known players such as Joseph Kilgour, Sam DeGrasse, and Marguerite De La Motte. But they are so limited in opportunity that even their performances don't help matters very much. A very choppy continuity is another fault and the photography is poor. The production generally isn't at all the sort that is being offered at this time.

Aurora Lane has spent twenty years trying to "forget" and has sold hats to provide for her child. He is now a grown man and comes home only to learn of the stigma of his birth. Don, the son, gets into trouble right away by fighting a man who passes a remark about his mother and is sent to jail. Brooks, a lawyer, long in love with Aurora, secures his release. Don is in love with Anne Oglesby, whose guardian is William Henderson, the Judge in Don's home town.

Don is later suspected of murdering the man who had passed a remark about his mother and he is put to trial. Henderson, who is to prosecute the boy, turns out to be the man responsible for Aurora's shame and the woman as a last resort goes to him and forces him to save the boy's life. In the meantime the townspeople wreck Aurora's home and Don escapes from the jail in time to save his mother from their insults. Then it turns out a half-witted boy of the town killed the man. Henderson then offers to marry Aurora but she refuses. The way is made clear for Don and Anne and Brooks, the lawyer, is happy with Aurora.

The Star's Name Your Only Hope Here

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The production isn't one that will stand any praise for its excellence and the story is very wishy-washy drama with an unpleasant circumstance the basis of a long drawn out series of situations. Of course the final happy ending smooths everything off nicely but it's too late and insufficient to make up for the previous weaknesses.

· Should you play it use the name of the author although the picture won't gain any laurels for him. You have some very good names to work with in the members of the cast so you might mention them if you think it advisable. Bessie Barriscale, an old favorite, may have enough admirers in your community to satisfy the box office demands.
THE DICE OF DESTINY were cast and David Marsh took one of the fork roads. Would his fate have been different had he taken another road? This great question of life itself is the theme of "Roads of Destiny," O. Henry's big story which made Channing Pollock's big play and now Goldwyn's stirring picture.

JUST AS IN "MADAME X," Pauline Frederick plays a character role in "Roads of Destiny," an adventuress who manipulates the roulette wheel in a gaming den. Exhibitors will find that "Roads of Destiny" has just the romantic heroic flavor that makes for crowded houses and crowded lobbies.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,212 feet

Bebe Daniels and her latest starring vehicle for Realart, an adaptation of the successful musical comedy "Oh, Lady, Lady," promises to be one of the season screen comedy hits. There's some really fine comedy contained in it and the complications that arise over the hero's attempt to marry a society girl afford opportunity for exceptionally good comedy business.

The direction is responsible for a good deal of the fun in the picture, for never an opportunity is missed to get a laugh and the man with the megaphone certainly had real co-operation from the players for they never miss a chance to get your attention and make you laugh. The comedy business all the way through is natural and not forced. The titles are great. Whoever wrote them knows how to do it.

All told "Oh Lady, Lady," is sure to please. The laughs are continuous and at the Rialto they certainly weren't able to restrain themselves even if they wanted to. There's one especially big laugh when the heroine is "bawling out" her ex-press agent, said press agent being made to feel so small that he actually shrinks on the screen and the more the lady talks the smaller the fellow gets until finally he has to tip-toe to reach the door knob and let himself out.

Walter Hiers, the hero of the tale, bids good-bye to his country sweetheart, Bebe Daniels, vowing he's a "one woman" man but time passes and Walter is about to rehearse for his wedding to Charlotte Woods, a society girl while Bebe, now Rilla Rooke, famous actress, is just returning from an engagement abroad. On the train she meets Harrison Ford, the best man to be at the wedding, and he falls for Rilla.

At the hotel Rilla learns of her former sweetheart's wedding through her former press agent. Intending to extend congratulations Rilla phones Walter that she is coming to his house. Mistaking the cause of her coming for trouble, Walter enlists the aid of the press agent to help cover up his "past." But the press agent bawls things up badly by telling Rilla to pretend she's a vamp and to claim Walter as her lover. Thinking she's helping Walter out, Rilla agrees and of course the wedding is "off."

Incidentally Rilla loses the good graces of her admirer, Harrison Ford, and there's the usual complications following, all providing a lot of fun, until finally everything is straightened out to the satisfaction of all and they "live happy ever after."

Don't Be Afraid to Talk About It and Promise Them Real Amusement

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You won't go wrong in booking this one if you're after a real live comedy. "Oh, Lady Lady" is a good example of what can be done with a musical comedy adaptation when you know how. The situations in themselves are all fun makers and some cleverly written titles add a good deal to the picture's general amusement. Promises will be in order and if they don't get enjoyment out of this, then they're all wrong, not the picture.

Play up the star's name. It she is provided with material like this, she has a good chance to become a popular favorite. Walter Hiers deserves a good deal of credit also. His genial personality and keen sense of humor are dominant all the time. You have a good title to work with and you should make it your business to satisfy the box office with the picture. Catchlines would get them in and you need not be afraid to make promises.

CHARACTER OF STORY .... Boy from New England fishing village goes to the city where he becomes a victim of “high life”

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ... About 5,800 feet

Eugene O’Brien in his latest production for Selznick plays the familiar role of the wholesome country chap who goes to the city to “become someone” but through improper influence mixes in with the city’s “high lifers.” The situations are old, but despite the fact the story is so smoothly told and regardless of its straightforward manner of presenting some indelicate facts, so well directed that it may be that those who may object to some of the story, will have a change of heart and accept it for its production value.

The story is developed logically and with few exceptions implausibility is not given much room. There are some pretty shots of a New England fishing village and another good water scene showing the hero and heroine marooned on some rocks while the incoming tide has covered up the sand bar by which they reached the little island. Eugene O’Brien is given stellar prominence, but really the acting honors are pretty evenly divided between the star, Ellen Cassity and Frank Losee, who contribute splendid performances.

Eugene is tired of life in the small New England fishing village and when Frank Losee, as a rich old man who has been regaining his health at the shore, offers to take the fellow back to the city with him. Eugene thinking it the chance of a lifetime accepts the offer but refuses to go near the Mission as his folks had hoped he would.

For no special reason as far as the audience can learn, Losee brings the hero to New York, buys him city clothes and introduces him to “high life” generally. The rich man has many girls, but Ellen Cassity is the favorite, so naturally when he sees the country boy “shining up” to Ellen, he presents his objections to the lady in question and demands that she explain to the boy just what she is, but the girl really loves her new found lover and longs for the good things of life.

It happens therefore that she accepts O’Brien’s proposal of marriage and after an attempt to tell him of her past which he refuses to hear, they are married and prepare to go away, but just then the rich man lets himself into Ellen’s apartment with a latchkey. He explains that he pays for the apartment, etc. Even then the boy’s innocence demands further explanations and the shock sends him away from his bride. He soon forgives her and goes back to the apartment only to find that she has killed Losee when he insisted that she go back to him. Eugene takes her back to his home in New England, but she is ill and by the time the arms of the law reach out for her she is dead.

Talk About the Production and Use the Star’s Name

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is strictly a big town picture and should go much better in the larger houses of the key cities where the audiences are made up of a variety of tastes and where a picture of this kind will have a much better chance to get over. Because of the rather straightforward manner in which they deal with a certain type of woman of the world, it is hardly possible “Broadway and Home” will be very popular regardless of the production.

Then again there are those who depend on the “movies” for their insight into New York’s high life. For this class O’Brien’s latest vehicle is real “meat.” For catchlines say: “It was a case of ‘Broadway or Home’ and he chose Broadway. See the result of the choice in Eugene O’Brien’s latest.” Or, “Broadway hired him away from the fishing village but he returned in ‘Broadway and Home.’”

Good Production and Fine Acting Make "Miracle" Picture Distinctive

"WHEN DAWN CAME"

Producers Security Corp.—State Rights

DIRECTOR .................... Colin Campbell
AUTHOR ........................ Mrs. Hugh C. Dierker
SCENARIO BY .................. Mrs. Hugh C. Dierker
CAMERAMAN ................... William Foster

AS A WHOLE—Splendid production accorded another "miracle" photoplay which has considerable that is new and really worth while

STORY—Attractively told and especially well acted but provided with too extensive detail at times

DIRECTION—Very good for the most part; dwells on unimportant things longer than necessary

PHOTOGRAPHY ................... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ........................ Many effective bits
CAMERA WORK ................... Very good PLAYERS—L. C. Shumway gives especially fine performance; Coleen Moore as the blind girl and James O. Barrows as the priest are very good

EXTERIORS—Some beautiful scenes of San Juan Capistrano

INTERIORS ........................ Good

DETAIL ............................ Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY—Noted surgeon who becomes a degenerate because of a woman's faithlessness is reclaimed by faith of blind girl

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,900 feet

Producers Security Corp. have a really pleasing picture to offer on the state rights market in "When Dawn Came." It is another "miracle" picture but has enough that is new and original to distinguish it from any of its predecessors and will prove satisfying on its own merits. A really artistic and careful production has been given to the story by Mrs. Hugh Dierker, produced by Mr. Dierker and directed by Colin Campbell.

It is not so much a "miracle" that brings about the return of faith to the once famous surgeon but the sincerity of faith and purity of a little blind girl and a belief in himself with the realization that his successful operation has given sight to the child who had never seen.

Colin Campbell has directed the picture very well for the most part. There are one or two instances which are not especially good but which will not discredit his other good work. For instance when the physician learns he has been betrayed by the woman he loves there is a scene in which he makes a grand entry carrying a box of flowers as big as himself which he flings upon the woman after he has choked her. One title "I thought you had decided between Father Farrell and me"—or something to that effect—is not good.

Coleen Moore in the instant where as the little blind girl, she sees the world for the first time, does a great bit of acting. L. C. Shumway as the surgeon gives a splendid performance all the way through as does James O. Barrows as the priest and a little freckled-face lad would have had the picture to himself if they gave him more to do.

Dr. Brandon has devoted his sole efforts to charity patients. He meets Norma Ashley, a young authoress who interests him greatly and finally persuades him to join forces with Dr. Thurston, a friend of hers who has a fashionable practice. Brandon consents and gradually drifts away from his good work in the slums heedless of the advice of his good friend Father Farrell.

Eventually Brandon learns that the girl with whom he is now in love, is not worthy and he gradually becomes a man of the streets and sinks to the lowest. His wanderings bring him to San Juan Capistrano, where Father Farrell is now located. The good priest takes the man under his care again and through the influence of a little blind girl who prays daily for sight, Brandon begins to regain his faith and when his operation gives the child her sight, his faith is restored. The wicked woman seeks him and begs forgiveness but he has come to love the little girl.

Be Sure to Tell Them It's Different Because It Is

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can book "When Dawn Came" and be quite sure that they will like it. You can tell them it's another "miracle" picture but that its different. It has a distinctive appeal and an originality of its own. You can promise them splendid acting and a picture pleasing to look at. The Henschlagel lighting process is used extensively and to good advantage.

If you are in the habit of playing state rights offerings, you have all the more reason to talk about this because it is far above the average picture handled for this market. You can use the names of the players if you wish to.

The work of several of the players in this picture, especially Coleen Moore and Shumway will gain many admirers for them. You can promise them a picture good to look at and catchlines can be used to good advantage if you need them to get your folks interested.

Motion Picture News
One feels inclined to place a gold seal opposite Allan Dwans name in his first production for Associated Producers. "The Forbidden Thing," which he adapted and directed from Mary Mears' vivid and vital story of a "faith that would not die," is obviously one of the top-notchers. He has constructed the feature in narrative form and has placed remarkable emphasis upon its rugged simplicity. The tale is peopled with figures who are actually lifelike—whose joys and sorrows are touched upon with genuine feeling. It is dramatic to the core—but not the drama of the theatre, but of life.

Moving Picture World
"The Forbidden Thing," an Allan Dwan production, while sentimental and dramatic, is quite out of the ordinary in plot and should touch the right spot in the public's heart. There is something about it that makes you like it in spite of the rather drawn-out story. The lives of the principal characters are tangle into an almost unravelble skein, and that, of course makes you eager to see "how it is going to come out."

Letter from Tom Moore, Garden Theatre, Washington, D. C.
"The Forbidden Thing" has lived up to its remarkable Sunday opening, when, in the face of the rainy weather, it did within $15.25 of the year's record. An unusual opening does not always guarantee an unusual week, but "The Forbidden Thing" has done such a steady business that we are holding it over for a second week. While exhibitors can get specials of such quality, they need not fear control of their programs by any interests at any time.

Moving Picture World
"In the Heart of a Fool" is unlike the thrilling adventures stories with which Mr. Dwan's name has been associated in the past. Into the story are woven three separate romances culminating in a striking dramatic climax. Mr. Dwan's artistic perception is evidenced in lavishly mounted interior settings. The cast assembled by Dwan is strong.

Wire from A. H. Blank, Rialto Theatre, Omaha.
"In the Heart of a Fool" opened a week's engagement at the Rialto Sunday and has broken all house records so far. Monday crowd got beyond control. Swept down the aisles and filled every available inch of space, both upstairs and down, and conservative estimate places number of people in the theatre at one time at forty-one hundred. The Rialto has only twenty-six hundred seats. My heartiest congratulations.

Wire from S. Barrett McCormick, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.
Allan Dwan production of "Splendid Hazard" at premiere presentation Circle theatre this week accepted by press reviews and audience as one of the high lights of screen art. Dwan's masterful direction of the fascinating story which combines all elements of audience appeal assures its financial success. Walthall's work proclaimed greatest of his career. Congratulations to Dwan and Mayflower.

Wire from P. G. Theophelis, Managing Director, Loraine Opera House, Cleveland
"Luck of the Irish" opened at Loraine opera house today and the opera house could not begin to hold the crowd that came in droves to see your wonderful picture. It was capacity afternoon and night. Largest business we have ever done excepting "Mickey." Everybody more than pleased and applause was frequent. We want more pictures like this.

"Soldiers of Fortune," Allan Dwan's picturization of Richard Harding Davis' famous novel, opened at the King's theatre for a week's run. "Soldiers of Fortune" is a picture with an appeal for everyone. It is romance and adventure. Allan Dwan's direction is of the first magnitude, while the playing of Anna Q. Nilsson and Norman Kerry is another feature.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 6,734 feet

George Melford has taken Opie Read's story "The Jucklins" and made a real bit of home entertainment.
It's a picture of life in the old South. Of course there will be those who will find fault with a scene here or logic there but taken all in all the picture holds the interest all the way. He had such a fine atmosphere and worked with such a well selected cast that perhaps Melford won't be blamed very much if he made
"The Juckins" just a bit longer than it ought to be.

The ending might have been finished up a little earlier than it is especially for the benefit of present day audiences who grab their hats the minute they see the ending in sight. Generally speaking, however, the direction is first rate and the humor and pathos reg-erster every time. The mannerisms of the South are well maintained and a truly Southern atmosphere throughout with some beautiful shots of God's country forming the background for the story, make the picture worth while.

Monte Blue is the whole-souled fellow who teaches the village school and falls in love with Mabel Julienne Scott, daughter of Lem Jucklin, splendidly portrayed by Charles Ogle who takes delight in watching his game roosters imitate Dempsey. Fannie Midgely is the lovable mother. Zell Covington as Lem's son and the other members of the cast all do creditable work.

The story in the main has to do with Bill Hawes, a young farmer from Alabama, who, disgusted with farm life, becomes the teacher in the only school in Purdy County, N. C. Bill lives at the home of the Jucklins, Lem and his wife Susan and their boy Alf and daughter Guinea whose education has been paid for by General Lundsford because he wants his son Chyd to marry a polished young lady.

Bill has his hands full in the management of the school due to the Aimes boys, who make things hot for him and who finally try to kill him. He is saved by Guinea who begins to realize she really loves Bill instead of Chyd. Guinea's brother Alf is in love with Millie, the General's daughter, but she is also promised to Dan Stuart, although she loves Alf. Dan threatens Alf because he is aware that Millie loves the poor boy, and so it happens that in a quarrel Dan is killed and Alf accused of murder.

Through Bill's diligence and perseverance it is fi-ally proven that Dan died of heart failure. Then the General, who had broken his son's engagement because the girl's brother was accused of murder, realizes his mistake and allows his daughter Millie to marry Alf while the growing romance between Bill and Guinea is the final shot.

You Should Satisfy Them With This One
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In announcing George Melford's latest production,
"The Jucklins," tell your folks it's an adaptation of Opie Read's novel—a story of old Southern life with its "match-making" customs. You can promise them a splendid Southern atmosphere, beautiful scenery, splendid acting and an all round good picture. You can also promise some bits of good action. There's not a great deal of it, but what there is is good. Mention the fight of the moonshine gang and the burning of the village school.

You can use Monte Blue's name and show stills of him as the teacher of Purdy County school. Catch-lines should prove attractive in your billing and you can call it a picture of home life in the old South. Try these: "If the girl you loved was being forced into an unhappy marriage with another, what would you do? See how this situation occurs with two different couples in The Jucklins and the outcome of each.
You'll enjoy it."

CHARACTER OF STORY.......Hero, released from prison, rescues girl from villain, and saves his buried gold

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION 4,698 feet

There is too great a lack of originality in the story, and too much stereotyped action sequence to lift this above the commonplace. It is "meller" with a stolen child, buried gold, "poipers" and a hard drinking villain, and the plot is familiar enough for the denouement to be obvious before the climax.

Reaves Eason, who plays the villain, also directed, and obtained as satisfactory results as possible. It might be said that he gave a little too much prominence to Reaves Eason Jr., for some of the business of the little fellow is rather far fetched. It is also scarcely reasonable that a prospector's cabin should be exactly as he left it five years before.

There are some thrills, among the best, a good fight on a bridge. It has the kind of stuff that they like in small and neighborhood houses with a certain type of patronage, and in these it will prove a good attraction.

The scene is laid in a wild gulch known as Dead Man's Canyon, in the far west. Fred Watson comes into the lovely country seeking health. With him are his son, Bobbie, and Kate Watson, whom the child knows as "Mama Kate." The lone inhabitant they come upon is Bull Dorgan, a rough bearded hermit, who lives alone in a shack. Bull resents their arrival until he sees the girl, and then he points out an abandoned cabin belonging to a man in prison for murder.

Bull hides his evil desires behind an offer of aid, and tells the sick man that they will be partners in a search for gold buried by Mason, the imprisoned man.

Mason, his innocence established, is pardoned, and returns to the cabin, sullen and bitter against the world. By degrees he is softened by the charm of the girl, whom he takes for Fred's wife, and by the little boy. He confides his story to Kate, disclosing that the location of his partners gold cache is on a map, half of which disappeared the night of the partner's mysterious murder. Dorgan has the other half, and he and Mason engage in a fierce fight for its possession.

Watson succumbs to his ailment, and Mason then discovers that Kate is the dead man's sister. After many months Mason proves that Dorgan is his partner's murderer. He secures the other half of the map, and he and Kate are free to enjoy the buried gold.

Tell Them It's a Western Melodrama, But Go Slow On Promises

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you have a patronage that craves this type of picture, you can make the melodramatic features as strong as you wish. Convey the idea of a mystery about the hidden gold, and also make use of the fight on the bridge, as one of the thrilling scenes. You haven't any particularly well known players to talk about, so you had better devote most of your attention to the points of the story itself. You can use the map locating the hidden treasure to advantage in your advertising, and also make use of the gold hunt atmosphere in your lobby.

Unless you know that your audiences like this sort of picture particularly well, better slide this one over rather softly, and not count on it being taken too seriously.
Love has no doubts, when the world was against him, the true love of his blind sweetheart won the great battle.

She was the only living soul who knew the truth—and they refused to accept her story as evidence on the witness stand.

In the eyes of the world and all the laws of circumstantial evidence he was guilty—guilty of the worse crime imaginable.

Would you accuse him? Don't answer until you see this drama of surprises, thrills, mystery and heart-interest romance.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 6,055 feet

J. Parker Read, Jr.’s latest production for Associated Producers release presents Hobart Bosworth in his initial production for this company and it might as well be said that the star’s usual forceful performance does more than a little to put the picture over.

“A Thousand to One” like a good many other pictures has one main fault and that is its best action is spent in the early reels. The action in the lavish gambling den and then the train wreck all come early in the picture and leave the love story part—and the weakest thing in the story—to finish it up. Of course there is some “Sea Wolf” tactics on the part of the star that help liven things up toward the end but the big thing and the production’s real thrill is the wreck. It’s certainly realistic.

Ethel Gray Terry holds the unique position of the only woman in the cast and Charles West doesn’t really know what he is. One minute he’s the hero’s friend, then he turns villain, has another change of heart and through a word of advice to the unhappy hero, he (the hero) regains his wife’s love and then the friend-villain turns again and tries to stir up a riot in the mining camp superintended by the hero.

William Newlands (Bosworth) finds he owes $50,000. His friend and ill-adviser, Jimmie Munroe, persuades him to marry Beatrice, the wealthy daughter of an old friend of Newland’s father. The man’s better self rebels at the thought of tricking the girl but he finally consents to Jimmie’s plan of a false marriage to secure the needed money. The train in which the two depart for their honeymoon is wrecked.

Beatrice cannot find her husband but through her efforts the life of Steven Crawford, a mine owner, is saved. Newlands is reported to have been burned to death in the wreck. Beatrice goes to Crawford’s cabin where she nurses him back to health, gradually gaining through her care, the love of the man whose life she has saved. Disillusioned and realizing through Newland’s dissipation immediately following the ceremony that her marriage was a failure, Beatrice stays on at the cabin but refuses to listen to Crawford’s love making.

So it happens that when Newland’s who escaped from the wreck, seeks employment at the mine, he is not recognized under his beard by Beatrice. Thinking that the girl is happy with Crawford, Newlands decides to remain out of her life. He becomes foreman of the mine and through his superman power he brings law and order to the discontented workers. Eventually Jimmie arrives on the scene, tries to turn the workers against Newlands but is unsuccessful. In the end Beatrice and Newlands are happily reunited.

Play Up the Star and Promise Them a Good Thrill

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Your best bet in this is to work with names. Use the producer’s name extensively and tell them it is J. Parker Read, Jr’s, first production for Associated Producers in which Hobart Bosworth is starred. Play up the star’s name extensively and recall his previous success such as the “Sea Wolf,” “The Brute Master” and “His Own Law.” Tell them about the train wreck and promise them a real thrill in this.

Use the lines: “See J. Parker Read Jr.’s latest for Associated Producers in which there is only one woman player. It’s a real man’s picture but the women will like it too.” Or you could use: “Ladies are you sure you know your husband? Beatrice did not recognize her husband under a beard. See ‘A Thousand to One’ for this unusual situation.”

Schwalbe Predicts Readjustment

There is no question in the mind of the alert exhibitor that the general depression is sure to have its reflex in the box office, at least during the first six months of 1921.

Production costs, distributing costs and exhibitors' expenses must be cut to a period of readjustment, and prepare themselves for retrenchment, because, in our opinion, it would be folly to believe that our business will be immune from the general trend of other lines to economize in every particular. Our business, like other businesses, must find itself on a substantial foundation as soon as a full day's work is given by everyone connected with the industry, for a fair day's pay. This adjustment will be brought about by the box office returns, at our theater doors, and gradually work down through exchange, distributor and finally the manufacturer.

H. O. SCHWALBE,
Secretary-Treasurer Asso. First Natl. Pictures, Inc.

Quality Product Coming

By this time next year it is my belief that only half as many pictures will be made as are now being produced. The quality will be higher. There is no longer any room for mediocre pictures; but there is as great, if not a greater demand than ever, for truly big productions. By big, I do not necessarily mean expensive, but rather big in the sense of power to stir the emotions or touch the heart. A simple, inexpensive play is bigger than a $500,000 production if it achieves this end.

The expectation of the Goldwyn company is that it is more profitable to make one great picture than half a dozen ordinary ones. And there can be no question about the attitude of exhibitors. Most assuredly they would rather run a good attraction for a week than a poor one for two days: therefore the logical aim of the producer is to supply pictures that are strong enough to hold through a week's engagement or longer.

We are looking to authors as the important factor in the development of the motion picture to its fullest power. Rex Beach, Rupert Hughes, Gertrude Atherton, Basil King, Gouverneur Morris, Mary Roberts Rinehart and Leroy Scott, members of the eminent Authors Pictures Corporation founded in the Spring of 1919, were pioneers in a movement that has now reached its second stage. Not content to stop at having their plays and novels adapted for the screen, these authors are writing original stories for motion pictures. They are spending much time at the Culver City studios where they may keep in close touch with the production of their works from the preparation of the continuity to the editing of the completed film. This is in the strictest sense the authors of the pictures that carry their names.

For a long time the cry of the public has been for better stories, dramas and comedies with more life and feeling and animation. The answer to this demand is to enlist the cooperation of the most successful writers of fiction that the country affords. This is precisely what we are doing for 1921, and the years to come. Stories of the highest type are now at our disposal and we have the directors, players and studio equipment needed to give them the finest possible interpretation.

SAMUEL GOLDWYN.

The Outlook for Export Trade

Since the termination of the war the European producers have been preparing for their re-entry into the foreign markets on an aggressive scale. American films will find active competition from British, French, German, Italian and Scandinavian producing centers. From the standpoint of the best interests of the industry, this competition will have a wholesome effect upon the producers of high grade pictures in this country. The American exporter who has high grade films to sell must meet this demand is to enlist the cooperation of the most successful writers of fiction that the country affords. This is precisely what we are doing for 1921, and the years to come. Stories of the highest type are now at our disposal and we have the directors, players and studio equipment needed to give them the finest possible interpretation.

Waste and Extravagance Out

The coming year is the opportunity for the motion picture industry to stabilize itself. There will be no room for waste and extravagance, but the men who actually know the public demand, can operate their business proportionate to circumstantial conditions, and can look forward to a prosperous year.

Sees No Cause for Alarm

While there is no doubt, but that conditions are not as they were six months ago, I do not believe there is any cause for alarm. It simply means a question of sitting tight, and keeping a level head until the storm blows over.

I do not believe business in the larger towns is going to suffer in any way, but undoubtedly in manufacturing centers and in towns of from $000 to $0,000 there is apt to be a slump for a short time. Amusement is as essential as medicine for the people’s welfare, and I do not think there is any cause for needless excitement at present. The main trouble at the present time is, in my opinion, over production, which means that a lot of new pictures are coming on the market, and producers of same are having trouble to find bookings. Producers who are manufacturing vehicles of merit have no cause for worry.

In the event that exhibitors find that their business cannot stand present prices of admission, or the prices they are paying for films, it will simply mean an adjustment all around, as I feel certain that business is getting on a basis of equality more and more each day.

JIMMY GRAINGER,

Need of Better Pictures

From a study of the vast audiences at the Capitol Theater, one of the significant signs in the industry to me is the continued education of the public in the niceties of production. Their appreciation of the technical merits of direction and the wonder of photography, shown both by audible comment and applause, speak volumes for the progress of the audiences in an understanding of the art. Their quickness to catch anomalies and their impatience over slips of direction and inadequate handling of stories is surprising. These signs point the way to producers who would keep pace with popular education. “Class” is the word with which the fans conjure; the producers have taught the word and must maintain its meaning. The public does not know that it is so much of “fewer and better” pictures. The better they are made, the more respects there will be and greater consequent profits on a picture to the producer.

MESSMORE KENDALL

Wm. A. Brady’s Views

I feel that the period of depression in our country has not passed and will not do so until international arrangements are made to stabilize foreign exchange so that all countries may do business together on an equitable basis. Over production will affect the entertainment business for some time to come and in the more expensive theaters there will have to be a reduction in prices. There are too many theaters building. Quality, however, will prevail no matter what may come. Good entertainment can never become a drug on the market.

WM. A. BRADY

A Year of Big Things

Irrespective of what the economic conditions of the past year have meant to business in general, the close of this year marks a new motion picture industry, as a whole, in a much healthier condition and on a much firmer basis than ever before in its history. Much has been accomplished in the course of the past 12 months and the situation at the moment points to big things accomplished in a big way in the future. The froth is off the brew and the substance remains and it is strong.

The exhibitors position is sound. He has raised his prices to meet general rising costs, but the general quality of his product has been so greatly improved that his prices may remain when men in other lines are forced to make reductions.

Merchants in staple lines of long development had reached the top notch in quality before they started to raise their prices in line with the general movement. Therefore the raise in price was a definite increase on a fixed value. The motion picture business on the other hand was in a state of development and the raise in price came with the improvement in quality. Since the quality is to remain, the higher price can remain without detriment or loss of patronage.

Surrounding the soundness of the real men and firms of this industry, we have had for years the wild-cat promoters and the shoe-string producers. Roosevelt said that every progressive movement had its “lunches fringes.” So, too, even the legitimate industry in the course of its development has its “lunches fringes.” One of the most significant happenings in the industry is the investigation conducted by the National Association into the numerous stock-selling schemes that have hampered the legitimate standing of legitimate concerns and the public branding of these fakers for just what they are. This is just one of the things indicating that we have strayed close to rock bottom in business methods in this business.

The motion picture industry has followed the course of all other industries of rapid and great development and has steadily tended towards centralization until today we are on the eve of complete accomplishment.

Local theater chains have steadily extended their scope until many of them are becoming almost nationwide. In distributing, those organizations of country-wide strength are really important. This all portends the accomplishment of big things in a big way, and it is a significant fact that the big men in the developing of this industry are today the leaders of the big combinations. This is another evidence of the manner in which we have followed the development of the steel industry, the automobile industry, and others of the same character.

Little need be said of the financial situation, of depression in the present or the future. Such trouble as the motion picture business has experienced has been local in its character and not national. We have felt the change of underlying conditions less than any other industry. Other lines are now on the up-grade, local troubles are clearing up, and the producer and exhibitor who plans on the basis of a prosperous year will be the gainer.

These facts represent the consensus of opinion of the leading exhibitors in various parts of the country who are members of The Associated Exhibitors.

PHIL L. RYAN.

Mastbaum Confident

I anticipate one of the best years in the theater. During the year now nearly at an end the Stanley Company did the biggest business in its history. The people must be amused and the motion picture is for everyone. That we are discounting any suggestion of curtailing either in production or operation, I think will be recognized when I say that we will shortly open the finest theater for the display of pictures—the new Stanley Theater at 19th and Market Streets, Philadelphia. The house will have an orchestra of 50 men and the total cost of the structure when completed will be $2,000,000. Records show that more and more people are turning to the cinema as the most satisfying form of entertainment extant. This increased patronage is genuinely convincing that the public is appreciative of the exhibitors’ fair dealing. It has been a splendid year both for the motion picture fans who have been given better and better pictures with still better to follow; the producer and the exhibitor. There is not a thing to cause dismay in the record of the past year and the new year promises so richly that we can look with confidence towards even greater prosperity.

JULES F. MASTBAUM,

Wishy-Washy Stuff Out

I believe the big thing that is going to face our industry the coming year is the class of productions that the producers are going to make—more so now than ever—because of the fact that our admission prices have increased the past two years to where they rightfully belong and now the public is going to demand real entertainment and will not be satisfied with any wishy-washy pictures.

It is, therefore, directly up to the producer to keep the motion picture industry on a high level and it is up to them to make the productions that will continue to interest the public.

Unless bigger and better pictures are made for the coming year by the producers, they are going to find themselves in a condition that might prove disastrous; for after all, if the exhibitor is not able to get his money at the box office, he in turn cannot pay to the producer and it is absolutely vital for the producer to make a class of productions so that the exhibitor can continue to get the present admission price and can in turn pay the proper rental for the film.

If the producers do not take the steps to make bigger and better pictures, they will find themselves receiving only a fraction in film rentals and then it will be impossible for them to make big productions to continue to attract the public to that the exhibitor can maintain the present price of admission.

FRANK L. NEWMAN.

Expects Longer Runs

I believe the New Year will see some marked changes in the producing game. Without a doubt, there will be fewer producing and distributing organizations, through-out the country, for the reason that features will be made, which will deserve extended showings.

In the past year, we have seen the inauguration of longer runs, in both the large and small towns, and without a doubt, this will even become more noticeable, in view of the fact that there will be so many super specials produced.

At the present time, the smaller towns are showing big features for longer runs than legitimate plays, and there is no reason why this condition should not prevail in the big key centers through-out the country.

A. H. BLANK.

Be Optimistic

I see no reason why there should be any apprehensions of any kind, if you regard only my personal view, and I feel that if those connected with our industry keep up an optimistic spirit it will aid greatly in making 1921 a prosperous year for us.

R. D. CRAVER.

Big Short Reel Business in Sight

Based on continuous increases in bookings and on a thorough survey of the whole country, I have no hesitancy in saying that the year 1921 will mark the greatest development that has ever been known in the short subject field. I make this statement in the face of the fact that 1920 saw the greatest strides ahead in film history, at least so far as Educational Films Corp. of America is concerned.

I base my prediction for the new year on the results that the past few months have shown. November showed an immense gain in bookings over October and already December has far passed November. On top of this we have just completed a minute survey of the country. We find that the total amount of exhibitor advertising of our pictures has been greater than that given before in film history to short subjects. We know that a great many of the theaters are now selling all of the elements of their program and that the bugaboo of more length is rapidly fading.

There will be during 1921 an increase in the bookings of short subjects that will approach the 100% mark. There will be more attention paid to advertising the short subjects and the comedies than ever before. And, even more important, exhibitors are going to be more persistent on the quality of the short subject pictures. The word "filler" to rapidly disappear from the exhibitor's vocabulary.

This means something to the industry. It means that the exhibitor has distinctly progressed, that he is no longer content with a rubber stamped brand, but that he means to see it that his patrons get the best in entertainment. There has been a lot of the "flunk" taken out of the admission pictures during the past year; still more it will go in 1921. This new year is going to be very prosperous one for the producer of good pictures. There is going to be a great pull for the exhibitors who arrive to supply the best the market affords. Certainly, so far as Educational Films Corporation is concerned, we expect 1921 to supply far the most notable twelve months we have known. That will be made possible because of the increase in exhibitor desire for better things and because of their realization that we have kept the faith with them.

E. W. HAMMONS, President,

Educational Films Corp. of America.

Longer Runs Coming

Prophecy is a dangerous thing, but I feel safe in saying that if the plan recently announced by Jesse L. Lasky is carried to fruition there will be some surprising changes in the motion picture world, not only in the production field, but in exhibition. The plan announced by Famous Players calls for what the exhibitor has been demanding for years, fewer and better pictures. It means concentration of effort, massing of stars in great plays and proper casting. If the direction turns out to be as good as the ideal owners and patrons will get a great deal more for their money than they have ever received before.

Of course, I am convinced that Famous Players will not long remain the sole occupants of the field. Mr. Lasky has chosen. If the success of the plan is as great as we all hope it will be, other producers will fall into line and the industry will be revolutionized. But it all depends on the direction taken.

From the exhibition point of view, I predict longer runs throughout the country as a result of the new policy. A longer run means a great deal to the exhibitor. It means a chance to profit from the exploitation; it means a chance to look at the picture in its entirety before it is put upon the screen; it means time to prepare a supplementary program in keeping with the feature film and an opportunity generally to create an attractive program.

HUGO RIESENFELD.

Good Pictures the Answer

Continued prosperity, and even greater advances for the motion picture industry in the coming year are clearly indicated by present conditions. Our business is one that will pass through readjustment; so we must keep up an optimistic spirit. It will aid greatly in making 1921 a prosperous year for us.

WIDE DAILY
JOHN M. STAHL
Wants B. O. Attractions

I can see nothing but prosperity for the motion picture industry in the year of 1921, providing the producers give the exhibitors proper support by making good productions.

Due to the great war and with the advent of prohibition, the American public have become educated in requiring entertainment as a part of their regular routine. They have discovered the motion picture theater provides relaxation, education and entertainment at a nominal admission price.

The exhibitors have stimulated the attendance by building better and more substantial theaters, thereby providing a better environment for larger productions. The issue is squarely up to the producer. If he does share his public he will keep on coming and despite the fact that 1920 has been the biggest year in our history, the new year will shatter all records. What we need are Box Office Attractions.

WILLIAM BRANDT, President, T. O. C. C.

Expects Foreign Invasion

The American industry in general is undergoing a commercial crisis, but in the film business the crisis is felt more acutely. This of course is the logical consequence of these last few years year surplus productions.

During this transitory period, which will permit reducing the present exorbitant general expenses, the programs for 1921 will methodically elaborate themselves with a new and intensive production in view.

The New Year will definitely consecrate the "Human Picture" which is so successful. We have to compliment ourselves with the success of these films which show us on the screen "the real, true life."

It is my belief that 1921 will see the American market invaded by foreign films, particularly productions of German origin.

It is also my opinion that 1921 will see the "Stars of the Cinematographic Firmament" turning pale. In the future the director, while giving his actors a good chance to make themselves conspicuous, will no more sacrifice his story to the exigencies of his stars. 1921 will definitely consecrate an "All Star Cast" interpretation.

Personally I believe in the success of big international features, which will be welcome on any screen in the world.

LEONCE PERRET.

Entering A New, Stable Era

It seems to me that we are settling down to the most important year's work in the record of picture-making. The threat of business depression has had a beneficial effect, I believe, in bringing about the concentration of talent, money and thought upon the perfection of a few productions instead of the haphazard diffusion over a wide number. This certainly seems to promise a raise of standard and a more intensive development of new and more artistic forms of screen entertainment. We also appear to be entering upon the new year with a clearer perspective as to true values, a better understanding of the collaboration necessary between players, directors, scenarioists and technicians.

The picture which will hold the greatest appeal next year, as in the years to come, is, I believe, the one representative of the greatest view of life,—the simple, human dramas as exemplified by "Way Down East," "Humoresque," "Over the Hill." The costume picture is bound to return to favor but it can return successfully only with the humanizing touch. The realism of character and life in "Passion" takes away the mustiness of years and makes the life of yesterday appear quite as real and human as that of today.

I feel safe in predicting that we will have some great photographs within the next year, for the entire industry seems to feel the necessity of a slower, more earnest effort than in the past. Directly after the war producers rushed into the field with as many pictures as possible in order to reap the profits of returned prosperity, hence there was an over-production and a lack of concentration apparent. We now appear to be entering upon a more progressive era in which fine things are bound to develop.

JEROME STORM.

Intensive Development and Extensive Expansion Expected

In an Industry that has fairly leaped into popularity in a few years, it is difficult to prognosticate even its immediate future. Whatever I may say on the possible trend of the motion picture business is based on my personal observation of events of the past year, and colored, doubtless, by my prejudices and my desires.

In the production of the photoplay itself, I believe we shall see an increasing attention paid to the details of every picture; an intensive ploughing of those fields of picture making that have been avoided or slighted in the past. In a broad way, producers have been content heretofore, if their pictures have been strong in action. Character drawing has been considered a secondary detail. But in several pictures that were produced in the past year I have observed sincere attempts to do on the screen what the novelist does with words; that is, to present such details of a character as will make a person an individual rather than a type. This has been accomplished in many ways, but usually through the introduction of fleeting flashbacks shown with unusual lighting effects and often thru the focus of the soft focus lens. There is no doubt in my mind that this close application of the production staff of the larger film companies to the nuances of photoplay making will result in the making of pictures that may knock unhesitatingly at the door of Art.

GABRIEL I. HESS, Goldwyn.

Most Auspicious

The coming year, I think, promises to be most auspicious. We say this every year, but the Motion Picture Business opens up such a wonderful fertile field for improvements. Every year the nature and character of pictures becomes better, and I think that these improvements will continue. It has been so often said in the past, but which can be repeated again very emphatically, "the picture business is still in its infancy," in so far as results are concerned.

J. E. BRULATOUR.

Immeasurable Good

Unquestionably prohibition has worked immeasurable good for the motion picture industry. The year 1920 will probably go down in history as the most prosperous in the motion picture business. A great measure of this prosperity must be attributed to the elimination of the saloon. A large per cent of the money spent in boozing emporiums is now finding its way at the box office of motion picture theaters, and it must be admitted that the world is a much better place to live in, because of it.

J. I. SCHNITZER.

Watch Your Step

In my humble opinion the picture business had better watch its step during the coming year. This is a business that cannot stand still; it must continually branch out in different directions and into different fields.

"I believe this year will see a great development in the so-called non-theatrical field. Pictures will be welcomed into the educational field and to some extent in churches and industrial plants. The foreign situation presents some very serious questions which must be intelligently met. Censorship will be at the high water mark between November, 1920, and June, 1921. We will be defeated in several states unless we get busy and equip ourselves to meet the situation. This cannot be done without a mutual understanding and a working arrangement with a national exhibitors' organization." "With the prohibition question out of the way, pictures will furnish the most fertile field for salaried reformers."

CHAS. C. PETTIJOHN, Selznick.

Time To Take Stock

The motion picture industry has grown to be so large, with such keen competition, that there is danger in producers allowing more business considerations and more box office appeals too greatly to absorb their attention.

The motion picture industry, being primarily a public service, must take very carefully into consideration its semi-public functions. Once the public begins to feel that it is being slighted or imposed upon or looked down upon by the industry, there will be a reaction that may spell serious loss.

It is time that the industry paused, looked around and began to face the facts of life, of the public, and of the public taste in motion pictures.

The public is in no mood to be trifled with. The motion picture has been taken to the heart of the public, and it has the right to expect the same treatment. Nothing less can the motion picture industry afford to give it.

In Wid's 1920 Year Book, I said, "It will be the greatest year for good pictures that the industry has ever known, and the toughest year for bad pictures." The Editor of Wid's now asks if in view of developments of the past few months I wish to change any of this statement.

I do not believe I care to make any corrections or qualifications to my former prediction. Reports are current of a depression in the industry, but I hear no reports of a falling off of attendance. One of the public has been up to the motion picture, and if the public is given pictures worthy of its patronage, that public will pay its money readily enough.

But more than ever I want to emphasize that the quality of production is the most vital essential. More than ever now, the success of a photoplay will depend upon its quality. We have a sophisticated picture public today that is very discerning and very quick to register its approval or disapproval.

We producers have to keep faith with the public. We must build up the quality of our productions. The success of exhibitors will depend upon the quality of the feature pictures, upon the entertaining well-rounded program, including the music, and the comfort and attractiveness of the theaters.

My heartiest Christmas greetings to the readers of Wid's.

J. STUART BLACKTON.

Sees Mighty Prosperous Year

As I thought were the prospects for 1921, they are very rosy. I know some are talking differently. I realize that conditions have changed somewhat in two months. But I have unbounded faith to-day in every legitimate and energetically prosecuted moving picture enterprise. No industry is in better shape than ours to put re- construction conditions. We did not flounder during the war; we bore up manfully under excessive taxation. Unless our taxes are increased and other conditions change materially, I predict a mighty prosperous 1921.

CARL LAEMMLE.

Expects Great Progress

Due to the fact that rumors of temporary depression in the film business would seemingly contradict my prophecy made in England some months ago for a successful year for the industry, I am in the position of the political prophet who on his return dates often had to begin his speeches with "Notwithstanding." So I am also going to preface with Notwithstanding— the rumored slump in the picture industry, which recurs with many alarming variations regularly every year at this season, I think that the figures presented by the executives of the various big companies show the slump, like the premature announcement of Mark Twain's death—largely exaggerated.

Since my prediction, such pictures as "The Miracle Man," "Humoresque," "Over the Hills," "Way Down East," "The Jacknife Man," "Madame X," "Something to Think About," "Earthbound," Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," "The Devil's Passkey," "The Wind," "The Door of No Return," "Kismet," "Midsummer Madness," and last, but not least, that immortal American classic, "The Last of the Mohicans," registering the beginning of a movement to bring the motion picture as a factor of education actually into the school room, and the addition to the ranks of film authors of such names as Sir James Barrie, Henry Arthur Jones, Edward Knoblock, Rudyard Kipling, H. G. Wells, and many other famous men of letters new to the screen, the best of my impressions of the last Summer in London that the present year would show a progress so marked as to vitally benefit both the Industry and the Public.

EVE UNSELL.

Reaction Will Be Welcomed

1921 is going to be a healthy year for the industry, because the standard of honest value has come back again. I am sure that all motion picture men of experience, producers, distributors and exhibitors welcome the reaction.

Prosperity in 1920 was so easy that it attracted to the industry many inexperienced men and also men who did not really have the welfare of the industry at heart. These men did the industry no good and now that the standards of quality are going to rule again, they will be the first to drop out. The industry as a whole will benefit thereby and the men who have done most to build it up, the men to whom it has always meant more than a temporary success, will prosper as a result.

From a personal angle, I expect 1921 to be the most productive year I have ever had.

CHARLES URBAN.

The Independent Field

I feel that if the Independent Distributors will be properly supported by Exchanges, there should be no reason why the Independent field as a whole will not stand a strong and formidable factor in the Industry.

My feelings are more optimistic for the forthcoming year, in view of the fact that fewer and better pictures are stabilizing the market, and in return the exhibitor is rewarding the Independents with a real and genuine support.

We must have this support and justify their confidence. Yours very truly.

VICTOR KREMER.

King's Wishes

I am going to England to bring back my family, to install them in a home here among the many new and splendid things I have been so fortunate as to make in New York, and in the country at large.

Through Wid's I may extend to the men and women in this great industry my best wishes for a Merry Christmas, a Happy New Year and a record-breaking twelvemonth for the motion picture business of America.

GEORGE KING,
President Stoll Film Corp. of America.

Optimistic

It is our sincere impression that the year 1921 holds forth great promise for the exhibitors of the Country. The present general business depression cannot last for long, and we believe this change for the better will be noted by exhibitors during the next sixty days.

Here in Canada we have every indication of an active year ahead. Our many natural resources are being developed and Western Canada is enjoying unusually good agricultural conditions, with a bumper crop already registered. We feel safe in predicting that the year 1921 will be a happy one for the motion picture exhibitors of this Country.

J. J. ALLEN.

Wants Simpler, More Human Pictures

The industry owes a debt of thanks to the producers who have dared to get out of the beaten path, and make "Over the Hill" and "Humoresque." They have shown the need of getting back to the simpler and more human in photoplay productions. I hope 1921 will see more pictures of this kind and fewer productions based on machine made plots and card indexed situations.

MAURICE TOURNEUR.

The Day of the Independent

This is the day of the independent and they should not fail to take advantage of their opportunities—producers, distributors and exhibitors alike.

There are many calamity howlers abroad, but I believe it to be a fact that there are but few theaters in this country that are not doing a profitable business.

The so-called "situation" which is now said to prevail, is distinctly mental—imaginary. What is needed is good, healthy optimism. "Boost and don't knock.

James Blinkov and Samuel Crystal, proprietors of the Temple and Strand motion picture theaters at Union Hill (N. J.) were summoned before Magistrate Hauenstein of the Union Hill police court on Monday, December 6, and held in $500 bail each to await the action of the grand jury on a charge of falsely advertising D. W. Griffith's production of "Way Down East."

The theater owners described a Thomas H. Ince picture called "Home-spun Folks" as being "A Story of 'WAY DOWN EAST,'" displaying the title of the Griffith picture in letters fifteen to twenty times as large as the name of the Ince picture actually being shown, and spreading the false advertising throughout the town of Union and neighboring sections in an effort to give the impression that "Way Down East" was being shown.

The court ordered that an officer be placed in the lobby of the theatre and announce to patrons that they were not to see "Way Down East." This was done throughout the engagement of three days.

Albert L. Grey, general manager for the Griffith interests, issued a statement in which he declared "any person or persons showing a motion picture and claiming it is in any way a story of, or sequel to 'Way Down East,' will be prosecuted to the fullest possible extent."

Mr. Grey further stated that, owing to cost, length of production and iron-bound contracts, "Way Down East" never would be shown except in first class theaters and at first class theater prices. In New York City, where the Griffith production has passed its two hundredth performance, the prices are $3 and $5 for the best seats. There are now twenty "road shows" of the Griffith picture, each playing to a scale of prices from 50 cents to $2.

Another Griffith production that is scoring a sensational success is "THE LOVE FLOWER," released through United Artists.

SEVEN "MUTUAL" PRODUCTIONS

"The power of true realism lies in picturing the known in such a manner as to obtain and hold interest during the story to be told, in bringing strong situations out of the easily-recognizable affairs of our everyday lives. Therein lies the prime merit of Beranger's work."

—LOUIS REEVES HARRISON.

"A MANHATTAN KNIGHT"

"You are surprised time and again throughout the run of the picture by the novel twists and the clever manner in which they have been handled. Director Beranger wastes no footage and makes every incident count. As this picture is treated with the utmost skill, it should afford real pleasure to all audiences. The most successful direction the star has had."—WID'S.

"UNCLE SAM OF FREEDOM RIDGE"

"The story breathes of a patriotism so pure and wholesome as to make all the other things of life seem of little consequence."

—WOODROW WILSON.

"Considering that this feature was made in two weeks, it is a remarkable piece of work, and speaks commendably of the ability of its director, George A. Beranger, who has given to the industry a production that will fit any program and help the exhibitor build a hundred per cent. American patronage."

"That Girl Montana"

From the novel
by MARAH ELLIS RYAN
Director - ROBERT THORNBY

She was all white, she was blonde, but she lived in the wig-wam of an Indian Chief—

A blonde Indian maiden would never do, so the Big Chief sent her back to the white people—

Then the action began, for that girl, Montana, was some girl. Oh! Man! But there is speed to spare in this picture

Blanche Sweet is shown at her virile best. She loves a Western picture as much as an exhibitor does and she made this one about the best she ever appeared in.
$110,000 Mark

"Passion" Business at Capitol Expected to Gross That

Although no official figures have been made public by either First National officials or the Capitol theatre, it is learned that "Passion," which completed a two weeks' run on Saturday night has done a total business of almost $100,000.

This figure represents net receipts and gives an indication of the tremendous business that the picture has done. The $110,000 mark is reached after war tax is deducted.

There is some talk that First National will keep the film on Broadway for a longer run. Nothing definite has been decided upon but it is known that all sorts of offers from theatrical men along Broadway have been made. It was the original intention of First National to secure a theater specially for the presentation on Broadway but the plan was abandoned temporarily, at least.

Happy New Year—

"The Devil" for Strand Showing

"The Devil" an Associated Exhibitors release starring George Arliss will be the feature at the Strand the week of Jan. 16. An extensive local advertising campaign will be launched at the same time in connection with the showing.

James Young directed the film which was made in the east. In it are Sylvia Breamer, Lucy Cotton, Edmund Lowe and Roland Bottomley.

Greed drags William Newlands to the depths and love bears him to the heights in J. Parker Read, Jr.'s third Associated Producers' production, "A Thousand to One," starring Hobart Bosworth.—Advt.

A Man vs. "The Bit"

You know all about "the bit." It's the "cut-in," the "divvy." The ten per center. It's to be regretted. But it plays an important part in many film transactions. Sometimes by the end of the divvy of "the bit," what looked to be a decent profit has shrunk to nothing. Or nearly so.

Now what follows isn't a fairy tale. It happened. Strange as it may seem. With David Howells and First National. Howells saw "Passion" in Berlin and took a long chance. Bought it. Then turned it over to First National. At the same price. But before that had a big job. To convince them it was "right." By letter. And cable. Finally did. Anticipated that "Passion" will clean up a million or so for the organization.

What was Howell's bit? Nary a tin dime. Wants nothing. Expects nothing. Says it was his job. Because he's doing all foreign business for them. What I call—a man.

SAGE OBSERVATION

Howells returned from a long European stay Wednesday last. Gave a great slant on why he believed "Passion" was important. Outside of its exhibition value. This. That is shown

Buys Irish Films

(Special to WIDE DAILY)

Chicago—The American Film Co. has just taken over the Chicago Tribune's pictures, "Ireland in Revolt," filmed by Capt. E. F. Weigle, Tribune war photographer, for sale on the state rights basis.

Weigle spent several months in various Irish cities, including Cork, Dublin, Belfast, Trim, Galway, Lisbon and Mallow, and secured in some cases, in the face of machine guns, what are said to be the first complete facts of the Irish revolution—scenes of raids, riots, reprisals, Sinn Feiners, Black and Tans, and British soldiers.
Midland Buys Schwab Prod.

Joseph Klein, on his way back from New York after a trip through the Middle West, made a detour from Kansas City to Minneapolis and closed negotiations for the D. B. Schwab Prod. with the Midland Film Corp., for "Girls Don't Gamble," an "Smiling All the Way" for Minnesota, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhib­i­tion put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Wichita, Kan.—Watch your step when "Her Husband’s Friend" comes around, because John P. Goring, exploitation representative at the Kan­sas City Exchange of Famous Play­ers has an idea that the picture can draw odd dimes from dark and se­creted corners of a fan’s pockets.

When the picture played the Pal­ace here Goring designed some heart­shaped teaser advertisements. They were printed in black on a red back­ground and warned Wichita’s popu­lation to “Watch out for ‘Her Husband’s Friend.’”

Five thousand of the heart-shaped designs were distributed.

The front of the novelty adver­tised the title under the caption “Love vs. Alimony,” and the connection was one that was readily grasped and aroused immediate interest.

The back of the advertising novelty bore the name of the theater and the time of the showing. Goring had warned the people to "Watch out for the picture. They did!"

Happy New Year

Venice, Cal.—Two pretty girls wearing tight fitting white overalls and jumpers, one leading a balking donkey, the other a goat, made the first exploit stunt attempted by Carl Marquard of the California. It was in connection with Charles Ray’s "Peaceful Valley," and the results have made Marquard feel that every picture will in the future be exploited, because of the added success that he is convinced exploitation will bring any picture.

You’ll Have to Laugh at

HARLEY MYERS as "SIR BOSS" in MARK TWAIN’S

“An Connecticut Yankee” SOON
A Man vs. "The Bit"

American producers that the foreigners weren’t all wrong in making the kind of stuff that draws. That it might be a lesson for some. Real thought. Who’ll sit up and pay heed?

“Every American representative that saw ‘Passion,’ said it wouldn’t do for this country,” said Howlander. Wonder who they were? Wonder what their bosses think of ‘em now? No. It can’t be printed. Postoffice wouldn’t let this go through the mail.

THE APPRENTICE ARRIVES

Put this name down. Hugh C. Dierker. Producer. You’ll hear of him further. He made “When Dawn Came.” Just released. States rights. Dierker was a lawyer. In a tiny town in Missouri. Father a judge. Wife a writer. She sent the script of his production to several companies. They couldn’t see it. Dierker believed in it. “We’ll make it,” he said. Packed up his law books. Journeyed to Hollywood. Got a job. With Brunton. As a grip hand. Wanted to learn the business. From the ground up. Spent six or seven months with Bob. Kept his eyes open. Quit when he was given a managership. Went over to Sanborn’s laboratory. Gob a job in the shipping department. Learned the lab end of production. Six months there. Quit when he was made an assistant manager. Had a year of watching. Was ready. Got his cast together. And his director. And Billy Foster to shoot it. Made a deal with the Handschiegel process. And then unrolled the roll. It went. And “When Dawn Came” followed. Not a masterpiece. Not a great big picture. Needs fixing. Cutting. But shows promise. Real promise. There’s a moral in this.

GELT—OTHERWISE MONEY

Tight. Worse than that. Producer talking last week. Ready to go ahead. Needed money. “What’s that?” asked the man with a pencil putting down his fork. “Something we got awhile ago hocking our shirt, now an unknown commodity,” came the reply. Try and get it. For production. All the angels are on the Crismus cards. Bankers don’t want promises. Collateral only thing that talks. Latest to be affected “Bill” Sherrill. Needs about fifty thou to finish the first Lillian Gish picture. Jammed. That is he was when this was written. Griff may have to complete it. ’Suff luck.

GET BEHIND HOOVER DAY

All of you. Throw out the bird who lags. It means something. Give of your time. Your house. Your show. Push it over. Why? Because it’s important. Show that crew of Blue Law nuts what the industry can do. If this business can be organized in a day or so to raise a couple of millions what can it do to smash something? You don’t need a ton of bricks to fall on a smart man to wake him up. Maybe Wilbur will understand something when Hoover Day goes over in the pictures. Maybe he won’t. But this business. You do your bit. Old play. "The Boss." Great line in it. Politician starts to lick another. “If you’re alive when I drop something on you he said, “I’m coming around to see what’s holding you up.”

If you’re not too full of Crismus food you’ll get this. So will Crafts.

CARDS AND SENDERS

Xmas cards. Flock of ’em. Thanks. To everybody. Can’t answer all. But again thanks. Ever figure how Xmas cards reflect individualities? See delicate, sweet Hope Hampton’s card. As against the bold black typed one from Arthur James. Jim Quirk and his missus, quiet, refined, and the fine lemon-tinted card bearing Norbert Lusk’s name. Choe Lee sends one written in his honest blacksmithesmit, and W. A. Johnson is like J. D. Williams in their ideas of what’s what. And so it goes. Only one puzzle. Who’s Grace?

SEASON OF BROTHERLY LOVE

Blessed days, these. Forgive your enemies. And all that sort of thing. Just to prove it. Look at Al Black’s wallop on Sydney Cohen? Sure it’s Xmas time.

DANNY.

"Fewer and Better"—Again
(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production at Goldwyn's Calver City studios, says in the nature of a New Year's statement: "In the new year we shall bend all our efforts to the making of photographs with strong, human, appealing stories, acted by well-rounded casts of competent players. Our goal will be fewer and better pictures. We are determined that the public wants logical, sensible plots that appeal to intelligent people.

The success of our recent releases shows us that we are on the right track and we intend to stay there. We have merely been borrowing dramatic pages from life itself."

Just Like Him

This card was sent out to the entire industry:

"I certainly would not go to the trouble of having this printed, addressed and mailed if I didn't really wish you Merry Christmas with all my heart."

There is only one man who would send out a card like this—Harry Reichenbach.

Praise for Paramount Advertising

The high regard in which the national advertising campaign of Paramount Pictures is held among the general advertising fraternity is attested by an article in "To the Advertising Agency," the house organ published by the Etherege Co. of New York and Chicago, which says, in a column headed "Why They're Good—Comments on Things We Didn't Do That Are Mighty Good Nevertheless":

"Paramount Pictures: Because this account has swung wide from the conventional convention picture doped and merchandised the idea of the Silver Screen, in a thoroughly business-like way. Because the copy describes your thoughts and your thoughts, in this matter of pictures and because specific selling reasons are given for the Paramount line of goods. Because artists paint illustrations that keep right on selling the idea of supremacy of a branded line of motion pictures rather than some little lady with sausage curls and a kiss-me quick moutch. Because Paramount advertising is characteristic ally its own, and seems to find no need to strut about in borrowed plumage."

A 100 Per Cent Picture;
In a Class by Itself

That's What Variety Says of “Passion,” the Picture Which Broke the World’s Record for Attendance at the Capitol Theatre, New York

“This is 100 per cent good market stuff. It presents the beautiful, accomplished Pola Negri and a really distinguished cast. It jammed the Capitol Theatre for two weeks and drew long and hearty applause. It smashes through to the final scene with a sharp eye for pictorial and dramatic values. It should clear a fortune for the First National franchise holders, but more important is the fact that this magnificent picture is pre-eminently a thing that stands alone.”—Variety.

19 AND PHYLLIS

“The very essence of the jubilant. It has quick, pulsing romance and comedy, and Charles Ray plays with his usual sure poise. Few things are funnier.”—New York Herald.

THE DEVIL’S GARDEN

“Score another for Lionel Barrymore and make it an especially big one. By dint of the Barrymore genius, of honest, inspired acting, he makes this picture a big thing. Lionel Barrymore reaches right out of from the screen and takes your mind right out of yourself and goes around on the silver sheet with it in his pocket.”— Chicago Herald Examiner.

THE BRANDED WOMAN

“Norma Talmadge is a rarely gifted screen actress and in this picture registers with great expressiveness.”—Los Angeles Times.

HARRIET AND THE PIPER

“Kathleen Norris, author of this cinema adaptation, has the knack of holding her public with her stories. The picture is pleasingly staged and photographed and you will like Miss Anita Stewart.”

Will Cut Deposits

To W. A. Steffes Jr., Speaking of Joint Meeting—Agreement Not Signed

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Minneapolis—W. A. Steffes, president of the United Theatrical Protective League states in the current issue of Greater Amusements that 90 per cent. of the producers have agreed to eliminate advance deposits and that a uniform contract for exhibitors has been agreed upon as a result of the recent meeting of the M. P. T. O. and N. A. M. P. L., in New York. The interview in the Greater Amusements attributes the following statements to Steffes:

"Another step of great moment to the exhibitor is the plan to eliminate advance deposits. This has been agreed to by practically 90 per cent of the producers, upon assurance that their members will strictly abide by the rulings.

"The plan calls for the adoption of a credit bureau composed of an equal number of the owners and distributors' representatives. To this bureau each member of the U. P. T. O., because of the affiliations of that organization, can apply and receive credit."

Eighth and Final Week

"Way Down East" rounds out its eighth and final week at the Shubert Crescent in Brooklyn on Saturday. The Griffith offices originally planned to keep the production there for four weeks, but an extension of three additional weeks was secured from the Shubert offices and the run was finally an eighth week. After its Brooklyn showing, the company becomes a road show. It will play in towns throughout Pennsylvania and finally end up in Cleveland.

Dinner Planned

The A. M. P. A. will give their annual gridiron dinner the latter part of February at the Biltmore. This function is patterned after the famous gridiron dinner of the Press Club of Washington, which is attended each year by the president, senators and congressmen. Only a limited number of tickets have been issued for the dinner. It will be attended by many of the big men in the industry. While tickets were distributed to the members at their last weekly meeting they are already practically unprocureable.

Newark, N. J.—Joseph Stern will build a $400,000 theater in Roseville, a suburb of Newark.

Merger a Fact

U. F. A. and Decla Bioscop One, Says Auerbach—Blumenthal Signs Lubitsch

The U. F. A. and the Decla Bioscop, two of the most powerful film organizations in Europe, have combined, according to information received by Louis Auerbach of the Export and Import Film Co., Inc., of which Ben Blumenthal is president.

In a Berlin dispatch published in WID'S DAILY on Dec. 20, it was intimated that the merger was under consideration and that the Nordisk Film Co. of Copenhagen, a company capitalized at 8,000,000 kronen, would probably be included in the move.

U. F. A. and the Decla Bioscop are the largest organizations in Germany and their merger is looked upon in Berlin as meaning the creation of the largest and most important film company in Continental Europe.

Mr. Auerbach stated yesterday that in addition to the deal recently closed by Blumenthal in Berlin for the distributing rights to the U. F. A. product, as noted, for all English-speaking countries, the latter has also secured the Decla Bioscop product. In addition he has placed under contract for a term of years Ernest Lubitsch, who directed "Passion." He has therefore signed Pola Negri and her director and the inference is that the team will work together on future pictures.

Blumenthal is expected back in New York about Jan. 10. With him will come Samuel Rachman, who is said to be the representative of extensive German film and theatrical interests.

Blackton Co. Dissolves

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Albany—The J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures of Manhattan have filed notice of dissolution with the Secretary of State.
At Broadway Theaters

Rialto

A large proportion of the audience at Broadway picture houses this week consisted of children, and so Hugo Riesenfeld has prepared the Christmas Eve vaudeville prologue, "Christmas Eve in a Toy Shop," which contains a number of stunts, including a dancing doll and Santa Claus, while two large Christmas trees all decorated and bearing numerous colored electric lights are part of the decorations.

Rivoli

The program includes "Jolly Robbers" and then comes a Saut and Jeff cartoon which is probably the best yet. Max Maneu, gymnast of the Rivoli orchestra provides the proper effect. After the Fictorial Carl Rulilian and chorus song, "In a Tavern," a Christmas fantasy is also a pleasing holiday number. Wallace Reid is seen in "The Charm School." There is a chorus comedy "One Best Friend," and the organ solo.

Capitol

S. L. Richaud has arranged a special program for the holiday week at the Capitol. The program consists of a Christmas fantasy during the playing of which the Russian Cathedral Choir renders selections assisting Bertram A. Shimer in the conducting. The program also consists of the various Christmas carols. The next number is "Chimmy's production featuring Madge Evans. It is the story of Helidi by Johanna Spyri and is the first production of anything else to be done in color. Madge Evans also appears in person. The Capitol News comments that "Mrs. Columbia's production, "The Girl with the Jazz Heart" starring Myrna Loy, is married to another comedian. An original prelude is presented by Mlle. Gumbarelli and the Capitol Ball Club assisted by a jazz band.

Strand

The Strand also has turned its attention of the Christmas spirit and like the other Broadway houses has its Christmas production with electric lights, holiday music, etc. The program is "Violet," with costumes which are suited to the effect. The Strand Topical Review, Charles Ray in "Nineteen and Phyllis," and the Paul Tarkington comedy "Edgar's Little Saws" are the pictures on the program. There is a first-class scenic of the Alps, "Lost--A Yedel." It's a Chester O'ing picture. The management of the Strand also takes pleasure in presenting,"--"Lulliette Pollock's Christmas Day." It is a very well done and certainly pleased with. Redeline Hollingshed sings, "For You Alone." The organ solo is handed "Hallelujah Chorus.

New Hampshire Demands Reduction

Boston--Condemning "efforts being made to increase film rentals in the face of serious business depression," the M. P. T. O. of New Hampshire in convention here demanded that a reduction of prices to more truly meet the changed conditions be made in order that the business may be sooner established on a staple basis." Other matters discussed were the advance deposit question and uniform contracts.

Two Wisconsin Cities Ban Serials

Milwaukee--City officials of Eau Claire and Superior have placed a ban on the exhibition of serials. Provision is made in the resolution adopted by the city council for censorship, the law requiring exhibitors to "eliminate from all pictures exhibited all scenes of crime and violence and to the greatest possible extent." The law is effective Jan. 1. The action follows a petition presented by the parents and teachers' association.

Certain self-appointed individuals and interests at Washington are threatening the existence of, the future, and the stability of the entire motion picture industry by means of legislation to establish what is known as

"BLUE SUNDAY"

To prove that the American people have no desire to eliminate happiness and legitimate recreation for the one day in seven which is devoted to rest and peace — that the American people have no desire to enter either a mental, spiritual or physical slavery at any man's dictation — we must submit at once a written protest of American citizens who will demand that they be not denied the privileges of the free air of God on the golf course; neither will they be denied the Sunday newspapers and magazines on their own veranda — nor shall any legislation be enacted which will deny them the privilege of silently witnessing a screen production of the master authors or artists of the world.

Regarding the uniform contracts Steffes is quoted as saying:
"Under the proposed plan no contracts accepted by the New York offices unless it contains a clause on protection and run, and truly states whether the picture or pictures contracted for are reissues, and has a uniform cancellation clause. A copy of the contract must be left with the exhibitor when he signs it.
"A time limit will also be placed on the acceptance of contracts. All signed contracts must be returned to the exhibitor within 15 days for the dates located west of the river. If these contracts are not returned within the specified time, they become null and void. Minneapolis, I understand, has been placed within the 15 day limit division.
"In the event of any breach of contract by the exchange or any picture company, the exhibitor has the optional privilege of cancelling the entire series.
"In cases where the exhibitor, through the fault of the exchange, is prevented from showing a picture, damages constituting the amount of the rental price, and if it be on a Saturday, Sunday or holiday, double the amount of the rental price, shall be paid to the exhibitor by the exchange, according to the terms of the proposed ruling."

At another point he says:
"Perfections have been completed for a plan by which members can buy paper and other accessories at cost. These will be distributed by the organizational direct, and result in enormous savings to exhibitors who are members of the organization. Non-members will purchase supplies from us, if they will have to pay present rates for these commodities."

—Happy New Year—

Efforts made to confirm the Steffes interview yesterday brought forth the fact that no agreement has been signed between the M. P. T. O. and N. A. M. P. J. committees. It was learned yesterday that a tentative agreement embodying the points Steffes makes has been drawn.

Steffes is chairman of the M. P. T. O. branch of the committee on business relations which was appointed at the Clарidge meeting recently.

Wants Pathe to Eliminate Scenes of Recent Parade—No Comment Forthcoming

Dr. H. L. Bowly, secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance, has written a letter to Paul Brunet of Pathe in which he demands that the scenes incorporated in Pathe News depicting the punishment which would be meted out to violators of the proposed blue laws be eliminated. The scenes were shot at the time the International Sporting Clubs sponsored a parade of floats in opposition to the blue law campaign. They were incorporated in Pathe News 101, released on Dec. 18.

Until late yesterday afternoon, the Pathe offices had not received the letter which Dr. Bowly, it seems, first sent to the various news associations around town. No comment was made at the Pathe offices on the letter which is as follows:

"You may think to shield yourself behind the pretense that your representative simply reported what his camera found in the street. Unless you are pitfalls uninforming or misinformed you must know that the floats photographed by you represent not the truth but the slanderous misrepresentations of a discredited...

Ignored

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Toronto—Film men throughout the province are very much interested in the fact that not one man representing the industry has been selected for the new Provincial Censor Board. This, despite the fact the film exchanges nominated three candidates for places on the board.

The Social Service Commission, which was formed about four months ago and which wields considerable influence with the provincial government, is generally credited with having won a victory. A general tightening of regulations is expected from the new board which has a membership of five instead of three as before.

An added feature to the all Irish programme arranged will be the presentation of another film, "Ireland Today," depicting scenes of Erin as it is at the present time.

Being Arranged for Hoover Relief Fund—Children's Matinee One Feature

The motion picture committee which has in charge the work of raising $2,500,000 which the industry has pledged toward the Hoover relief fund for Central Europe is planning a number of special stunts. As noted, Jan. 26 will be National Hoover Day, and an effort will be made to secure the greater part of the sum on that day.

On the morning of Jan. 29 it is planned to have picture theaters, wherever feasible, give a special performance for children, tickets for which will be sold in advance by representatives of the European Relief Council. These early morning shows for children are expected to produce a large revenue for the fund. A plan is in consideration whereby the film companies will furnish gratis to the exhibitors suitable films for children. It is anticipated that many wealthy citizens will purchase over the right the entire seating capacity of certain theaters and will then donate the tickets.

Why He Cancelled

Wid's, Daily, Watkins, N. Y.

New York City:
Please send me your bill to date and discontinue Wid's. I have lost faith in your judgment of pictures. I bought "Pinto" after your saying it was a fine comedy. The people called it silly and they were right. Then you said "put me down on record" that "The Miracle Man" was a great picture. It fell flat in all towns and we lost money. Then you said "Scratch My Back" was a scam. I watched the picture and never a laugh was heard in the house for a half hour. And last but not least I bought "Blind Husbands" on your statement of its being good. It was terrible—awful—and I cannot say enough. The crowd almost mobbed me as I charged them 28c. As I said before, I have certainly lost all faith in your judgment of pictures.

Yours truly,

GEO. C. STARKEY.
Happy New Year.

This letter was originally published Dec. 6.

Why I Didn't Cancel

Killdeer, North Dakota.

Wid's, Daily, New York City :
Please NEVER discontinue WIDS. I have increased my faith in your good judgment of pictures. You are my barometer, so to speak. When "Pinto" after you said it was a good comedy; it was all that of and more.

I booked "The Miracle Man" after you claimed it a "sensation" and my patrons are still talking about how wonderful a picture it proved to be.

Then you said "Scratch My Back" was a scream and your keen sense of comedy was worth comedy.

You said "Blind Husbands" was good, produced by a combining master director, and every other critic has backed you up as has the public. It's a 50c picture anywhere and a draw card.

As I said before, I have increased my faith in your worthwhile judgment of pictures from every angle and trust it will ever continue thus. Success to you.

Very truly yours,
H. E. ELLSWORTH.
Secretary, Killdeer Amusement Co., Inc.

Bowly Protests

rejoiced; you must know that there never were blue laws carrying the frivolous penalties depicted.

"But the truth is that the picture which you are giving to the public is not precisely as it came from the street. You have added your own comment to the effect that these floats represented the punishment that offenders might suffer should the Lord's Day Alliance succeed in its campaign.

"This is as vicious as it is utterly and maliciously false. We direct your attention to section 1340 of our penal law, which says: 'A malicious publication, by writing, printing, picture, * * * which exposes * * * or which causes, or tends to cause any person to be shunned, or which has a tendency to injure any person, corporation or association of persons in his or their business or occupation is a libel.' We assume that you will be advised by this provision of law, and, appreciating the measure of your offense, we demand the withdrawal of this picture from public exhibition, reserving all rights of action.

Special Stunts

As an incentive to theater owners and managers, the committee is considering the advisability of offering prizes for the theaters which turn in the largest amount of money to the fund in proportion to their seating capacity.

Hoober has also offered to place upon the honor roll of the European Relief Council the name of every theater which actively participates in the raising of funds. Honor roll certificates will be issued and forwarded to all such theaters.

A novelty idea in the drive will be the sale of "Hoober Dolls" at theaters. The plan was suggested by a group of local theater owners who intend purchasing rag dolls and selling them to their patrons on Motion Picture Day—Jan. 26th. The price upon each doll's head will be $10 and represents the cost of feeding one child a meal a day until harvest time next year.

Every Box Sold
1500 Expected to Attend Theater Owners' Ball at the Astor on Wednesday

Every box contained in the grand ball room of the Hotel Astor has been disposed of for the Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce ball and festival which takes place next Wednesday night. The last box was disposed of yesterday Joseph M. Schenck and will be occupied by Mr. Schenck, Constance and Constance Tal- madge and their friends.

In addition to the ball, festival and dinner and the big vaudeville entertain- ment arranged by R. S. Motz and his committee, there will be a mid- way pleasant on which a number of small attractions will be offered, similar to an amusement street at a country fair.

The committee has limited the number of tickets to 1500 and a two-thirds of these have already been disposed of. When the limit is reached 1500 people have entered the ball room, the doors will be closed, and it is a safe presumption that a great many people will be dis- appointed unless tickets are procured well in advance.

Supper will be served from 11 to 2 in all of the dining rooms, on the ground floor of the Astor. Vaudeville will begin at 9:30 and continue until 11 o'clock.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Milwaukee—E. J. Weisfeldt, manager of the New Strand, arranged a prologue for “Dirty” that proved an exceptional exploitation stunt. He advertised in the paper for a freckled faced boy that looked like Wesley Barry, and also for a little chink and a “Sammy.” The applicants were so numerous that he held a special show for the boys Thanksgiving morning where those to take part were selected. In the prologue the curtain rose on a gang of newsies seated on a wall, some shooting craps, some talking, one playing a harmonica. “Dirty” portrayed by one youngster, sang a new-sie song, and “Sammy” shook a dusty shoulder. A scene from the picture, and songs and yodeling by other newsies completed the prologue.

Happy New Year—

Fire in Indianapolis.
The First National offices received a wire from Indianapolis yesterday telling of a fire in the offices of the Robert Lieber Co. The wire stated that quarters had been lost but not completely but that no films had been destroyed. A quantity of posters was lost, however. The Robert Lieber Co. is the Indiana exchange for First National and from the text of the wire it was not known yesterday whether the exchange was burnt out or just part of the offices devoted to the storage of posters.

Arthur Jacobs, manager for Sylvia Bremer phoned Wid’s Daily yesterday that the report in Thursday’s issue relative to Miss Bremer signing with Rubayat Press and Pub. Co. as a featured player for a year was not correct. He said Miss Bremer would work for the concern, but had other engagements which would probably keep her on the Coast all winter.

Happy New Year—

Irving M. Lesser, of Western Pictures Exploitation Co., who is now in New York, states that “The Taradad,” a production from the Romeyn Super Film Co., is not distributed in California, Nevada and Arizona by the All Star Features Distributors, but by the Clune Film Exchange of Los Angeles.

AT HIS BEST

“Charles Ray is excellent and at his best in this picture. The quick, pulsing Romance is worthy of being spoiled with a capital R. The public likes him ‘as is.’”—New York Telegram.

A REMARKABLE PICTURE

“Charles Ray is natural and lovable. It is good fun and it doesn’t lag at all. The picture is remarkably well acted and directed and the titles are good.”—New York Tribune.

GAY AND BREEZY

“A gay and breezy romance.”—New York American.

A JOY TO WATCH

“It abounds in moonlit, rural romance and sprightly jokes. Charles Ray can always put humor and appeal in a picture. He is a joy to watch. Most amusing touches.”—New York Globe.

SPECTATORS HAPPY

CHARMING ROMANCE

“A charming boy and girl romance of the type in which Charles Ray excels. The audience appreciated it thoroughly.”—Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

“The picture radiates joy. You are going to enjoy this picture.”—New York Mail.
Deal On?

Thomas H. Ince stated that the report was a "rumor, and that nothing positive had been done."

He agreed with the statement made by Mr. Parent, that the proposition had been discussed, but that nothing definite had been decided upon.

After many efforts were made to locate Mack Sennett, the latter's representative was reached. This man stated that he was sure Sennett would not have any agreement to make and referred all queries to Fairbanks.

Blushing George

Universal's dinner to Arthur Clozengers at the Waldorf Wednesday night resulted in a blushing feast for George Kann, in charge of Universals' export department. George "did it." He arranged the contract with Clozengers for the Universal product for Great Britain to go through the Film Booking Co. So when he told of the arrangement of the deal he blushed just like a schoolboy. He was one of the many happy Universalites present. But how he did blush.

Carl Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane "Mannie" Goldstein, all made addresses as did Clozengers, who offered a trip to England with all expenses paid for anyone Universal wanted to send across the pond next August. The winner of the salesmen's contest will take the trip.

Goldstein gave some interesting figures regarding Universal's business. He said Universal's exchanges were 44 managers, 300 salesmen and 1,200 clerks; 150 motors and trucks and that the distribution department payroll was $135,000 a week. He also said that the "lab" in New Jersey turned out from 2 to 2 1/2 million feet of film a week employing 450 to 500 regularly. These figures had nothing whatsoever to do with the production part of the organization in Universal City.

Mason Leaves Trade Review

The following statement was issued yesterday by Lesley Mason, in announcing his retirement as editor of the Exhibitor's Trade Review:

"In retiring from the editorship of Exhibitor's Trade Review and as a member of the company, I want to take this opportunity of thanking the officials of every concern in the industry, the members of the National Association and the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America and the rest of the exhibitors of the United States, for their friendly and generous cooperation. Without this I could have been impossible, so as I am concerned, to make Exhibitor's Trade Review the publication it is today.

"I have always regarded and shall always regard Exhibitor's Trade Review as one of the foremost journals in this industry, and I am proud to have played a part in bringing it to its present strength. My best wishes are with the publication always and I am certain of its success and permanency."
